Subject: AB 1971 (Santiago), as amended April 12, 2018– Fiscal Impact Statement

Dear Assembly Member Gonzalez-Fletcher:

AB 1971, as amended April 12, 2018, modifies the definition of "gravely disabled" which is used to assess if a person suffering from a mental health disorder should be taken into custody for treatment. Among other things, this bill expands the definition of gravely disabled to include a person's inability to provide for their basic personal medical treatment needs if their failure to obtain medical treatment results in a deteriorating physical condition.

Fiscal Impacts

We anticipate this bill would have workload costs for courts that range between $1.3 million and $5.6 million. The primary cost driver for this bill is its expansion of the existing definition of gravely disabled, which could lead to an increase in involuntary detentions and conservatorships allowed under the state's existing mental health civil commitment system, typically referred to as the Lanterman-Petris-Short (LPS) Act. Comprehensive data on the population this bill intends to address is incomplete. We utilized data by the Department of Health Care Services, which summarize the number and types of LPS involuntary detentions and temporary and "permanent"

(or 1-year) conservatorship cases that occurred in fiscal year 2015-16.¹ Based on a review of this data, it is reasonable to assume that this bill could lead to an increase in LPS involuntary detentions and conservatorships of between 5% and 15% above what courts currently process. This would equate to a statewide increase of approximately 300 to 1,000 LPS conservatorship case filings.² The increase in additional LPS conservatorship case filings would carry costs of approximately $828,000 to $4.2 million to support court workload to handle these additional cases.

We do not have statewide data on the number of LPS involuntary detentions that courts currently hear.³ However, we were able to obtain data on the number of LPS 14-day and 30-day certification review hearings that the Los Angeles Superior Court conducted in fiscal year 2015-16.⁴ Using this data, a 5% to 15% increase would add between 1,200 and 3,600 additional 14-day certification review hearings and between 120 to 370 additional 30-day certification reviews hearings to this court’s existing workload. The increase in additional LPS certification review hearings would carry workload costs for the Los Angeles Superior Court of approximately $424,000 to $1.3 million for 14-day certification reviews and approximately $44,000 to $130,000 for 30-day certification reviews. To the extent that other courts are responsible for conducting these certification review hearings, the costs could be significantly higher.

Subject: AB 1971 (Santiago), as amended July 3, 2018 – Fiscal Impact Statement

Dear Senator Portantino:

AB 1971, as amended July 3, 2018, modifies the definition of "gravely disabled" which is used to assess if a person suffering from a mental health disorder should be taken into custody for treatment in Los Angeles County. Among other things, this bill expands the definition of gravely disabled in Los Angeles County to include a person's inability to provide for their basic personal medical treatment needs if their failure to obtain medical treatment results in a deteriorating physical condition.

Fiscal Impacts

We anticipate this bill would have workload costs for the Los Angeles Superior Court that range between $560,000 and $1.9 million. The primary cost driver for this bill is its expansion of the existing definition of gravely disabled, which could lead to an increase in involuntary detentions and conservatorships filed with the Los Angeles Superior Court under the state's existing mental health civil commitment system, typically referred to as the Lanterman-Petris-Short (LPS) Act. Comprehensive data on the population this bill intends to address is incomplete. We utilized data by the Department of Health Care Services (Health Care Services), which summarize the number and types of LPS involuntary detentions that occurred in Los Angeles County in fiscal year 2015-16.¹ Additionally, we used data provided by the Los Angeles Superior Court indicating the number of conservatorship cases that were filed with the court in fiscal year 2016-17.² Based on a review of this data, it is reasonable to assume that this bill could lead to an increase in LPS involuntary detentions and conservatorships of between 5% and 15% above what the court currently process.³ This would equate to an increase of approximately 40 to 110 LPS conservatorship case filings in Los Angeles County.⁴ The increase in additional LPS conservatorship case filings would carry costs of approximately $93,000 to $465,000 to support court workload to handle these additional cases.

We analyzed data provided by Health Care Services on the number of LPS 14-day and 30-day certification review hearings that the Los Angeles Superior Court conducted in fiscal year 2015-16.⁵ Using this data, a 5% to 15% increase would add between 1,200 and 3,600 additional 14-day certification review hearings and between 120 to 370 additional 30-day certification reviews hearings to this court’s existing workload. The increase in additional LPS certification
