(Super.Ct.No. CIVSB2025319)

OPINION

APPEAL from the Superior Court of San Bernardino County. Donald R. Alvarez, Judge. Reversed and remanded with directions.

The Red Brennan Group and Aaron D. Burden; Briggs Law Corporation and Cory J. Briggs for Intervener and Appellant.

The Sutton Law Firm, Bradley W. Hertz, and Nicholas L. Sanders for Plaintiff and Appellant.

* Pursuant to California Rules of Court, rules 8.1105(b) and 8.1110, this opinion is certified for publication with the exceptions of part II, VI, and VIII.

Jolena E. Grider, Deputy County Counsel, for Defendant and Respondent.

Jonathan M. Coupal, Timothy A. Bittle, and Laura E. Dougherty for Amicus Curiae Howard Jarvis Taxpayers Foundation.

Jennifer B. Henning for Amicus Curiae California State Association of Counties.

The facts are simple. The legal issues are not.

On November 3, 2020, the voters of San Bernardino County passed Measure K. It amended the county charter so as to (1) limit a supervisor to a single four-year term and (2) limit a supervisor's compensation to $5,000 a month. At the same time, the voters also elected three new supervisors.

The trial court ruled that the one-term limit is unconstitutional. It also ruled that the compensation limit is constitutional, but, because Measure K is not severable, it, too, must be struck down. Finally, it ruled that Measure K did not apply to the new supervisors (although it acknowledged that the issue was moot, in light of its other rulings).

Nadia Renner — the proponent of Measure K — appeals. She contends that:

- (1) The one-term limit is constitutional.
- (2) The compensation limit is severable.
- (3) Measure K applies to the new supervisors.
- (4) The trial court erred by enjoining the certification, authentication, recordation, and filing of Measure K.

The San Bernardino County Board of Supervisors (Board) cross-appeals. It contends that:

(5) Supervisors' compensation cannot be set by initiative, because state law delegates supervisors' compensation exclusively to boards.

(6) The compensation limit violates minimum wage laws; alternatively, if it effectively forces supervisors to work part-time, it impairs essential governmental functions.

(7) The compensation limit improperly acts as a referendum on San Bernardino County Code section 13.0614 (section 13.0614), which provides for supervisors' compensation.

We perceive a preliminary issue of appealability. However, we will conclude that the trial court's ruling is appealable.

We will hold that the one-term limit is constitutional. We will further hold that supervisors' compensation can be set by initiative. The Board has not shown that the compensation limit violates minimum wage laws. The Board also has not shown that the compensation limit conflicts with section 13.0614; even assuming it does, the voters can amend or abrogate an ordinance not only by referendum, but also by initiative. Because both the one-term limit and the compensation limit are valid, we need not decide whether Measure K is severable. As to whether Measure K applies to the new supervisors, we reach a split decision: The one-term limit applies, but the compensation limit does not.¹

Finally, assuming the trial court erred by enjoining the certification, authentication, recordation, and filing of Measure K, the error is forfeited, harmless, and/or moot.

FACTAL AND PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

A. Statement of Facts.

The following facts are taken from Renner's statement of facts and statement of the case, which the Board concedes are accurate; from the declaration, and exhibits introduced below; and from matters of which the trial court took judicial notice.

Renner is the proponent of Measure K, a San Bernardino County initiative.

Measure K amends the county charter. It has four key provisions. First, it provides that a supervisor can serve only one four-year term. An unexpired term counts toward the four-year limit, but only if it has two or more years left to run when Measure K goes into effect. Previously, supervisors were limited to three consecutive four-year terms. Second, it limits the compensation of a supervisor, including all benefits, to $5,000 a month. Previously, supervisors' compensation was set at the average of the compensation of supervisors in Riverside, Orange, and San Diego

¹ In an unpublished portion of this opinion, we will reject the Board's additional contention that Measure K violates the single-subject rule.

Counties. Third, it provides: “To the extent permitted by law, the provisions of this Charter Amendment shall be effective on voter approval of the initiative as provided by California law.” Fourth, it includes a severability provision.

On November 3, 2020, Measure K passed, with 66.84 percent of the votes.

Another initiative on the ballot at the same time, Measure J, completely revised and restated the county charter. It, too, passed, but barely, with only 50.72 percent of the votes. Measure J would have limited supervisors to three terms (consecutive or not) and would have given them a salary set at 80 percent of a superior court judge’s salary and the same benefits as department heads. However, because Measure K got more votes, it supersedes Measure J to the extent that they conflict. (Elec. Code, §§ 9102, 9123; see Taxpayers to Limit Campaign Spending v. Fair Pol. Practices Com. (1990) 51 Cal.3d 744, 765-768.)

At the same time, new supervisors Joe Baca, Jr., Col. Paul Cook, and Dawn Rowe were elected to the Board. On December 7, 2020, they were sworn in. On December 8, 2020, the Board (including the newly elected supervisors) certified the results of the election.

B. Statement of the Case.

Meanwhile, on December 2, 2020, the Board filed a combined complaint and writ petition, seeking a declaration that Measure K was invalid plus an injunction and a writ of mandate preventing its enforcement. The only named defendant was Lynna Monell, in her official capacity as the Clerk of the Board. However, the trial court gave Renner leave to intervene.

On January 8, 2021, the trial court granted the Board's application for a temporary restraining order (TRO).²

The case was tried to the court as a writ petition, based on trial briefs and oral argument, with no live testimony.

The trial court granted the petition. It ruled that the one-term term limit was unconstitutional. It further ruled that the compensation limit was constitutional; however, it was not severable, and therefore Measure K as a whole was invalid. Finally, it ruled that Measure K was prospective only, and therefore it did not apply to the new supervisors. However, it acknowledged that this issue was moot in light of its other rulings.

C. Subsequent Statutory Changes.

On October 4, 2021 — after the trial court ruled — Assembly Bill No. 428 (2021-2022 Reg. Sess.) (AB 428) was enacted (Stats. 2021, ch. 462, p. 6507), and on January 1, 2022, it went into effect. AB 428 was enacted specifically in response to Measure K. (Assem. Com. on Elections, Analysis of Assem. Bill No. 428 (2021-2022 Reg. Sess.) as amended Mar. 18, 2021, p. 3.) It amended Government Code section 25000, subdivision (b) so that it now provides, as relevant here (additions italicized):

² A hearing on a preliminary injunction was set, continued, and then vacated. Thus, while the record is not entirely clear on this point, it appears that the TRO remained in effect until the trial court ruled on the petition.

“(1) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the board of supervisors of any general law or charter county may adopt or the residents of the county may propose, by initiative, a proposal to limit to no fewer than two terms or repeal a limit on the number of terms a member of the board of supervisors may serve on the board of supervisors. Any proposal to limit the number of terms a member of the board of supervisors may serve on the board of supervisors shall apply prospectively only

“(2) The changes made to this subdivision by the act that added this paragraph shall not affect any term limits that were legally in effect prior to January 1, 2022”

It also amended Government Code section 25300, subdivision (b) so that it now provides (additions italicized):

“The board of supervisors shall prescribe the compensation of all county officers, including the board of supervisors, and shall provide for the number, compensation, tenure, appointment and conditions of employment of county employees. Except as otherwise required by Section 1 or 4 of Article XI of the California Constitution, such action may be taken by resolution of the board of supervisors as well as by ordinance.”

II

APPEALABILITY

The trial court issued a “ruling” granting the mandate petition. It did not enter a formal judgment. It also did not expressly rule on the Board’s second (injunction) and third (declaratory relief) causes of action. Moreover, as far as the record shows, it did not actually issue either a writ or a permanent injunction.

There is a preliminary question of whether the ruling is appealable. We conclude, however, that it was.

“[A]n order granting or denying a petition for an extraordinary writ [can] constitute[] a final judgment for purposes of an appeal, even if the order is not accompanied by a separate formal judgment. [Citations.]” (Public Defenders’ Organization v. County of Riverside (2003) 106 Cal.App.4th 1403, 1409; cf. Natomas Unified School Dist. v. Sacramento County Bd. of Education (2022) 86 Cal.App.5th 1013, 1027.)

“[A] ruling on a petition for writ of mandate is not appealable if other causes of action remain pending between the parties. [Citation.]” (Canandaigua Wine Co., Inc. v. County of Madera (2009) 177 Cal.App.4th 298, 302.) But “an order constitutes a final judgment despite other causes of action remaining if the order effectively disposes of the entire case. For example, an order is appealable if it resolves an allegation that is essential to all of the causes of action. [Citation.]” (Id. at p. 303.)

Here, the trial court’s ruling effectively resolved the cause of action for an injunction, by declaring that Measure K is unconstitutional and “cannot be implemented” It also effectively resolved the cause of action for declaratory relief, again by declaring Measure K unconstitutional. The ruling “contemplated no further action, such as the preparation of another order or judgment [citation], and disposed of all issues between all parties.” (Laraway v. Pasadena Unified School Dist. (2002) 98 Cal.App.4th 579, 583.) Moreover, it is clear from the record that the parties themselves did not contemplate any further judicial action.

It follows that the ruling is appealable.

III

THE EFFECT OF MEASURE D

Measure D was enacted in 2022, while this appeal was pending. It would supersede Measure K — if Measure D is valid. A trial court upheld Measure D, but its validity is currently before this court in The Red Brennan Group v. Jimenez et al., E080868. So far, nothing has happened in that case, other than the filing of the Civil Case Information Statement. In the ordinary course of business, it is likely to be a year or so before we decide it — to say nothing of how much time any subsequent Supreme Court review will consume. With all respect to our dissenting colleague, Measure D is irrelevant.

The fact that Measure D has not yet been struck down, and thus is presumptively valid, does not make this case moot. “A case becomes moot when events “render[] it impossible for [a] court, if it should decide the case in favor of plaintiff, to grant him any effect[ive] relief.” [Citation.]” (In re D.P. (2023) 14 Cal.5th 266, 276, italics added.) If we dismiss this case as moot, and if Measure D is then struck down, any relief we grant as to Measure K would still be effective; however, we would have no way of bringing this case back to life again. And even if Measure D is eventually upheld, this case still will not be moot; there would still be a live issue regarding the supervisors' compensation from 2020 through 2022.

The only even arguable question is whether we should stay this appeal pending the outcome of the Measure D litigation. There is not even any pending request for a stay; before oral argument, the Board requested a stay, but we denied it. We see no reason why the appeal filed later should have precedence over the one filed earlier. Renner has paid her filing fee; the parties have fully briefed the appeal; prior to oral argument, we drafted and issued a tentative opinion; and we heard oral argument. Courts have no jurisdiction to decide moot cases, On the flip side, however, “[a] court is tasked with the duty “to decide actual controversies by a judgment which can be carried into effect” [Citation.]” (In re D.P., supra, 14 Cal.5th at p. 276, italics added.) It is time to decide this case.

IV

THE ONE-TERM LIMIT

The trial court ruled that the one-term limit violates “voters’ and incumbents’ 1st and 14th amendment rights.” Renner contends that it erred.

A. The Anderson-Burdick Framework.

“It is beyond cavil that ‘voting is of the most fundamental significance under our constitutional structure.’ [Citation.] It does not follow, however, that the right to vote in any manner and the right to associate for political purposes through the ballot are absolute. [Citation.]” (Burdick v. Takushi (1992) 504 U.S. 428, 433 (Burdick).

“Election laws will invariably impose some burden upon individual voters. Each provision of a code, ‘whether it governs the registration and qualifications of voters, the selection and eligibility of candidates, or the voting process itself, inevitably affects — at least to some degree — the individual’s right to vote and his right to associate with others for political ends.’ [Citation.]” (Burdick, supra, 504 U.S. at p. 433.)

“A court considering a challenge to a state election law must weigh ‘the character and magnitude of the asserted injury to the rights protected by the First and Fourteenth Amendments that the plaintiff seeks to vindicate’ against ‘the precise interests put forward by the State as justifications for the burden imposed by its rule,’ taking into consideration ‘the extent to which those interests make it necessary to burden the plaintiff’s rights.’ [Citations.]

“Under this standard, the rigorousness of our inquiry into the propriety of a state election law depends upon the extent to which a challenged regulation burdens First and Fourteenth Amendment rights. Thus, . . . when those rights are subjected to ‘severe’ restrictions, the regulation must be ‘narrowly drawn to advance a state interest of compelling importance.’ [Citation.] But when a state election law provision imposes only ‘reasonable, nondiscriminatory restrictions’ upon the First and Fourteenth Amendment rights of voters, ‘the State’s important regulatory interests are generally sufficient to justify’ the restrictions. [Citations.]” (Burdick, supra, 504 U.S. at p. 434.)³

“This latter, lesser scrutiny is not ‘pure rational basis review.’ [Citation.] Rather, ‘the court must actually “weigh” the burdens imposed on the plaintiff against “the precise interests put forward by the State,” and the court must take “into consideration the extent to which those interests make it necessary to burden the plaintiff’s rights.”’ [Citation.] Review under this balancing test is ‘quite deferential’ [Citation.]” (SAM Party of New York v. Kosinski (2d Cir. 2021) 987 F.3d 267, 274.)

“‘Courts will uphold as “not severe” restrictions that are generally applicable, even-handed, politically neutral, and which protect the reliability and integrity of the election process. [Citation.] . . .’ [Citation.] ‘Courts will strike down state election laws as severe speech restrictions only when they significantly impair access to the ballot, stifle core political speech, or dictate electoral outcomes.’ [Citation.]” (Rawls v. Zamora (2003) 107 Cal.App.4th 1110, 1116.)

Recently, one federal appellate court held that the Anderson-Burdick test is “inapposite” to the analysis of term limits. (Kowall v. Benson (6th Cir. 2021) 18 F.4th 542, 547, cert. den. (2022) ___ U.S. ___ [143 S. Ct. 88].) As we will discuss, however, controlling California Supreme Court authority requires us to apply the Anderson-Burdick test.

B. Whether the One-Term Limit Is “Severe.”

The trial court ruled that the one-term limit was “severe” because it “is not merely about limiting the term but limiting the term to one time”

1. Relevant case law.

In Legislature v. Eu (1991) 54 Cal.3d 492 (Eu), our Supreme Court upheld Proposition 140, which imposed lifetime term limits of two four-year terms per state senator and three two-year terms per state assemblymember. (See Eu at pp. 502-506, 518.)

The court began by saying: “[T]he initiative power must be liberally construed to promote the democratic process. [Citation.] Indeed, it is our solemn duty to jealously guard the precious initiative power, and to resolve any reasonable doubts in favor of its exercise. [Citation.] As with statutes adopted by the Legislature, all presumptions favor the validity of initiative measures and mere doubts as to validity are insufficient; such measures must be upheld unless their unconstitutionality clearly, positively, and unmistakably appears. [Citation.]” (Eu, supra, 54 Cal.3d at p. 501.)

It then held that strict scrutiny was not required because the term limits did not have a “serious impact on First Amendment freedoms of speech and association,” as they “d[id] not affect speech interests and . . . impact[ed] all political parties on an equal basis. [Citation.]” (Eu, supra, 54 Cal.3d at p. 515.) Rather, the term limits were entitled to “wide latitude,” because they “[we]re applied in an even-handed manner without discriminating against particular citizens or classes of citizens.” (Id. at p. 516.)

In Bates v. Jones (9th Cir. 1997) 131 F.3d 843 (en banc) (Bates), cert. den. (1998) 523 U.S. 1021, the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals similarly upheld Proposition 140. It held that its impact on the plaintiffs’ claimed “right to vote for the candidate of one’s choice and . . . right of an incumbent to again run for his or her office” was “not severe.” (Id. at p. 847.) It explained that “term limits on state officeholders is [sic] a neutral candidacy qualification, such as age or residence, which the State certainly has the right to impose. [Citation.] With regard to incumbents, they may enjoy the incumbency of a single office for a number of years, and . . . they are not precluded from running for some other state office. [¶] Most important, the lifetime term limits do not constitute a discriminatory restriction. [They] make[] no distinction on the basis of the content of protected expression, party affiliation, or inherently arbitrary factors such as race, religion, or gender. Nor do[] [they] ‘limit [] political participation by an identifiable political group whose members share a particular viewpoint, associational preference, or economic status.’ [Citation.]” (Ibid.)

Significantly, the Board has not cited any case striking down any term limits on First and Fourteenth Amendment grounds.

2. Application here.

Under Eu and Bates, at least as a general rule, term limits are not so “severe” as to trigger strict scrutiny. The trial court distinguished those cases, however, on the ground that a one-term lifetime limit is “severe.” In light of the way “severe” has been interpreted and applied, this was error.

In Eu, the court concluded that the term limits there were not severe because they were nondiscriminatory — they “[we]re applied in an even-handed manner without discriminating against particular citizens or classes of citizens.” (Eu, supra, 54 Cal.3d at p. 516.) They were not based on the content of protected speech. (Id. at p. 515.) “They impact[ed] all political parties on an equal basis. [Citation.]” (Ibid.) A one-term limit is no different in these respects.

In Bates, the court concluded that the same term limits were not severe because (1) they were “neutral,” (2) they allowed incumbency “for a number of years” and did not preclude an incumbent from running for a different office, and (3) they did not distinguish “on the basis of the content of protected expression, party affiliation, or inherently arbitrary factors such as race, religion, or gender.” (Bates, supra, 131 F.3d at p. 847.) Again, a one-term limit is no different.

The only argument to the contrary is that it allows incumbency for a lesser “number of years” than the term limits in Eu and Bates. Those limits, however, while they were not one-term limits, allowed a state senator to serve for no more than eight years and a state assembly member to serve for no more than six years. The difference between the six or eight years there and the four years here is not sufficient to be constitutionally significant — particularly when the term limits here are similarly neutral and nondiscriminatory and do not preclude an incumbent from holding any other office. Four years is ample time for a supervisor to at least attempt to tick off all the boxes on his or her legislative to-do list. In this respect, the Board, with only five members, is very different from the California Senate, with 40 members, or the California Assembly, with 80 members. In the latter bodies, seniority and a cursus honorum of committee memberships both play a role. By contrast, a newly elected supervisor can hit the ground running.⁴ The Board does not point to anything that a supervisor could accomplish in six or eight years but not in four.

C. Whether the Regulatory Interests Are Sufficient to Justify the One-Term Limit.

The trial court also ruled that, even assuming Measure K's one-term limit was not "severe," "the stated reason [for it] is not sufficient to justify imposing the burden [of] precluding an incumbent from seeking re-election." It explained, "A one-term limit is not providing a supervisor sufficient time in the governing body position."

"Additionally, . . . the desire to ensure a candidate seeks to serve the public interest cannot justify then precluding a candidate or electing an incumbent he believes is serving the interest of the voters at least for one or two additional terms of office. And a reasonable remedy exists if the incumbent seeking re-election is not performing competently: the electorate vote for the other candidate."

⁴ Amicus curiae Howard Jarvis Taxpayers Association takes a swipe at the trial court for "weighing the merits of an ideal learning curve for a county supervisor." We find that we cannot help but consider this subject in deciding whether the term limits here allow a supervisor to serve "a significant period in office" within the meaning of Eu or, more generally, unduly injure the rights of voters and candidates.

1. Relevant case law.

In Eu, the Supreme Court balanced the claimed injury to First and Fourteenth Amendment rights against the State's claimed interests, as follows.

First, it considered “the nature of the injury to the rights affected” (Eu, supra, 54 Cal.3d at p. 517; see id. at pp. 517-519.) It concluded that the term limits “do[] affect the rights of voters and candidates to a degree” (Id. at p. 519.) With respect to candidates, however, the impact was “mitigate[d]” by three factors: “First, the affected incumbent is not barred from seeking any other public office Second, the term limitations arise only after the incumbent already has had the opportunity to serve a significant period in office” (Id. at p. 518.) Third, the term limits in most instances did not count terms served before they went into effect. (Ibid.)

Similarly, with respect to voters, it was unclear whether a right to vote for a particular candidate even existed. (Eu, supra, 54 Cal.3d at p. 519; see also id. at pp. 516, 518.) In any event, the court accepted the argument that the term limits there “d[id] not truly impair the franchise, for the voters retain the basic fundamental right to cast their ballots for the qualified candidate of their choice.” (Id. at p. 519; see also ibid [“mitigating aspects[] include[e] the voters’ continued right to vote for any qualified candidates”].)

Second, it considered “the interests asserted by the state as justifications for that injury” (Eu, supra, 54 Cal.3d at p. 517; see id. at pp. 520-522.) It observed that “[c]onstitutional restrictions circumscribing the ability of incumbents to succeed themselves appear in over twenty state constitutions, and exist in the Twenty-second Amendment to the Constitution of the United States with regard to the Presidency. The universal authority is that restriction upon the succession of incumbents serves a rational public policy and that, while restrictions may deny qualified men an opportunity to serve, as a general rule the over-all health of the body politic is enhanced by limitations on continuous tenure. [Citations and fn. omitted].’ [Citations.]” (Id. at p. 520.)

“[T]he substantial reasons for limiting the right of incumbents to succeed themselves . . . include ‘[t]he power of incumbent officeholders to develop networks of patronage and attendant capacities to deliver favorably disposed voters to the polls,’ ‘fears of an entrenched political machine which could effectively foreclose access to the political process,’ and the belief that regularly disrupting those ‘machines’ ‘would stimulate criticism within political parties’ and ‘insure a meaningful, adversary, and competitive election.’ [Citation.]

“In addition, . . . ‘ . . . a limitation upon succession of incumbents removes the temptation to prostitute the government to the perpetuation of a particular administration. [Citation.] . . . Meretricious policies which sacrifice the well-being of economic, social, racial, or geographic minorities are most likely where a political figure, political party, or political interest group can rely upon electorate inertia fostered by the hopelessness of encountering a seemingly invincible political machine.’ [Citation.]” (Eu, supra, 54 Cal.3d at p. 521.)

Third, it considered “the necessity for imposing the particular burden affecting the plaintiff’s rights, rather than some less drastic alternatives.” (Eu, supra, 54 Cal.3d at p. 517; see id. at pp. 522-524.) It noted that “incumbents do indeed appear to enjoy considerable advantages over other candidates. [Citations.]” (Id. at p. 523.) “It is true . . . that [the proponents] have not offered evidence to support all of the various premises on which [the term limits are] based. But . . . a state need not demonstrate empirically all of the various evils that its regulations seek to combat” [Citation.]” (Id. at p. 524.)

The opponents argued that alternative measures, such as “a limitation on consecutive terms, together with additional restrictions on campaign contributions to legislators, decreased fringe and pension benefits, and additional incentives for early retirement, would have been sufficient to promote and accomplish the state interests previously discussed.” (Eu, supra, 54 Cal.3d at pp. 522-523.) The court responded that “[r]ealistically, only a lifetime ban could protect against various kinds of continued exploitation of the ‘advantages of incumbency’ captured through past terms in office. The remainder of [the opponents’] suggested ‘alternatives’ essentially involve narrow changes in the system of providing contributions or compensation for legislators, changes that would afford ‘career politicians’ with independent resources little incentive to voluntarily terminate public service.” (Id. at p. 524.)

“[W]e conclude,” the court said, “the interests of the state in incumbency reform outweigh any injury to incumbent office holders and those who would vote for them.”

(Eu, supra, 54 Cal.3d at p. 524.) Indeed, the court observed, “it is unlikely we would reach a different result applying strict scrutiny (Id. at p. 515.)

By contrast, Bates upheld the state’s justification for the term limits with little discussion. It said, “[A] lack of term limits may create ‘unfair incumbent advantages.’ Long-term entrenched legislators may obtain excessive power which, in turn, may discourage other qualified candidates from running for office or may provide the incumbent with an unfair advantage in winning reelection.” (Bates, supra, 131 F.3d at p. 847.) “California voters apparently perceived lifetime term limits for elected state officials as a means to promote democracy by opening up the political process and restoring competitive elections. This was their choice to make. [Citation.]” (Ibid.)

2. Application here.

We apply the three-part Anderson-Burdick framework as our Supreme Court did in Eu. It must be remembered that review under this framework is deferential — all the more so when the electoral restriction being analyzed was enacted by initiative. Moreover, when the restriction is “‘reasonable [and] nondiscriminatory,’ . . . ‘the State’s important regulatory interests are generally sufficient to justify’ the restrictions. [Citations.]” (Burdick, supra, 504 U.S. at p. 434.)

a. The nature of the injury to the rights affected.

i. The voters' rights.

(a) The nature of the right.

Federal courts have held that voters have no right to vote for a particular candidate. (Citizens for Legislative Choice v. Miller (6th Cir. 1998) 144 F.3d 916, 921; Stiles v. Blunt (8th Cir. 1990) 912 F.2d 260, 266 [voters do not have “an absolute right to support a specific candidate regardless of whether he or she has satisfied reasonable eligibility requirements”], cert. den. (1991) 499 U.S. 919.)

Eu acknowledged this. (Eu, supra, 54 Cal.3d at pp. 516, 518.) However, it noted that, at least at the time, Canaan v. Abdelnour (1985) 40 Cal.3d 703, 714-716 (Canaan) was to the contrary. (Eu, supra, 54 Cal.3d at p. 516.) Canaan had held that “[a] ban on write-in voting affects . . . the right of . . . voters to cast ballots for the candidates of their choice.” (Canaan, supra, at p. 715.) Eu concluded that, while term limits “affected . . . the voters’ right to reelect the incumbent” (Eu, supra, at p. 517; see also id. at p. 519), the existence and scope of this right were “unclear”; hence, “the legal impact of [term limits] on the voters remain[ed] uncertain.” (Id. at p. 519.) It treated this uncertainty as a “mitigating aspect.” (Ibid.)

After Eu was decided, the Supreme Court overruled Canaan. (Edelstein, supra, 29 Cal.4th at p. 183.) While the extent to which Edelstein overruled particular portions of Canaan is open to debate (see ibid.), Edelstein did disavow a specific right to vote for a particular candidate in favor of a more general right “to make free choices and to associate politically through the vote” (Id. at pp. 175, 177-178, 182-183.)

(b) The impact on the right.

Term limits do not affect these general rights. Voters still have the right to make free choices and to associate politically through the vote. As in Eu, the term limits here “do not truly impair the franchise, for the voters retain the basic fundamental right to cast their ballots for the qualified candidate of their choice.” (Eu, supra, 54 Cal.3d at p. 519.)

ii. The candidates’ rights.

(a) The nature of the right.

In her reply brief, Renner argues that candidates do not have a fundamental right to run for public office. She forfeited this contention by failing to raise it below. (Delta Stewardship Council Cases (2020) 48 Cal.App.5th 1014, 1074.) She further forfeited it by failing to raise it in her opening brief. (Raceway Ford Cases (2016) 2 Cal.5th 161, 178.)

In any event, we reject this contention on the merits.

The California Supreme Court has held that “[t]he right to seek public office . . . [is] fundamental.” (Canaan, supra, 40 Cal.3d at p. 727.) “There has been some suggestion in the case law that the right to be a candidate for public office may not be fundamental in and of itself. [Citations.] However, this court has described the right to hold public office as ‘valuable, fundamental and one that is subject to First Amendment protection’ [Citations.]” (Id. at p. 714.) Admittedly, as mentioned, Canaan was overruled in Edelstein, but not on this particular ground. (Edelstein, supra, 29 Cal.4th at p. 183.) Moreover, the earlier cases on which Caanan itself relied have never been overruled. (Johnson v. Hamilton (1975) 15 Cal.3d 461, 468 [“the right to hold public office [is] valuable, fundamental and . . . subject to First Amendment protection”]; Zeilenga v. Nelson (1971) 4 Cal.3d 716, 723 [“the right to run for public office is as fundamental a right as is the right to vote”].)

More recently, in Eu, the Supreme Court said, “Two important rights are affected by [term limits], namely, the incumbent’s right to run for public office, and the voters’ right to reelect the incumbent to that office.” (Eu, supra, 54 Cal.3d at p. 517, italics added.) Thus, it analyzed the impact on candidates (id. at pp. 517-518), and it weighed that impact, along with the impact on voters, against the state’s interest in the term limits at issue. (Id. at pp. 519-520, 522-524.)

Federal cases are not to the contrary. According to the United States Supreme Court, “The right of . . . an individual to a place on a ballot is entitled to protection” (Lubin v. Panish (1974) 415 U.S. 709, 716; see also Moore v. Martin (8th Cir. 2017) 854 F.3d 1021, 1025 [“Ballot access restrictions implicate . . . the rights of potential candidates for public office”], cert. den. ___ U.S. ___ [138 S.Ct. 321]; Phillips v. City of Dallas (5th Cir. 2015) 781 F.3d 772, 778-779 [“This court has been unequivocal in its recognition of a First Amendment interest in candidacy.”]; Davies v. Grossmont Union High School Dist. (9th Cir. 1991) 930 F.2d 1390, 1397 [“the individual’s right to seek public office is inextricably intertwined with the public’s fundamental right to vote”]; Branch v. FCC (D.C. Cir. 1987) 824 F.2d 37, 47 [the existence of a “right to seek political office . . . is undeniable”], cert. den. (1988) 485 U.S. 959.)

Admittedly, the United States Supreme Court “has not . . . attached such fundamental status to candidacy as to invoke a rigorous standard of review.” (Bullock v. Carter (1972) 405 U.S. 134, 142-143; see also Clements v. Fashing (1982) 457 U.S. 957, 963 [“Far from recognizing candidacy as a ‘fundamental right,’ we have held that the existence of barriers to a candidate’s access to the ballot ‘does not of itself compel close scrutiny.’”] [plur. opn. of Rehnquist, J.] (Clements).

However, this simply means that strict scrutiny is not required. If it were, few provisions for “the selection and eligibility of candidates” (Burdick, supra, 504 U.S. at p. 433) would escape challenge. “[T]o say that the right to candidacy is not fundamental is not to say that a rational basis analysis applies.” (Brazil-Breashears v. Bilandic (7th Cir. 1995) 53 F.3d 789, 792, cert. den 516 U.S. 869.) Rather — just like the voter’s right to vote — the candidate’s right to run for office is subject to the Anderson-Burdick test. (See, e.g., Libertarian Party of Arkansas v. Thurston (8th Cir. 2020) 962 F.3d 390, 398.)⁵

⁵ We respectfully disagree with Kern County Employees’ Retirement Assn. v. Bellino (2005) 126 Cal.App.4th 781 (Kern County), which held that an asserted infringement of the right to run for office is subject to rational-basis review. (Id. at p. 794.) In our view, Kern County misread Justice Rehnquist’s plurality opinion in Clements, supra, 457 U.S. 957. It said that strict scrutiny is not required (id. at p. 963), but it did not say that rational basis review applies. To the contrary, it said, “Decision in this area of constitutional adjudication is a matter of degree, and involves a consideration of the facts and circumstances behind the law, the interests the State seeks to protect by placing restrictions on candidacy, and the nature of the interests of those who may be burdened by the restrictions.” (Ibid.) Thus, Clements foreshadowed the intermediate

Eu concluded that the term limits “do[] affect the rights of . . . candidates to a degree” (Eu, supra, 54 Cal.3d at p. 519.) With respect to candidates, however, the impact was “mitigate[d]” by three factors: “First, the affected incumbent is not barred from seeking any other public office Second, the term limitations arise only after the incumbent already has had the opportunity to serve a significant period in office” (Eu, supra, 54 Cal.3d at p. 518.) Third, the term limits in most (though not all) instances did not count terms served before they went into effect. (Ibid.)

(b) The impact on the right.

With respect to candidates, a one-term limit is ipso facto more burdensome than the two- and three-term limits in Eu. Nevertheless, the reasons stated in Eu for concluding that the impact was “mitigate[d]” largely also apply here.

First, a termed-out incumbent is free to run for any other county (or state or federal) office.

Second, the term limits do allow an incumbent to serve “a significant period in office.” (Eu, supra, 54 Cal.3d at p. 518.) As already discussed, we cannot meaningfully distinguish a four-year maximum from the six-year maximum applicable to assemblymembers in Eu.⁶ (See part III.B.2, ante.)

scrutiny subsequently announced by Anderson and refined by Burdick (neither of which Kern County cited).

⁶ In conformity with Government Code section 25000, subdivision (a), which sets a supervisor’s term at four years, the drafters of Measure K did not attempt to prescribe a five, six, or seven-year term.

Third, Measure K does not count unexpired terms, if they have less than two years still to run. That is not so very different from the term limits in Eu, which did not count unexpired terms at all (except that it did count them against “some incumbent Senators”). (Eu, supra, 54 Cal.3d at p. 518.) The fact that in Eu, terms begun by some incumbent Senators did count demonstrates that Eu did not view this factor as dispositive.

b. The interests asserted by the state as justifications for the injury.

Eu acknowledged that the state has a legitimate interest in term limits: “‘The universal authority is that restriction upon the succession of incumbents serves a rational public policy and that, while restrictions may deny qualified men an opportunity to serve, as a general rule the over-all health of the body politic is enhanced by limitations on continuous tenure. [Citations and fn. omitted].’” (Eu, supra, 54 Cal.3d at p. 520.) It indicated that this interest was sufficiently compelling for the term limits there to survive even strict scrutiny. (Id. at p. 524.)

Bates agreed that the state has an interest in term limits: “‘Long-term entrenched legislators may obtain excessive power which, in turn, may discourage other qualified candidates from running for office or may provide the incumbent with an unfair advantage in winning reelection.’” (Bates, supra, 131 F.3d at p. 847.)

The trial court reasoned that “‘the desire to ensure a candidate seeks to serve the public interest cannot justify then precluding a candidate or electing an incumbent he believes is serving the interest of the voters at least for one or two additional terms of office. And a reasonable remedy exists if the incumbent seeking re-election is not performing competently: the electorate vote for the other candidate.” These arguments, however, apply to a two- or three-term limit just as much as to a one-term limit; essentially, they are arguments against having any term limits at all. As we know from Eu, however, term limits imposed by initiative are presumptively valid. The trial court was not entitled to second-guess the voters’ position on these policy issues.

The Board argues that “Renner raises a purported government interest by merely citing the language of Eu and provides no evidence that this interest is relevant to San Bernardino County.” Eu held, however, that such evidence is not required. (Eu, supra, 54 Cal.3d at p. 523.) “[W]e [do not] require elaborate, empirical verification of the weightiness of the State’s asserted justifications. [Citation.]” (Timmons v. Twin Cities Area New Party (1997) 520 U.S. 351, 364.)

c. The necessity for imposing the burden.

When the problem is personal empire-building by entrenched incumbents, the only solution is term limits. As Eu said, “Realistically, only a lifetime ban could protect against various kinds of continued exploitation of the ‘advantages of incumbency’ captured through past terms in office.” (Eu, supra, 54 Cal.3d at p. 524.)

The Board argues that the preexisting three-term limit was adequate and “a far less drastic alternative” to a one-term limit. The voters, however, were presented with the choice between Measure J, which would have kept the three-term limit, and Measure K’s one-term limit; they overwhelmingly preferred Measure K.

The ballot arguments in favor of Measure K said, among other things: “Voting YES for term limits and reduced salaries will finally attract representatives interested in public service and committed to following the will of the people.” “Obligated to financial backers for reelection, the Board of Supervisors has chosen to ignore voters and their rights.” “A single four-year term will help shut out . . . outside interests and focus our leaders on doing what’s best for us all.” “Measure K will ensure our elected officials are inspired by service to San Bernardino County residents, not an oversized paycheck or raising money to win their next election.”⁷

It was important to the electorate, then, to ensure that supervisors could not be either distracted or compromised by the prospect of a future term. A three-term limit could never accomplish this goal. A one-term limit was the only alternative.

D. Conclusion.

In sum, in the words of Burdick, the one-term limit here is a “reasonable, nondiscriminatory restriction[,]’ and therefore “the State’s important regulatory interests are . . . sufficient to justify” it. (Burdick, supra, 504 U.S. at p. 434.)

⁷ As evidence of the purposes of Measure K, Renner cites the statement of reasons that appeared on petitions to qualify the initiative. (See Elec. Code, § 9202.) Such a statement, which was not made available to all voters, does not constitute legislative history. (Cf. Carter v. Commission on Qualifications of Judicial Appointments (1939) 14 Cal.2d 179, 185 [ballot pamphlet, “sent to the electors of the state,” is an indicator of intent].)

THE COMPENSATION LIMIT

The trial court also ruled that the compensation limit was valid and constitutional. In its cross-appeal, the Board contends that this was error, for three reasons.

A. Exclusive Delegation.

First, the Board contends that supervisors' compensation cannot be set by initiative, because state law delegates the power to set supervisors' compensation exclusively to a county's governing body.

The trial court rejected this contention; it found "no clear indication that the Legislature intended the governing body to exclusively hold the right to set their salary within the charter and exclude the use of the initiative power to amend the charter associated with the governing body's compensation." We agree.

1. Analysis under the California Constitution.

California has two kinds of counties: charter counties and general law counties. (Cal. Const., art. XI, § 3, subd. (a); Roe v. County of Lake (N.D. Cal. 2000) 107 F.Supp.2d 1146, 1148.) San Bernardino is a charter county. (S.B. County Charter; Stats. 1913, ch. 33.)

Article XI, section 3, subdivision (a) (section 3(a)) of the Constitution states, "County charters . . . shall supersede . . . all laws inconsistent therewith. The provisions of a charter are the law of the State and have the force and effect of legislative enactments." (Cal. Const., art. XI, § 3, subd. (a).) Thus, section 3(a) grants a charter county “‘home rule,’ i.e., the authority of the people to create and operate their own local government and define the powers of that government, within the limits set out by the Constitution. [Citation.]” (Dibb v. County of San Diego (1994) 8 Cal.4th 1200, 1206.)⁸

Despite the seeming breadth of section 3(a), a county charter supersedes state law only when the county is legislating in its proper sphere. Hence, “charter provisions cannot control in matters of statewide concern where the state has occupied the field.” (Wilson v. Beville (1957) 47 Cal.2d 852, 859; accord, American Financial Services Assn. v. City of Oakland (2005) 34 Cal.4th 1239, 1251.)

Article XI, section 1, subdivision (b) of the California Constitution (section 1(b)) provides, “[E]ach governing body [of a county] shall prescribe by ordinance the compensation of its members” However, section 1(b) expressly applies only “[e]xcept as provided in subdivision (b) of Section 4 of this article” (Ibid.) And Article XI, section 4, subdivision (b) says that a county charter must provide for “[t]he

Subject to that caveat, case law dealing with charter cities also applies to charter counties. (See, e.g., Marquez v. City of Long Beach (2019) 32 Cal.App.5th 552, 562, fn. 5 [“The cases addressing the home rule doctrine have applied the same analysis to the authority of charter counties . . . and charter cities . . . to set the compensation for their employees.”].)

compensation . . . of members of the governing body.” (Cal. Const., art. XI, § 4, subd. (b) (section 4(b)).)

In other words, in a general law county, the “governing body” must set its members’ compensation. By contrast, in a charter county, the county charter may provide the method of setting the compensation of members of the governing body; the governing body has no power to set the compensation of its members, unless the county charter so provides. (See Brown v. Francisco (1954) 123 Cal.App.2d 413, 417 [county charter may fix supervisors’ compensation or may allow supervisors to do so].) Last but not least, the voters have the right to amend a county charter by initiative. (Cal. Const., art. XI, § 3, subds. (a), (b).) It follows that the voters in a charter county may set supervisors’ compensation by an initiative that amends the county charter.

The Board asserts: “[T]he California Constitution is silent regarding whether citizen initiatives may initially set supervisor compensation in charter counties.” “Where the Constitution is silent as to a charter county’s authority to engage in a legislative act, courts defer to the legislature” As just discussed, however, the state Constitution is far from silent on this point. Indeed, it could hardly be clearer.

Jahr v. Casebeer (1999) 70 Cal.App.4th 1250 (Jahr) held that, under section 1(b), supervisors’ compensation cannot be set by initiative. (Id. at pp. 1254-1260.) Meldrim v. Board of Supervisors (1976) 57 Cal.App.3d 341 (Meldrim) is in accord. (Id. at pp. 343-344.) Jahr, however, involved Shasta County (Jahr, supra, at pp. 1252-1253), a general law county. (California State Association of Counties, County Structure & Powers, available at <<https://www.counties.org/general-information/county-structure-0>> [as of May 3, 2023].) And Meldrim involved Contra Costa County, which, as the court there observed, is also a general law county. (Meldrim, supra, 57 Cal.App.3d at p. 343.) Meldrim even acknowledged that “the State Constitution . . . gives charter counties the right to set the salaries of their supervisors. [Citation.]” (Id. at pp. 343-344.)

Admittedly, Jahr stated flatly that “the process through which supervisor salaries are established is a matter of statewide concern.” (Jahr, supra, 70 Cal.App.4th at p. 1259.) Because Jahr involved a general law county, however, the court was not called upon to decide any issue regarding a charter county. If this statement in Jahr applied to a charter county, it would conflict with section 4(b), which leaves it up to a charter county to decide how to set supervisors’ compensation, as well as with the broad home rule that section 3(a) confers on charter counties. It is perfectly consistent to say that supervisor compensation may be a statewide concern in general law counties, but it is a local concern in charter counties exercising their constitutional right to home rule.

2. Analysis under Government Code section 25300.

The Board relies on Government Code section 25300 (section 25300) — particularly as it was amended, while this appeal was pending, by AB 428.

When the trial court ruled, section 25300 provided, “The board of supervisors shall prescribe the compensation of all county officers” (Former § 25300, Stats. 1974, ch. 661, § 2, p. 1523.) As the trial court recognized, however, “officers of a county” is defined as including the members of a board of supervisors. (Gov. Code, § 24000, subd. (o).)

Section 25300 now specifically provides: “The board of supervisors shall prescribe the compensation of all county officers, including the board of supervisors . . .” (Italics added.)

The Board argues that this constitutes an “exclusive delegation” of the power to set supervisors’ compensation. “[T]he local electorate’s right to initiative . . . is generally co-extensive with the legislative power of the local governing body. [Citation.]” (DeVita v. County of Napa (1995) 9 Cal.4th 763, 775.) However, “[t]he presumption in favor of the right of initiative is rebuttable upon a definite indication that the Legislature, as part of the exercise of its power to preempt all local legislation in matters of statewide concern, has intended to restrict that right. [Citations.]” (Id. at p. 776.)

The Board’s argument assumes, however, that section 25300 applies to charter counties. It does not, for three reasons.

First, section 4(b) says that a county charter must provide for “[t]he compensation . . . of members of the governing body.” Thus, if section 25300 purported to apply to a charter county, it would be unconstitutional. This is true even if setting supervisors’ salaries is a statewide matter, and hence even if the county charter does not supersede section 25300. The Constitution itself supersedes section 25300 directly.

Second, section 25300 does not actually purport to apply to a charter county (except when the charter allows the board of supervisors to set the compensation of its own members). The second sentence of section 25300 adds, “Except as otherwise required by Section . . . 4 of Article XI of the California Constitution, such action may be taken by resolution of the board of supervisors as well as by ordinance.” And section 4 of article XI does require otherwise; in a charter county, it requires that the county charter provide for supervisors’ compensation.

Admittedly, the first sentence of section 25300 — “The board of supervisors shall prescribe the compensation of . . . the board of supervisors” — does not have any similar exclusion. Nevertheless, it is “our duty to read the elements of the statute together, harmonizing and giving effect to them all. [Citations.]” (Hampton v. County of San Diego (2015) 62 Cal.4th 340, 351.) Both the first and second sentences must be read as qualified by the second. Even assuming the first sentence gives a charter county board of supervisors the power to set their own compensation, the second takes it away by forbidding them to do it either by ordinance or by resolution. The principle “that courts should, if reasonably possible, construe a statute ‘in a manner that avoids any doubt about its [constitutional] validity [citations]’ [citations]” supports this interpretation. (Kleffman v. Vonage Holdings Corp. (2010) 49 Cal.4th 334, 346, brackets in original)

Third, the legislative history of AB 428 demonstrates that the Legislature did not intend section 25300 to apply to a charter county. Admittedly, the author of the bill stated: “[I]t is the Legislature’s duty to ensure that our local governments, whether established through general law or charter, are equipped with the tools needed to properly administer the heavy burdens we place upon them. . . . We must clarify existing law to allow for County Supervisors to obtain reasonable compensation” (Assem. Com. on Elections, Analysis of Assem. Bill No. 428, supra, at p. 2, italics added.)

Other voices, however, soon chimed in. A Senate committee bill analysis stated: “Consistent with existing law, AB 428 reiterates that members of the board of supervisors are county officers for which the board must set compensation. However, because the California Constitution says that charters must provide for the compensation of the board, charters that set compensation trump state law. Accordingly, while AB 428 may clarify matters for general law counties, it is unclear that it materially changes how compensation is set in charter counties that have charter provisions setting a specific compensation level for members of the board.” (Sen. Com. on Gov. & Fin., Analysis of Assem. Bill No. 428 (2021-2022 Reg. Sess.), as amended Mar. 18, 2021, p. 4, italics added.)

A bill analysis by another committee concurred: “Supervisor Compensation in Charter Counties. AB 428 would clarify, in Government Code Section 25300, that the ‘county officers’ for which the board of supervisors sets compensation includes the board itself. This amendment is consistent, as to general law counties, with provisions of the California Constitution requiring each county governing body to set the compensation of its members. However, this clarification may not apply to all charter counties, because the California Constitution specifies, as an exception to the general rule of county governing bodies setting their own compensation, that a county charter must provide for the compensation of the board, and some county charters do not give the board discretion to set its own compensation. Accordingly, while AB 428 may clarify matters for general law counties, it is unclear that it materially changes how compensation is set in charter counties that have charter provisions setting a specific compensation level for members of the board.” (Sen. Com. on Elections and Const. Amends., Analysis of Assem. Bill No. 428 (2021-2022 Reg. Sess.), as amended Mar. 18, 2021, p. 6, italics added.)

The Board notes that the Howard Jarvis Taxpayers Association (Jarvis Association) opposed AB 428. The Jarvis Association argued: ““AB 428 seeks to undo the overwhelming approval of Measure K in San Bernardino County that amended the County Charter to impose a term limit of one term and reduced the total compensation for each member of the Board of Supervisors to $5,000 per month.” (Assem. Com. on Elections, Analysis of Assem. Bill No. 428, supra, at p. 4.) The Board concludes that “the Legislature contemplated that the passage of AB 428 would ‘undo’ Measure K.”

Actually, in the face of the Jarvis Association’s comment (Assem. Com. on Elections, Analysis of Assem. Bill No. 428, supra, at p. 1), the author of AB 428 “indicated that the intent of this bill is not to overturn Measure K.” (Id. at p. 3, italics added.)

The Senate Committee on Governance and Finance observed that the effect of AB 428 on Measure K was not clear; it expressed concern about “thwarting the will of the voters.” (Sen. Com. on Gov. & Fin., Analysis of Assem. Bill No. 428, supra, at p. 4.) In response to this “potential legal ambiguity,” AB 428 was amended so as to provide expressly that it “shall not affect any term limits that were legally in effect prior to January 1, 2022” (Sen. Com. on Elections and Const. Amends., Analysis of Assem. Bill No. 428, supra, at pp. 5-6.) There was no need to amend its compensation limit, because, as already discussed, the Legislature knew it most likely did not apply to a charter county.

Plainly, then, the Legislature did not contemplate that AB 428 would undo Measure K. To the contrary, it agreed with the Jarvis Association that the unamended version threatened Measure K, and thus it amended AB 428 so as to let Measure K stand.

In sum, then, the author of AB 428 may have intended it to apply to charter counties. The Legislature as a whole, however, was made aware that section 25300 — both before and after AB 428 — most likely did not and could not apply to charter counties.

B. Minimum Wage Laws.

Second, the Board contends that the compensation limit violates federal and state minimum wage laws.

The trial court rejected this contention based on lack of evidence. It ruled: “Even though it is implied the Board may be paid less than minimum wage after deduction of all benefits, such contention is not demonstrated. It is based on speculation.” Again, we agree.

Measure K’s compensation limit is $5,000 a month. The Board points out that the minimum wage of $15 an hour for 40 hours a week works out to $2,600 a month. It adds, “[F]ederal law requires that the County match a Medicare tax at 1.45 percent of the supervisor’s salary, and state and local pension laws require that the County match each supervisor’s pension contribution at 17.54 percent of the supervisor’s salary. These benefits alone require a minimum of $493.74. When adding in other legally mandated benefits such as worker’s compensation premiums, travel reimbursement^[9] and disability insurance, among others, . . . Measure K’s terms immediately risk requiring that the County violate California’s minimum wage law.”

It must be remembered that this action is a challenge to Measure K on its face. “On a facial challenge, we will not invalidate a statute unless it ‘pose[s] a present total and fatal conflict with applicable constitutional prohibitions.’ [Citations.] . . . ‘[P]etitioners cannot prevail by suggesting that in some future hypothetical situation constitutional problems may possibly arise as to the particular application of the statute.’ [Citation.]” (California School Boards Assn. v. State of California (2019) 8 Cal.5th 713, 723-724.)

The Board’s evidence fails to establish that Measure K will necessarily violate superseding federal and state law. Indeed, as the Board itself says, “it is presently impossible to determine whether the County will be in violation of the law” It hypothesizes a future increase of the minimum wage to $20 an hour, and even then it says only that “a supervisor’s compensation would be a minimum of $4,125 — a number which does not include the numerous other required benefit payments under state and federal law.” We cannot invalidate Measure K on such hypothetical grounds.

⁹ Measure K defines “compensation” as “the actual cost to the County of all benefits of whatever kind or nature including but not limited to salary, allowances, credit cards, health insurance, life insurance, leave, retirement, memberships, portable communications devices, and vehicle allowances.” Thus, the compensation limit does not apply to the reimbursement of outlays benefiting the county, including travel reimbursement.

In a subsidiary contention, the Board argues that, if the county could comply with minimum wage laws by having supervisors work part-time, that would impair essential government functions. Again, however, this is a purely hypothetical argument that we cannot reach in this appeal.

C. San Bernardino County Code section 13.0614.

Third, the Board contends that the compensation limit improperly overturns San Bernardino County Code section 13.0614 (section 13.0614) without a referendum.

The Board did not raise this argument below. Nevertheless, “[g]enerally, on appeal, a judgment or order will be affirmed if it is correct on any theory, regardless of the trial court’s reasons; thus, a respondent may assert a new theory to establish that an order was correct on that theory ‘unless doing so would unfairly prejudice appellant by depriving him or her of the opportunity to litigate an issue of fact.’ [Citation.]” (Bailon v. Superior Court (2002) 98 Cal.App.4th 1331, 1339.) The Board’s argument is purely legal.

Section 13.0614 is a lengthy ordinance governing the compensation of elected county officials. It requires that supervisors be provided with certain benefits, including retirement benefits, medical, dental, and vision insurance, life insurance, long-term disability insurance, a cell phone allowance, health club membership, an annual physical examination, tuition reimbursement, and membership dues.¹⁰ (§ 13.0614, subd. (c).)

The Board asserts that “Measure K renders it impossible for supervisors to be paid the amounts [section 13.0614] requires.” Once again, however (see part IV.B, ante), this is speculation; there is no evidence of this.

Separately and alternatively, even assuming the Board’s assertion is true, Measure K is part of the county charter; section 13.0614 is a mere county ordinance. Accordingly, to the extent that they conflict, section 13.0614 is invalid. (See City and County of San Francisco v. Cooper (1975) 13 Cal.3d 898, 923-924.)

The Board implicitly recognizes this principle. It therefore argues that the voters cannot invalidate an ordinance by initiative rather than by referendum. It cites article XI, section 1, subdivision (b) of the California Constitution, which, as relevant here, provides: “Except as provided in subdivision (b) of Section 4 of this article, each governing body shall prescribe by ordinance the compensation of its members, but the ordinance prescribing such compensation shall be subject to referendum.” Again, however (see part III, ante), section 3(b) and section 4(b), taken together, give the voters

¹⁰ It also requires that supervisors be reimbursed for certain expenses, such as travel and transportation. (§ 13.0614, subds. (c)(5), (c)(6).) Once again, however, reimbursement is not “compensation” for purposes of Measure K’s $5,000 compensation limit. (See fn. 9, ante.)

Supervisors are also entitled to make voluntary contributions that can be used for certain purposes (medical, 401(k) plans, 457 plans, dependent care) without being subject to income tax. (§ 13.0614, subds. (c)(7), (c)(8), (c)(12).) As these come out of supervisors’ salaries, they, too, are not compensation within the meaning of Measure K.

in a charter county the power to amend a charter by initiative, so no referendum is needed.

VI

THE SINGLE-SUBJECT RULE

The Board contends that Measure K, by combining the one-term limit and the compensation limit, violates the single-subject rule.

The trial court rejected this contention. It ruled that both provisions were “reasonably germane to ensuring the member of the Board is about public service versus being paid a high salary or becoming a career politician.”

Under the California Constitution, “[a]n initiative measure embracing more than one subject may not be submitted to the electors or have any effect.” (Cal. Const., art. II, § 8, subd. (d).) “This rule applies to local as well as statewide initiatives. [Citation.]” (Shea Homes Limited Partnership v. County of Alameda (2003) 110 Cal.App.4th 1246, 1255.)

“[The California Supreme Court has] upheld a variety of initiative measures in the face of a single-subject challenge, emphasizing that the initiative process occupies an important and favored status in the California constitutional scheme and that the single-subject requirement should not be interpreted in an unduly narrow or restrictive fashion that would preclude the use of the initiative process to accomplish comprehensive, broad-based reform in a particular area of public concern. [Citations.]’ [Citation.]

“[T]he single-subject provision does not require that each of the provisions of a measure effectively interlock in a functional relationship. [Citation.] It is enough that the various provisions are reasonably related to a common theme or purpose.’ [Citation.] Accordingly, [the Supreme Court has] upheld initiative measures ““which fairly disclose a reasonable and common sense relationship among their various components in furtherance of a common purpose.” [Citation.]’ [Citations.] The governing principle is that ““[a]n initiative measure does not violate the single-subject requirement if, despite its varied collateral effects, all of its parts are “reasonably germane” to each other,’ and to the general purpose or object of the initiative. [Citations.]” [Citation.] The ‘reasonably germane’ standard is applied ‘in an accommodating and lenient manner so as not to unduly restrict . . . the people’s right to package provisions in a single bill or initiative.’ [Citations.]” (Briggs v. Brown (2017) 3 Cal.5th 808, 828-829.)

The Board does not attack the trial court’s ruling that both provisions of Measure K are reasonably germane to ensuring that Board members are devoted to public service. Instead, it argues only that, if Measure K is severable, then it necessarily concerns more than one subject. It provides no authority for this argument. The test under the single-subject rule (all provisions must be “reasonably germane” to each other) is very different from the test for severability (“[t]he invalid provision must be grammatically, functionally, and volitionally separable”). (California Redevelopment Assn. v. Matosantos (2011) 53 Cal.4th 231, 271.)

We need not decide this issue. The trial court ruled that Measure K is not severable. The Board agrees. Because we are upholding both the one-term term limit and the compensation limit, there is no need for us to decide whether Measure K is severable. And because the Board is not contending that Measure K is severable, we need not decide whether, if it were severable, it would violate the single-subject rule.

APPLICATION OF MEASURE K TO THE NEW SUPERVISORS

Renner contends that the trial court erred by ruling that Measure K did not apply to the newly elected supervisors. This depends, in part, on when the new supervisors took office and on when Measure K went into effect. Renner and the Board disagree on both points.

A. When Did the New Supervisors Take Office?

Under both the old county charter and Measure J, the new supervisors' terms were to begin on the first Monday in December, which in 2020 was December 7.¹¹ Accordingly, on December 7, 2020, the new supervisors were sworn in. The trial court ruled that, pursuant to the county charter, the new supervisors' terms did, in fact, begin on December 7, 2020.

Renner relies on article II, section 20 of the California Constitution, which provides: "Terms of elective offices provided for by this Constitution, other than ¹¹ Measure J also provided that, after 2020, supervisors' terms would begin on the first Monday after the first day of January following their election.

Members of the Legislature, commence on the Monday after January 1 following election.” Our Supreme Court, however, has held that this governs only state elective offices, not local elective offices. (In re Stuart (1879) 53 Cal. 745, 748 (Stuart); accord, Barton v. Kalloch (1880) 56 Cal. 95, 104-105.)

Stuart noted that “State officers, such as the Governor and the other officers who constitute the Executive Department of the State Government . . . are officers whose election is absolutely provided for by the Constitution itself.” (Stuart, supra, 53 Cal. at p. 748.) It then relied on former article XI, section 5, of the California Constitution, which allowed the Legislature to “fix the[] terms of office” of “county . . . and municipal officers” (Stuart, supra, at p. 748.)

Renner argues, however, that Stuart is no longer good law. She claims that, when Stuart was decided, the only officers whose election was “provided for by th[e] Constitution” were state officers; since then, however, the Constitution has been amended to provide for county supervisors. Not so.

In the original 1879 Constitution, article V, section 2 provided: “The Governor shall be elected by the qualified electors at the time and places of voting for members of the Assembly, and shall hold his office four years from and after the first Monday after the first day of January subsequent to his election” (Italics added.)

By contrast, article XI, section 5 of the Constitution, on which Stuart relied, said: “The Legislature . . . shall provide for the election or appointment, in the several counties, of Boards of Supervisors . . . and shall . . . fix their terms of office.” (Italics added.) Thus, Stuart drew a distinction between state officers like the governor, “whose election is absolutely provided for by the Constitution itself,” and county supervisors, whose election and terms were to be provided for by the Legislature. (Stuart, supra, 53 Cal. at p. 748.)

Similarly, the Constitution now states: “The Governor shall be elected every fourth year at the same time and places as members of the Assembly and hold office from the Monday after January 1” (Cal. Const., art. V, § 2, italics added.) It also states: “The Legislature shall provide for . . . an elected governing body in each county.” (Cal. Const., art XI, § 1, subd. (b), italics added.) Moreover, it provides that, in a charter county, the charter is to provide for “[t]he . . . terms . . . of members of the governing body.” (Cal. Const., art XI, § 4, subd. (b).) Thus, Stuart’s reasoning is still sound — at least as to a charter county, the Legislature is to provide for the election of supervisors, and the county charter is to provide for their terms. Article II, section 20 still does not apply.

We also note that, in several charter counties, supervisors do not take office on the Monday after January 1. Los Angeles County provides by charter for supervisors’ terms to begin on the first Monday in December. (L.A. County Charter, art. II, § 6.) Sacramento and Santa Clara Counties provide for them to begin on the first Monday in January. (Sac. County Charter, art. IV, § 9; Santa Clara County Charter, art. II, § 202.) Likewise, San Francisco provides for them to begin on January 8. (S.F. Charter, § 2.101.) This reflects a general understanding that a charter county can choose its own date.

Thus, we agree with the trial court that the new supervisors took office on December 7, 2020.

B. When Did Measure K Go into Effect?

Measure K itself provided: “To the extent permitted by law, the provisions of this Charter Amendment shall be effective on voter approval of the initiative as provided by California law.” The introductory clause — “[t]o the extent provided by law” — seems to indicate that it was not intended to override any statutory and constitutional provisions that may apply. We need not decide this, however, because Renner does not argue that Measure K became effective immediately. We deem that argument forfeited.

The parties have cited multiple statutes that they claim govern when a charter amendment goes into effect.

First, Renner cites Article II, section 10, subdivision (a) of the California Constitution, which provides: “An initiative statute . . . approved by a majority of votes cast thereon takes effect on the fifth day after the Secretary of State files the statement of the vote for the election at which the measure is voted on”

Case law establishes that Article II, section 10, subdivision (a) of the Constitution applies only to statewide initiatives; local initiatives are governed by a parallel statutory scheme, which includes Elections Code section 9122. (Howard Jarvis Taxpayers Association v. City and County of San Francisco (2021) 60 Cal.App.5th 227, 239; City and County of San Francisco v. All Persons Interested in Matter of Proposition C (2020) 51 Cal.App.5th 703, 709-710 & 710, fn. 2.)

Government Code section 23723 provides: “[A] proposed [charter¹²] amendment . . . shall not take effect until accepted and filed by the Secretary of State . . .” (Gov. Code, § 23723; see also id., § 23724.) The trial court ruled that this was the controlling provision.¹³

However, Elections Code section 9102 provides: “Any proposal to . . . amend . . . a county charter by initiative petition . . . shall be subject to this article.” Elections Code section 9122 — part of the same article — then provides: “If a majority of the voters voting on a proposed ordinance vote in its favor, the ordinance shall become a valid and binding ordinance of the county. The ordinance shall be considered as adopted upon the date the vote is declared by the board of supervisors, and shall go into effect 10 days after that date.”

There is an inescapable conflict between Elections Code sections 9102 and 9122, on one hand, and Government Code section 23723, on the other. They are “irreconcilable, clearly repugnant, and so inconsistent that the two cannot have concurrent operation.’ [Citation.]” (See Lopez v. Sony Electronics, Inc. (2018) 5 Cal.5th 627, 637, internal quotation marks omitted.)

The Board plumps for Government Code section 23723. It cites Board of Supervisors v. McMahon (1990) 219 Cal.App.3d 286 (McMahon), which remarked that the county charter amendment in that case “became effective . . . when the Secretary of State accepted and filed it. (See Gov. Code § 23723.)” (Id. at p. 292.) McMahon, however, was decided in March 1990; as we will discuss in (perhaps excruciating) detail momentarily, the statutory predecessors of Elections Code sections 9102 and 9122 did not become effective until September 1990. In any event, there was no issue in McMahon as to the precise date on which the charter amendment there became effective. “It is axiomatic that cases are not authority for propositions that are not considered. [Citation.]” (California Building Industry Assn. v. State Water Resources Control Bd. (2018) 4 Cal.5th 1032, 1043.)

“‘If conflicting statutes cannot be reconciled, later enactments supersede earlier ones [citation], and more specific provisions take precedence over more general ones [citation].’ [Citation.] But when these two rules are in conflict, the rule that specific provisions take precedence over more general ones trumps the rule that later-enacted statutes have precedence. [Citations.]” (State Dept. of Public Health v. Superior Court (2015) 60 Cal.4th 940, 960-961.)

We cannot say that either set of statutes is more specific than the other. Arguably, Elections Code section 9122, standing alone, is more general than Government Code section 23723, because it applies to initiative county ordinances as well as initiative county charter amendments. However, Elections Code section 9102 very specifically makes Elections Code section 9122 applicable to initiative county charter amendments.

We turn, then, to which set of statutes was enacted latest.

Government Code section 23723 was enacted in 1969 (Stats. 1969, ch. 1264, § 1, p. 2470) and most recently amended in 1975. (Stats. 1975, ch. 238, § 10, p. 627.)

Elections Code sections 9102 and 9122 were both enacted in 1994. (Stats. 1994, ch. 920, § 2, pp. 4690-5208.)

Elections Code section 9122 replaced Elections Code former section 3716 (Stats. 1994, ch. 920, § 2, p. 5168), enacted in 1976. (Stats. 1976, ch. 248, § 3, p. 503.) That, in turn, replaced Elections Code former section 3717, enacted in 1961. (Stats. 1961, ch. 23, § 3717, p. 632.) That replaced Elections Code former section 1617, enacted in 1939. (Stats. 1939, ch. 26, p. 632.) And that replaced former Political Code section 4058, enacted in 1911. (Stats. 1911, ch. 342, § 1, pp. 577-580.)

The most recent three of these were all identically worded; the 1911 original had more verbiage, but it was identical in all relevant respects. Thus, like current Elections Code section 9122, all of its statutory predecessors were worded in terms of an initiative county “ordinance.” Standing alone, they did not purport to apply to an initiative amendment to a county charter.

Meanwhile, Elections Code section 9102 replaced Elections Code former section 3701.5, enacted in 1990 (Stats. 1990, ch. 1161, § 12, p. 4864) and effective on September 21, 1990. (Stats. 1990, ch. 1161, § 32, pp. 4857, 4870.) Again, the wording of Elections Code former section 3701.5 was identical to current Elections Code section 9102.

Crucially, before 1990, there was no statute (like Elections Code section 9102) making an initiative county charter amendment subject to Elections Code section 9122 or any of its statutory predecessors.

It follows that Elections Code sections 9102 and 9122, taken together, must be regarded as enacted in 1990. (Gov. Code, § 9605, subd. (a).) Thus, they superseded Government Code section 23723. And thus, under Elections Code sections 9102 and 9122, Measure K went into effect 10 days after the vote was declared by the Board — namely, on December 18, 2020.

C. Is Measure K Impermissibly Retroactive If It Applies to the New Supervisors?

As we have just held, the new supervisors took office on December 7, 2020 (see part VI.A, ante), and Measure K went into effect on December 18, 2020 (see part VI.B, ante). The Board contends that, if Measure K applies to the new supervisors, it is retroactive in violation of Government Code section 25000, subdivision (b).

Government Code section 25000, subdivision (b), provides: “Any proposal to limit the number of terms a member of the board of supervisors may serve on the board of supervisors shall apply prospectively only.” This language was not added by AB 428; it was enacted in 1995. (Stats. 1995, ch. 432, § 4, pp. 3407-3408.)

Even aside from Government Code section 25000, “statutes do not operate retrospectively unless the Legislature plainly indicates otherwise. [Citation.]” (In re S.B. (2004) 32 Cal.4th 1287, 1296.) Nothing in Measure K indicates that it intended to operate retroactively.¹⁴ The question, then, is whether Measure K is impermissibly retroactive if it applies to the new supervisors.

“‘[D]eciding when a statute operates “retroactively” is not always a simple or mechanical task’ [citation] and ‘comes at the end of a process of judgment concerning the nature and extent of the change in the law and the degree of connection between the operation of the new rule and a relevant past event’ [citation]. In exercising this judgment, ‘familiar considerations of fair notice, reasonable reliance, and settled expectations offer sound guidance.’ [Citation.]

“In general, application of a law is retroactive only if it attaches new legal consequences to, or increases a party’s liability for, an event, transaction, or conduct that was completed before the law’s effective date. [Citations.] Thus, the critical question for determining retroactivity usually is whether the last act or event necessary to trigger application of the statute occurred before or after the statute’s effective date. [Citations.] A law is not retroactive ‘merely because some of the facts or conditions upon which its application depends came into existence prior to its enactment.’ [Citation.]” (People v. Grant (1999) 20 Cal.4th 150, 157.)

Armstrong v. County of San Mateo (1983) 146 Cal.App.3d 597 (Armstrong) dealt with article XIII A, section 2, subdivision (b) of the California Constitution, which went into effect on July 1, 1978. (Id. at p. 604.) It allowed tax authorities to assess real property for the 1978-79 tax year at its assessed value in the 1975-76 tax year, plus an “inflation factor” of two percent per year. (Id. at pp. 604-605.)

The appellate court held that this was not retroactive. (Armstrong, supra, 146 Cal.App.3d at pp. 613-614.) “It is well settled that ‘[a] statute does not operate retroactively merely because some of the facts or conditions upon which its application depends came into existence before the enactment.’ [Citation.] Application of the inflation factor prior to the effective date of article XIII A does not give the 1975-76 full cash value assessment or the pre-1978 adjustments thereof ‘an effect different from that which they had under previously existing law,’ such as, for example, by retroactively increasing taxes due in 1975-76 or any other tax year prior to the effective date of the article. Rather it merely utilizes facts existing prior to enactment of the article to determine tax rates to be applied prospectively from the effective date.” (Ibid., fn. omitted.)

In Sheyko v. Saenz (2003) 112 Cal.App.4th 675 (Sheyko), the Legislature passed a statute requiring aid applicants and recipients to be fingerprinted in accordance with the Statewide Fingerprint Imaging System (SFIS) as a condition of eligibility for benefits. (Id. at pp. 684-686.) The trial court ruled that, as applied to persons who were applicants but not recipients when the statute went into effect, the statute was impermissibly retroactive. (Id. at p. 702.)

The appellate court held that the statute was not retroactive at all. (Sheyko, supra, 112 Cal.App.4th at pp. 702-703.) It explained: “‘Application . . . is retroactive only when it gives a different and potentially unfair legal effect to actions taken in reliance on the preenactment law.’ [Citation.]” (Id. at p. 702.) “SFIS compliance is an eligibility requirement [citation] and recipients lose their entitlement as soon as they lose their eligibility. [Citation.] It would be no different than the Legislature changing some other eligibility condition, such as maximum income: That new cutoff would apply to all recipients, regardless of when they became recipients. No recipient has a reasonable expectation that eligibility conditions will not change. Nobody loses past benefits for present noncompliance with SFIS.” (Id. at pp. 702-703.) “[E]ligibility is continually reevaluated to see if the present conditions of eligibility are met. This means the SFIS regulations do not ‘materially alter the legal significance’ of applying for benefits, nor give ‘a different and potentially unfair legal effect to actions taken in reliance on the preenactment law.’ [Citation.]” (Id. at p. 703.)

Here, once the new supervisors were elected, they did have a vested right to remain in office for one term. However, they had no vested right to run for a second term. They could hardly have had a reasonable expectation that they could run for a second term, as Measure K had already been proposed and was on the same ballot as they were. In any event, the Board does not point to any way in which they relied on any such expectation.

Much as in Sheyko, the change in the law here affects the new supervisors' eligibility for future office. Thus, they could always lose their eligibility due to a statutory change. That is true even if, as here, ““some of the facts or conditions upon which its application depends came into existence prior to its enactment.” [Citation.]” (People v. Grant, supra, 20 Cal.4th at p. 157.) As in Armstrong, the one-term limit merely looks at facts existing prior to its enactment to determine eligibility, to be applied prospectively from the provision's effective date. The one-term limit is analogous to a minimum age requirement, which looks at an event in the past — the person's birth — to determine his or her present eligibility to drink, smoke, run for office, etc.

Measure K cannot and does not kick out of office those supervisors who were already serving a second or third term. That would indeed be a prohibited retroactive application. However, it will bar them — just as it bars the new supervisors — from serving another term later.¹⁵

D. Does Measure K Violate AB 428 If It Applies to the New Supervisors?

The Board contends that applying Measure K to the new supervisors would violate AB 428.

¹⁵ We therefore do not discuss Renner's contention that the charter provision that supervisors' terms begin on the first Monday of December is unconstitutional.

Government Code section 25000, subdivision (b), as amended by AB 428, provides:

“(1) . . . [T]he residents of [a] county may propose, by initiative, a proposal to limit to no fewer than two terms . . . a member of the board of supervisors may serve on the board of supervisors. . . .

“(2) The changes made to this subdivision by [AB 428] shall not affect any term limits that were legally in effect prior to January 1, 2022, in any county.”

As we held in part VI.B, ante, Measure K went into effect on December 18, 2020. Accordingly, the one-term limit does not violate AB 428.

The Board argues that the Legislature intended AB 428 to overturn Measure K. “It is well established, however, that legislative intent should not be resorted to where a statute is clear on its face.” (Greb v. Diamond Internat. Corp. (2013) 56 Cal.4th 243, 256.) In any event, as we discussed in part IV.A.2, ante, the Legislature did not intend AB 428 to abrogate Measure K; indeed, it amended AB 428 and added the January 1, 2022 start date to make sure it would not.

E. Does Measure K Violate Provisions Protecting Supervisors' Compensation?

1. Statutory protection against reduction of compensation.

The Board relies on Government Code section 1235,¹⁶ which provides: “The salary of any elected public office shall not be reduced during an election year after any candidate for that particular office has filed the requisite forms declaring his or her candidacy for that particular office.” Renner does not contend that, under the home rule doctrine (see part IV.A.1, ante), Measure K trumps Government Code section 1235. We deem her to have forfeited any such contention.

Again, Measure K went into effect on December 18, 2020. (See part VI.B, ante.) That was “during an election year.” While the record does not show exactly when the new supervisors filed their candidacy forms, it had to be sometime before they were elected, on November 3, 2020. It follows that the compensation limit cannot apply to the new supervisors.

2. Constitutional protection against reduction of compensation.

The Board also asserts that its members have constitutional protection against the reduction of their compensation during their terms. Somewhat unhelpfully, Renner does not respond to this contention.

Because we have just held that, under Government Code section 1235, the compensation provision of Measure K cannot apply to the new supervisors (see part VI.E.1, ante), we do not decide this question. (See Thompson v. Department of Corrections (2001) 25 Cal.4th 117, 129 [“we do not address constitutional questions unless necessary.”].)

VIII

THE TEMPORARY RESTRAINING ORDER

Renner contends that, whether Measure K was valid or not, the trial court erred by enjoining City Clerk Monell from certifying, authenticating, and recording it.

A county charter amendment must be “certified and authenticated by the chairperson and clerk of the governing body[,] . . . attested by the county elections official, . . . recorded in the office of the recorder of the county[,] . . . filed in the office of the county elections official,” and “file[d] . . . with the Secretary of State” (Gov. Code, § 23713, incorporated by Gov. Code, § 23724.)

Renner does not cite any portion of the record showing that the trial court ever actually issued an injunction against this. She has not included the TRO itself in the record, and, as noted in part III, ante, the trial court never issued a permanent injunction. Thus, Renner has forfeited this contention. (See Cal. Rules of Court, rule 8.204(a)(1)(C); Brown v. El Dorado Union High School Dist. (2022) 76 Cal.App.5th 1003, 1021.)

Separately and alternatively, any such error is harmless and/or moot. Measure K went into effect on December 18, 2020, regardless of when or even whether it was certified, authenticated, recorded, or filed. (See part VI.B, ante.) Renner has not pointed out any other way in which Monell’s failure to perform her statutory duties was prejudicial.

In any event, when we reverse a judgment, we have the power to “direct that the parties be returned so far as possible to the positions they occupied before the enforcement of . . . the judgment or order. In doing so, the reviewing court may order restitution on reasonable terms and conditions of all property and rights lost by the erroneous judgment or order, so far as such restitution is consistent with rights of third parties” (Code Civ. Proc., § 908.) Hence, we will direct the trial court to allow county officials to perform their duties, and also to order that their performance be deemed to relate back, nunc pro tunc, to the dates when they should have performed them.

At first glance, these dates might appear speculative. Significantly, however, Measure J and Measure K were passed at the same time. It stands to reason that Measure K would have been certified, authenticated, recorded, and filed at the same time as Measure J (unless the Board deliberately slow-walked Measure K). Therefore, we will direct the trial court, on remand, to ascertain when Measure J was certified, authenticated, recorded, and filed and to set forth these dates in its nunc pro tunc order.

IX

DISPOSITION

The trial court's order granting the petition is reversed. On remand, the trial court must ascertain the dates on which Measure J was certified, authenticated, recorded, and filed. It must then enter a new order, granting a writ and/or an injunction prohibiting the application of the compensation limit to the new supervisors, but otherwise denying the petition and entering judgment against the Board on the complaint. The order must provide that Monell and all other county officials may carry out their duties to certify, authenticate, record, and file Measure K. It must also provide that Measure K is deemed to have been certified, authenticated, recorded, and filed on the same dates as Measure J, and it must specify those dates.

Renner is awarded costs on appeal against the Board.

[San Bernardino County Board of Supervisors v. Monell; Renner, E077772]

MENETREZ, J., Dissenting.

Nearly every issue in this appeal is moot, so nearly everything in the majority opinion is advisory. Because I would not issue an advisory opinion on moot issues, I respectfully dissent.

Measure K, approved by the voters of San Bernardino County (the County) in 2020, imposed certain term limits and compensation limits for members of the board of supervisors. After passage, Measure K was challenged in the superior court, which invalidated it as unconstitutional. This appeal was taken from that ruling.

Measure D, approved by the County's voters in 2022, imposed new term limits and compensation limits for members of the board of supervisors. Measure D supersedes Measure K in its entirety. Measure D has been challenged in court, but to date no part of it has been invalidated.

After Measure D passed, the County requested that we stay this appeal pending resolution of the Measure D litigation. We invited and received supplemental briefs from the parties on the stay request and whether the appeal is moot. The County's request for a stay was denied (over my objection). But the County renewed the request at oral argument, and we can also stay an appeal on our own motion.

Because Measure D is currently in effect, no provision of Measure K is currently in effect. Consequently, it is presently impossible for us to grant effective relief on this appeal. The appeal is from an order invalidating Measure K. But no matter what we do,

Measure K cannot go back into effect unless and until Measure D is invalidated. The appeal is therefore moot. (Lockaway Storage v. County of Alameda (2013) 216 Cal.App.4th 161, 174–175.)

The only issue that presently is not moot is whether Measure K’s compensation limits apply from 2020 to 2022, between the passage of Measure K and the passage of Measure D. But in the future, additional issues might cease to be moot if Measure D is invalidated in whole or in part. We should accordingly stay this appeal until there is a final judgment in the Measure D litigation. Only then will we have a final determination of which issues concerning Measure K are not moot. At present, only one of them is.

I would vacate submission and stay the appeal pending final resolution of the Measure D litigation. I therefore respectfully dissent.
