Overall, the AOC's research staff has decreased by approximately 45% in recent years. In order to optimize the effectiveness of the new organizational structure—under which all researchers have now been grouped in the same division—and to maximize the efficient use of remaining staff, the following formal protocol for communications and coordination of research resources has been developed. The protocol was developed in lieu of consolidating all research staff within a single office within the division because of the unique nature of the work typically done by researchers in each office. That is, researchers in the Office of Court Research (a part of the Court Operations Special Services Office) typically engage in wide-scale, “project”-style research, such as recent work on judicial and staff workload models, as well as the resultant work on models for allocating fiscal resources to the trial courts. By comparison, researchers in the Center for Families, Children & the Courts and the Criminal Justice Court Services Office have subject matter expertise in particular case types or operations (e.g. family, juvenile, domestic violence, tribal, criminal justice, collaborative justice, civil representation pilots). This subject matter expertise increases efficiencies in our efforts to work both within the judicial branch and AOC and in the work with external partners. These researchers conduct research as subject matter experts in multi-disciplinary teams, serving trial courts in projects such as caseload management, outcome measurement, implementation of legislative mandates and assessment of their costs and benefits to trial courts at the local level.

Protocol

1. An email distribution list for all AOC researchers will be established to ensure that information of interest to all is shared easily, and that the various court groups that staff works with receive information that may be of interest to them across all research projects. In addition, AOC analysts and others may use the group to keep abreast of the division's research projects.
2. Managers and supervisors from each office will meet as needed—but at least every two months—to review current and proposed research projects, staffing and other resources; and to consider ways to provide additional assistance to the courts and meet needs for research at the AOC. Regular topics on the agenda will include:

- Review information requests from the trial and appellate courts to ensure prompt response;
- Review new requests for research assistance from the trial and appellate courts and AOC leadership; provide division director with options for responding to the request;
- Coordinate requests to the trial and appellate courts for information, including surveys, and minimize burdens on the courts;
- Assess current projects to identify places where efforts could be consolidated and the number of staff required for projects reduced;
- Make recommendations to the division director on changes needed in staff assignments;
- Develop educational resources and information sources for the trial and appellate courts to ensure they have adequate access to information derived from research projects and court statistics;
- Respond to Judicial Council advisory groups with research and information required on their annual agendas.

3. Staff will coordinate on grant proposals, budget change proposals, conference presentations, and other projects to prevent duplication of effort.

Council Directive 72.2

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts to consider SEC Recommendations 7-11(a) and (b) and 7-14 and implement the necessary organizational and staffing changes, contingent upon the council's approval of an organizational structure for the AOC and taking into account the results of the classification and compensation studies to be completed.

SEC Recommendation 7-14

A significant number of COSSO staff members, such as those in the Administration and Planning unit, are assigned to various functions in support of the Judicial Council. The recommended consolidation of Judicial Council support activities under the direction of the Chief of Staff will present opportunities for efficiencies and resource reductions.

As reported in February 2013, in terms of size/personnel, the former Administration and Planning Unit now comprises only the Court Operations Services Assistant Director and a single Court Services Analyst (CSA). In addition to assisting with overall management of the office, the Assistant Director plays a significant role with supporting the Court Language Access Services Program.

The Assistant Director and the single CSA are also responsible for administering and coordinating responses to requests for judicial administrative records under California Rules of Court, rule 10.500 on behalf of the Judicial Council, and the appellate courts.

With respect to the specific planning function, it had been handled primarily by a single staff person, the Assistant Director of the Court Operations Services Office, with assistance as needed from the Manager of the Special Services Program Support Office, which is also a part of COS. Recently, however, the support and activities for the Strategic Plan have been shifted to the Leadership Services Division. Because the staff of COS have other duties when not involved in planning, it was determined that it was appropriate they remain in COS.

This created a centralized team of staff responsible for all aspects of Judicial Council support in one office and under one division with leadership from the Executive Office through the Chief of Staff. Due to staffing reductions since 2012, EGG has limited its services to focus solely on editing and design of judicial council reports, forms, meeting minutes, high-level correspondence, and publications. |

On August 31, 2012, the Judicial Council approved a new organizational structure for the Administrative Office of the Courts (AOC) which realigned and renamed existing divisions into offices housed under one of three newly created divisions (Judicial Council and Court Leadership Services Division, Judicial and Court Operations Services Division, and Judicial and Court Administrative Services Division).

In addition to the realignment of divisions into new offices, the Editing and Graphics Group (EGG) from the Court Operations Special Services Office (formerly Court Programs and Services Division) was moved to the new Judicial Council Support Services Office in the Judicial Council and Trial Court Leadership Services Division under the Chief of Staff effective October 1, 2012.

This represents a modification from the SEC recommendation which recommended elimination of EGG. EGG was previously responsible for editorial and design services for all AOC materials and created correspondence-related guides and training. Over the last two years, however, the EGG unit has experienced staffing reductions and in turn has limited its services to focus solely on editing and design of Judicial Council reports, forms, meeting minutes, high-level correspondence, and publications. Given that the new focus for EGG is to support only Judicial Council documents and publications, EGG was moved into the new Judicial Council Support Services where the unit would work hand-in-hand with staff responsible for support to the Judicial Council.

ASSESSMENT OF IMPLEMENTATION

It was clarified that CJER provides the staffing and expertise to develop and provide education and training of Appellate Court Justices that is developed in part by the Appellate Curriculum Committee. Court Operations Services staff administers the budget to be used for this training. In addition, Appellate Court Services is transitioning the education conferences for appellate court managers and staff to CJER as well. CJER is currently participating with ACS staff in the development of the Appellate Managers conference, and will take responsibility for the staff conference the following year. ACS will maintain administration of the funds for these conferences, as it does for the Appellate Justice Institute and other appellate trainings.

The purpose of this memorandum is to request that the Judicial Council reconsider and rescind its directive 74 regarding restructuring of the Administrative Office of the Courts (AOC), which was presented by the Executive and Planning Committee (E&P) and approved by the council at its meeting of August 31, 2012. Directive 74 concerns the AOC's provision of continuing education services to the appellate courts, and reads:

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts that activities related to the education and training of Appellate Court Justices should be consolidated with the Education Division/CJER.

Directive 74 arises from an earlier recommendation, number 7-15, of the Strategic Evaluation Committee (SEC), which reads:

Some COSSO [Court Operations Special Services Office] staff are engaged in activities relating to the education and training of Appellate Court Justices. These functions should be consolidated with the Education Division/CJER.

While the Administrative Presiding Justices of the California Courts of Appeal understand and support the goal of consolidating functions within the AOC where doing so will lead to greater efficiencies, the recommended consolidation regarding appellate court continuing education will not do so. As described below, the current division of functions between the Office of Appellate Court Services (OACS)<sup>1</sup> and the Center for Judiciary Education and Research (CJER) ensures that funds dedicated to various operational needs of the appellate courts (including continuing education) are managed by a single office, OACS. Rather than improving efficiency, moving the administration of appellate court funds dedicated to continuing education expenses out of OACS is likely instead to lead to inefficiencies in the overall management of the appellate courts' budgets and inconsistencies in how appellate court funds are spent. The Administrative Presiding Justices believe that once the council has been fully briefed on the current status quo and its historic development, it will understand that the current bifurcation of duties as between OACS and CJER is both logical and efficient.

Current status of AOC services re appellate court continuing education

Currently, both CJER and OACS play a role in ensuring that appellate court justices and staff receive the continuing education required under the California Rules of Court.

CJER. CJER staff, working with the CJER Governing Committee's Appellate Practice Curriculum Committee and its Trial and Appellate Court Operations Curriculum Committee, develops general curricula for appellate justices, appellate research attorneys, and appellate court staff. These two curriculum committees are responsible for making recommendations to the CJER Governing Committee about programs and education products for appellate justices, attorneys, and staff during a two year period. These recommendations are reviewed and approved by the Governing Committee. Once approved, CJER recruits faculty and delivers that education through many different venues, such as statewide programs, videoconferences, and webinars for appellate justices and research attorneys, as well as videoconferences and broadcasts for appellate court staff.<sup>2</sup> CJER develops and delivers this education in much the same manner as it does for CJER's many trial court audiences. Unlike those other audiences, however, CJER does not directly pay for the costs associated with these programs and products. Instead, OACS pays using funds specially set aside in its budget for that purpose, as discussed below.

OACS. OACS's role in appellate court continuing education is primarily fiscal in nature. Specifically, OACS manages approximately $200,000 in funds which specifically set aside for use not only to fund statewide conferences for justices, appellate attorneys, and court staff in years in which they occur, but also to reimburse appellate court justices and staff for attendance at other educational programs, i.e., programs not sponsored by the AOC. In addition to its overall fiscal administration role, OACS also develops curricula for, and provides staff support to, statewide conferences for appellate court managers, administrators, and staff, in years in which those programs are approved by the Administrative Presiding Justices. Development of those curricula used to be performed by CJER staff, similar to how the conferences for appellate justices and attorneys are currently handled. Due to staff limitations, however, CJER was unable to continue developing the curricula for the appellate managers and staff conferences; OACS's predecessor division took over those responsibilities in approximately 2005.

Historical development of the respective roles of CJER and OACS with respect to appellate court education<sup>3</sup>

Before trial court funding, one of the AOC's original primary functions was to serve as administrative support for the California Supreme Court and Courts of Appeal. This included providing core infrastructural support in the areas of human resources, finance, and information technology, for example. At that time, education and training for the appellate courts were also provided through the AOC's Human Resources and Information Services divisions. With trial court funding and the expansion in the AOC's role in supporting the superior courts, new funding sources were created for trial court support, including funding for trial court judicial and administrative education. The funding structure for appellate education was not merged into these other funding sources, however. Rather, appellate education continued to be funded with AOC General Fund monies or monies obtained either through approved Budget Change Proposals and/or re-direction of funds from the Courts of Appeal. Indeed, OACS or its predecessors have been responsible for managing redirected appellate court funds (and other funding) for those purposes for at least twenty years, i.e., since at least the early 1990s.<sup>4</sup>

Fortunately, as the AOC's education-related staffing increased, CJER was able to absorb the responsibility for developing and delivering more and enhanced education to appellate justices and attorneys, provided that these educational efforts continued to be funded from the existing funding sources managed by OACS and its predecessors. What has developed over time as a result is a collaborative relationship in which CJER has been primarily responsible for content development and delivery, while OACS remains responsible primarily for funding and budget management.

<sup>3</sup> For ease of reading we have referred to each group by its current name. However, for purposes of historical discussion, both "CJER" and "OACS" should also be read as referring to the various predecessor offices/divisions/units of those two offices.

<sup>4</sup> Readily available records go back only to 1993, at which time it was already established that OACS's predecessor was responsible for administering funds to cover the cost of appellate court continuing education.

The current status quo is efficient and preferable to the Courts of Appeal and Supreme Court

The SEC recommendation on which E&P's later recommendation and the council's ultimate directive were premised appears to presuppose that the current status quo is somehow inefficient, and that moving the fiscal management aspect of appellate court continuing education to CJER will improve efficiencies. The Administrative Presiding Justices of the Courts of Appeal do not agree.

Since the early 1990s, OACS and its predecessors have been responsible for monitoring and administering a significant amount of funds earmarked not only for appellate court continuing education, but for numerous appellate court-related services. Examples include both in- and out-of-state travel for appellate justices and staff; meetings of both the Administrative Presiding Justices Advisory Committee and the California Appellate Court Clerks Association; meetings and expenses of the Appellate Indigent Defense Oversight Advisory Committee (AIDOAC); and others. Further, in addition to the annual amount that OACS currently manages on behalf of the appellate courts for education- and travel-related expenses, the office also manages a substantial amount of appellate court funds—again, for the direct benefit of the appellate courts—that are earmarked for annual technology-related expenses. These include network server refreshes, maintenance renewals, and hosting the Appellate Court Case Management System (ACCMS). Staff in OACS are very familiar with the operations and, more importantly, the budgets of the six Courts of Appeal and the Supreme Court. Further, each fiscal year staff in OACS work directly with the courts and the AOC's Fiscal Services Office to identify possible year-end usages for any surplus in the court funds managed by OACS.

On the other hand, CJER staff have no current responsibility for managing appellate court funds, nor do they have staff with the requisite knowledge about the appellate courts' budgets that would allow for such management. Changing the status quo would, therefore, represent a significant change, in that it would require a new group of AOC staff members to learn the nuances of the appellate courts' budgets. These staff would also have to coordinate carefully with OACS staff to ensure accurate fiscal reporting to appellate court leadership. And mechanically, staff from the Fiscal Services Office would be required in advance to separate out an appropriate level of funds from the monies currently managed by OACS to allow CJER to pay for appellate educational events. In the event that all such funds were not utilized in a particular fiscal year—or if additional funds were needed—a mechanism and process would need to be developed for transferring those funds between CJER and OACS. All of the above would, in the view of the Administrative Presiding Justices, increase inefficiency and lead to greater uncertainty as to appellate court budgeting, which is contrary to the spirit of the SEC recommendation and the Judicial Council directive that followed.

Conclusion

The recent creation of OACS has, in and of itself, greatly improved the efficiency of interactions between that office and CJER. In connection with OACS's formation, CJER has identified two staff members to serve as the principal points of contact and OACS liaisons on appellate education-related issues. This will ensure that both offices—that is, the content-delivery team and the fiscal management team—are both well apprised as to what the other is working on vis-à-vis appellate education. The fact that OACS is also responsible for providing lead staff duties to the Administrative Presiding Justices and Clerk/Administrators will also ensure that education-related decisions from appellate court leadership and internal issues of concern to appellate court leadership are communicated back and forth in a timely and efficient manner.

Based on the above, the Administrative Presiding Justices of the six districts of the California Court of Appeal respectfully request that the Judicial Council reconsider and rescind directive 74.

On August 31, 2012, the Judicial Council approved a new organizational structure for the Administrative Office of the Courts (AOC). The new organizational structure realigned and renamed existing divisions into offices housed under one of three newly created divisions (Judicial Council and Court Leadership Services Division, Judicial and Court Operations Services Division, and Judicial and Court Administrative Services Division).

In addition to the realignment of divisions into new offices, the Trial Court Leadership Services (TCLS) unit was moved from the former Court Programs and Services Division to Leadership Services Division under the Chief of Staff effective October 1, 2012.

As background, TCLS is primarily responsible for the support of the Trial Court Presiding Judges Advisory Committee, the Court Executives Advisory Committee, and the numerous working groups of these committees. This movement of TCLS to the Judicial Council and Court Leadership Services Division is consistent with SEC recommendation 7-18 which recommended moving TCLS under the new Executive Office "as matters of policy emanating from the Trial Court Presiding Judges Advisory Committee and Court Executives Advisory Committee often relate to branch-wide policies."

In January 2013, TCLS became a unit under the Trial Court Liaison office. Housing TCLS in the Trial Court Liaison Office under the Leadership Services Division provides the leadership of the Chief of Staff who is actively involved with policy decisions and branch-wide issues to ensure that Presiding Judges and Court Executive Officers are fully informed and aware of current issues affecting the branch.

Council Directive 78

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts to consider SEC Recommendation 7-19 and implement the necessary organizational changes, contingent upon the council's approval of an organizational structure for the AOC.

SEC Recommendation 7-19

The Education Division should be an office within the Judicial and Court Operations Services Division, under the direction of the Chief Operating Officer, rather than a stand-alone division. The Education Division/CJER manager position should be compensated at its current level.

This directive is now considered complete as follows:

Effective October 1, 2012, the directive that the Education Division no longer be a stand-alone division, was changed as part of a new organizational structure that was approved by the Judicial Council. This new structure reduced the JCC Executive Team to four positions (Administrative Director, Chief of Staff, Chief Operating Officer, and Chief Administrative Officer) and realigned and renamed existing divisions into offices housed under one of three newly created divisions (Judicial Council and Court Leadership Services Division, Judicial and Court Operations Services Division, and Judicial and Court Administrative Services Division). As part of the new structure, CJER was moved under the Operations & Programs Division, under the leadership of the Chief Operating Officer (currently vacant) consistent with the directive.

Additionally, on August 21, 2015 the JCC completed its Classification and Compensation Study that resulted in the implementation of a new salary structure for the organization. The compensation phase of the project followed the classification portion of the study that began in December 2013 and ended in March of 2015, when JCC staff received their new classification specifications. All positions in the JCC were evaluated, and JCC employees were subsequently assigned a classification and provided with information as to whether their salary fell within, above, or below the new salary ranges employee classifications.

The results of the compensation study validated that the pay range for the existing CJER Director was within the salary range for the “Director” classification pay range.

2015 California Rules of Court

Rule 10.474. Trial court managers, supervisors, and other personnel

(a) Applicability

All California trial court managers, supervisors, and other personnel must complete these minimum education requirements. All managers, supervisors, and other personnel should participate in more education than is required, related to each individual's responsibilities and in accordance with the education recommendations set forth in rule 10.479.

(b) Content-based requirements

- (1) Each new manager or supervisor must complete orientation courses within six months of becoming a manager or supervisor, unless the court's executive officer determines that the new manager or supervisor has already completed these orientation courses or courses covering equivalent content. The courses must include orientation about:
  - (A) The judicial branch of California;
  - (B) The local court; and
  - (C) Basic management and supervision.
- (2) Each new court employee who is not a manager or supervisor must complete orientation courses within six months of becoming a court employee, unless the employee's supervisor determines that the new court employee has already completed these orientation courses or courses covering equivalent content. The courses must include orientation about:
  - (A) The judicial branch of California;
  - (B) The local court; and
  - (C) Basic employee issues, such as sexual harassment and safety; and
  - (D) The employee's specific job.
- (3) The court executive officer may determine the appropriate content, delivery mechanism, and length of orientation based on the needs and role of each individual employee.

(c) Hours-based requirements

- (1) Each court manager or supervisor must complete 12 hours of continuing education every two years.
- (2) Each court employee who is not a manager or supervisor must complete 8 hours of continuing education every two years, with the exception of employees who do not provide court administrative or operational services. Those employees are not subject to the continuing education hours-based requirement but must complete any education or training required by law and any other education required by the court executive officer.
- (3) The orientation education required for new managers, supervisors, and other personnel under (b) does not apply toward the required hours of continuing education because it must be completed before they enter the two-year period. Each new manager, supervisor, or employee enters the two-year continuing education period on the first day of the quarter following his or her completion of the orientation education required under (b); the quarters begin on January 1, April 1, July 1, and October 1. Each manager, supervisor, or employee who enters the two-year continuing education period after it has begun must complete a prorated number of continuing education hours for that two-year period, based on the number of quarters remaining in it.

- (4) Any education offered by an approved provider (see rule 10.481(a)) and any other education, including education taken to satisfy a statutory, rules-based, or other education requirement, that is approved by the executive officer or the employee's supervisor as meeting the criteria listed in rule 10.481(b) applies toward the orientation education required under (b) and the continuing education required under (c)(1) and (2).
- (5) Each hour of participation in traditional (live, face-to-face) education; distance education such as broadcasts, videoconferences, and online coursework; and faculty service counts toward the requirement on an hour-for-hour basis. The court executive officer has discretion to determine the number of hours, if any, of traditional (live, face-to-face) education required to meet the continuing education requirement. Self-directed study is encouraged for professional development but does not apply toward the required hours.
- (6) A manager, supervisor, or employee who serves as faculty by teaching legal or judicial education to a legal or judicial audience may apply education hours as faculty service. Credit for faculty service counts toward the continuing education requirement in the same manner as all other types of education-on an hour-for-hour basis.
- (7) The court executive officer may require managers, supervisors, and other court personnel to participate in specific courses or to participate in education in a specific subject matter area as part of their continuing education.

(Subd (c) amended effective January 1, 2015; previously amended effective January 1, 2008, January 1, 2012, and January 1, 2013.)

(d) Extension of time

- (1) For good cause, the executive officer may grant a one-year extension of time to complete the education requirements in this rule. If an extension is granted, the subsequent two-year compliance period begins immediately after the extended compliance period ends, unless otherwise determined by the executive officer.
- (2) If the executive officer grants a request for an extension of time, the manager, supervisor, or employee who made the request, in consultation with the executive officer, must also pursue interim means of obtaining relevant educational content.

(e) Records of participation

- (1) Each court is responsible for tracking participation in education and for tracking completion of minimum education requirements for its managers, supervisors, and other personnel.
- (2) Each manager, supervisor, and employee must keep records of his or her own participation for two years after each course or activity that is applied toward the requirements.

Rule 10.474 amended effective January 1, 2015; adopted as rule 10.464 effective January 1, 2007; previously amended and renumbered effective January 1, 2008; previously amended effective January 1, 2012, and January 1, 2013.

Advisory Committee Comment

The time frame for completion of compliance courses based on statutory or regulatory mandates is unaffected by the one-year extension in (d)(1).

Executive Summary

Rule 10.491 of the California Rules of Court addresses minimum education requirements for Administrative Office of the Courts (AOC) executives, managers, supervisors, and other employees. The Rules and Projects Committee (RUPRO) recommends amending rule 10.491 regarding AOC staff education to give the Administrative Director of the Courts greater discretion and flexibility in using the AOC workforce.

Recommendation

The Rules and Projects Committee recommends that the Judicial Council amend rule 10.491, effective July 1, 2013, to allow the Administrative Director of the Courts to:

1. Grant a one-year extension of time for AOC staff to complete the required education, and
2. Determine the number of hours, if any, of live, face-to-face education required to meet the continuing education requirement.

The text of the amended rule is attached at pages 6–7.

Previous Council Action

Effective January 1, 2008, the Judicial Council adopted rule 10.491 as part of a comprehensive set of rules addressing judicial branch education. Subdivision (c) of the rule was amended, effective January 1, 2012, to provide more individual choice and flexibility in what and how many hours count toward the continuing education hours requirement. The amendments provide that an individual must complete at least half of his or her education requirement as a participant in traditional (live, face-to-face) education. In addition, the amendments removed limitations on online course work, self-directed study, and faculty service by counting all education hours in the same way.

Rationale for Recommendation

On May 25, 2012, the Strategic Evaluation Committee (SEC) issued its report on the Administrative Office of the Courts. Among the recommendations to the Judicial Council was the following recommendation concerning AOC and trial court education requirements:

Recommendation No. 7-23: As to training currently required of AOC staff and court personnel, the Judicial Council should examine and consider a relaxation of current mandatory requirements to allow the Administrative Director of the AOC and/or court executive officers greater discretion and flexibility in utilizing their workforces during times of budget constraints.

The council's Executive and Planning Committee (E&P) evaluated and prioritized each recommendation in the SEC report and presented them to the council on August 31, 2012. As to recommendation No. 7-23, E&P proposed and the council adopted the following:

Directive #79: E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Rules and Projects Committee to evaluate relaxation of mandatory education requirements to allow the Administrative Director of the Courts and Court Executive Officers greater discretion and flexibility in utilizing their workforces during times of budget constraints.

In response, RUPRO considered Directive #79; recommendations from Administer Director of the Courts Steven Jahr; the rules that apply to education for AOC staff, trial court staff, appellate court staff, and clerk/administrators of the appellate courts; and the compliance periods for each category of employees. In its deliberations, RUPRO recognized the importance of judicial branch education and did not consider recommending that the education requirements be eliminated. Because of the impending end of the compliance period for AOC staff education on December 31, 2013, RUPRO decided to address immediately the rule pertaining to AOC staff education.

RUPRO recommends amending rule 10.491, effective July 1, 2013, to give the Administrative Director of the Courts greater discretion and flexibility in using the AOC workforce. Specifically, RUPRO recommends that the rule be amended to provide the Administrative Director with discretion to grant a one-year, rather than six-month, extension of time to complete required education. (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 10.491(d).) The rule would provide that the next compliance period begins after the extended compliance period ends, unless the Administrative Director determines otherwise.<sup>1</sup> This would allow the Administrative Director to grant an extension to all AOC employees and extend the compliance period one year, if deemed necessary. But it also would maintain the authority of the Administrative Director to grant individual extensions based on specific needs, such as for an employee in a unit that is particularly short-staffed or an employee who experienced a prolonged illness, without extending the compliance period.

In addition, RUPRO recommends amending subdivision (c) to allow the Administrative Director the discretion to determine the number of hours, if any, of traditional (live, face-to-face) education required to meet the continuing education requirement. Because some education requirements are mandated by statute, an advisory committee comment would be added to the rule to provide that “[t]he time frame for completion of compliance courses based on statutory or regulatory mandates is unaffected by the one-year extension in (d)(1).”

RUPRO considered the education requirements for trial court staff stated in rules 10.474 and 10.478. Because the end of the compliance period for trial court staff education is December 31, 2014—more than a year away—and to determine trial court needs for staff education, RUPRO decided to solicit information from presiding judges and court executive officers in all superior courts. RUPRO has begun to do so through a letter from Justice Harry E. Hull, Jr., chair, asking courts’ views on relaxing the mandatory education requirements for trial court staff to allow court executive officers greater discretion and flexibility in use of their workforces. In addition, Justice Hull and Justice Robert L. Dondero, chair of the Center for Judicial Education and Research (CJER) Governing Committee, will attend the statewide joint meeting of trial court presiding judges and court executive officers on August 29 to continue this dialog.

Though Directive #79 does not address appellate court staff education, RUPRO recognized that appellate courts may have the same need for a relaxation of education requirements. Because the appellate court staff education compliance period ends December 31, 2013, Justice Hull attended a recent meeting of the Administrative Presiding Justices Advisory Committee to solicit members’ views. Administrative presiding justices saw no need to amend the rules to provide an extension of time for appellate court staff or to relax the requirement for face-to-face education.

<sup>1</sup> The current rule provides that an extension of time to complete the hours-based requirement does not affect the timing of the next two-year period.

Comments, Alternatives Considered, and Policy Implications

This proposal did not circulate for public comment. Under rule 10.22, a proposal need not be circulated for public comment if it presents a nonsubstantive technical change or correction or a minor substantive change that is unlikely to create controversy, or RUPRO finds that compelling circumstances require a different procedure. The compelling circumstances exception provides as follows:

The procedures established in this rule must be followed unless the Rules and Projects Committee finds that compelling circumstances necessitate a different procedure. The committee's finding and a summary of the procedure used must be presented to the council with any recommendation to the council made under this subdivision.

(Cal. Rules of Court, rule 10.22(g).)

The existing two-year compliance period provided in rule 10.491 for AOC staff is currently nearly three-quarters completed. The number of AOC staff has been reduced since early 2012, when the current compliance period began, and the number of education courses offered has similarly been reduced. There is thus an urgent need to provide the Administrative Director with the discretion to relax the mandatory education requirements to allow staff to obtain the required education over a longer period of time (three years rather than two) and through delivery methods such as online courses that allow employees to select the course times that work best for them.

Circulating this proposal would delay the effective date beyond July 1, 2013 would reduce the number of staff benefitting from an extended compliance period. If fewer staff benefit from the extended compliance period and elimination of the rule requirement for face-to-face education, the overall benefits of increasing staff availability to provide needed services to the courts will likewise be reduced.

Though RUPRO recognizes the benefits of circulating rule proposals for comment in ordinary times, the extraordinary times and circumstances now confronting the judicial branch and the particular subject of this proposal compel adoption of the proposal without circulation for comment. If approved by the council, the proposal will be circulated for comment after adoption.

RUPRO considered alternative rule amendments that would simply state that the compliance period ending December 31, 2013, is extended one year to December 31, 2014, or that would allow the Administrative Director to grant an extension of the hours-based education requirements, but not the content-based education requirements. RUPRO decided not to recommend these amendments and instead grant the Administrative Director as much flexibility as possible to relax education requirements as needed.

Implementation Requirements, Costs, and Operational Impacts

If the Administrative Director exercises the discretion provided to him to extend the time by which employees must complete their education requirements, there will be some minimal requirements and costs associated with tracking employee education. Similarly, the elimination of face-to-face education requirements will result in some minimal requirements and costs associated with tracking employee education. The proposal, however, is expected to have positive operational impacts by allowing AOC employees additional time to complete educational requirements and flexibility with respect to alternatives to live training, thereby increasing employee availability to provide needed services to the courts.

Changes in Education Requirements

On August 6, 2013, Chief Operating Officer Curt Child distributed a memo to all AOC employees announcing changes to the AOC Education Rule (CRC 10.491). With these changes, all AOC staff can fulfill their continuing education requirements through any combination of distance education, faculty service, or by attending live, face-to-face education programs. This means the requirement that 50% of your continuing education hours come from live, face-to-face classes has been eliminated for the current education period. In addition, Judge Jahr has also authorized a one-year extension for all AOC employees to complete their education requirements.

This memo provides detailed information addressing both of these changes. After reviewing this information, if you have questions about your individual education requirements, please contact Kathryn Brooks.

If You Complete Your Training Requirements in 2013

Employees who finish their education requirements before Wednesday, December 18 can continue to use HREMS without change. If you complete your education requirements for the current education period without using the extension, your HREMS Training Requirements Summary page will read "Requirements Complete." At this time, HREMS has not been re-programmed to reflect the elimination of the requirement that 50% of education hours must be obtained through live, face-to-face education. As a consequence, your current training record may temporarily appear incorrect if you have completed your requirements by obtaining education hours through additional distance education or faculty service. CJER staff will manually adjust your HREMS Training Requirements Summary page, and this will occur before the end of the calendar year (December 31, 2013).

CJER will issue a compliance report to all offices in early December; the compliance report will include a list of all of those employees who have completed their education requirements for the current period. Please note that even if you finish your requirements in 2013, you may need to complete a statutorily-required class in 2014. Please review the information below to see if this applies to you.

If You Use the Extension Period and Complete Your Training Requirements in 2014

If you use the extension period to complete your minimum education requirements, your HREMS Training Requirements Summary page will NOT read “Requirements Complete.” HREMS can continue to be used to register for classes during the extension period; however, the Training Requirements Summary portion will be frozen at the end of 2013. Instead of using HREMS to track your hours, you will be required to fill out a paper tracking form which will be submitted to CJER at the end of the extension period. CJER staff will record that your requirements are complete in the notes field of your 2012-2013 Training Requirement Status page; the top of this page will continue to read “Requirements Incomplete.”

If you use the extension period, CJER will send you an individual tracking form via email in January 2014. Please note that regardless of whether you use the extension period or not, you may need to complete a statutorily-required class in 2014. Please review the information below to see if this applies to you.

Impact on Specific Education Requirements

Safety Related Training (IIPP)

Safety-related training required by the IIPP is included in the extension. All AOC employees have until December 31, 2014 to complete their currently identified safety-related training requirements.

Statutory Requirement – EDU166 Harassment Prevention for Leads, Supervisors and Managers

This statutorily required class must be completed once every two years; therefore it is not included in the extension period. Employees who are required to complete this class must complete the class at least once in 2012-2013. Employees who completed the class prior to 2013 will be required to take the class in 2014. If you are required to take this class in 2014 you will receive one reminder email in January 2014.

Statutory Requirement – EDU303 Conflict of Interest/Code of Ethics

This statutorily required class must be completed once every two years; therefore it is not included in the extension period. Employees who are required to complete this class must complete the class at least once in 2012-2013. Employees who completed the class prior to 2013 will be required to take the class in 2014. If you are required to take this class in 2014 you will receive one reminder email in January 2014.

Executive Summary

The Rules and Projects Committee (RUPRO) recommends that the Judicial Council amend rule 10.474, which addresses education for trial court managers, supervisors, and other personnel. The amendments respond to direction given to RUPRO by the council in August 2012 to evaluate relaxation of mandatory education requirements to allow court executive officers greater discretion and flexibility in utilizing their workforces during times of budget constraints.

Recommendation

The Rules and Projects Committee recommends that the Judicial Council amend rule 10.474 of the California Rules of Court, effective January 1, 2015, to allow court executive officers to:

1. Determine the number of hours, if any, of live, face-to-face education required to meet the continuing education requirement; and
2. For good cause, grant a one-year extension of time to complete the education requirements.

The text of the amended rule is attached at pages 7–8.

Previous Council Action

Effective January 1, 2007, the Judicial Council adopted rule 10.474 as part of a comprehensive set of rules addressing judicial branch education. Subdivision (c) of the rule was amended, effective January 1, 2013, to provide more individual choice and flexibility in what and how many hours count toward the continuing education hours requirement. The amendments provide that an individual must complete at least half of his or her education requirement as a participant in traditional (live, face-to-face) education. In addition, the amendments removed limitations on online course work, self-directed study, and faculty service by counting all education hours in the same way.

Rationale for Recommendation

On May 25, 2012, the Strategic Evaluation Committee (SEC) issued its report on the Administrative Office of the Courts. Among the recommendations to the Judicial Council was the following recommendation concerning AOC and trial court education requirements:

Recommendation No. 7-23: As to training currently required of AOC staff and court personnel, the Judicial Council should examine and consider a relaxation of current mandatory requirements to allow the Administrative Director of the AOC and/or court executive officers greater discretion and flexibility in utilizing their workforces during times of budget constraints.

The council's Executive and Planning Committee (E&P) evaluated and prioritized each recommendation in the SEC report and presented them to the council on August 31, 2012. For recommendation No. 7-23, E&P proposed and the council adopted the following:

Directive #79: E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Rules and Projects Committee to evaluate relaxation of mandatory education requirements to allow the Administrative Director of the Courts and Court Executive Officers greater discretion and flexibility in utilizing their workforces during times of budget constraints.

In response, RUPRO considered Directive #79; recommendations from Administer Director of the Courts Steven Jahr; the rules that apply to education for AOC staff, trial court staff, appellate court staff, and clerk/administrators of the appellate courts; and the compliance periods for each category of employees. In its deliberations, RUPRO recognized the importance of judicial branch education and did not consider recommending that the education requirements be eliminated. To address education requirements for AOC staff, RUPRO recommended and the council adopted amendments to rule 10.491, effective July 1, 2013.<sup>1</sup> The amendments give the Administrative

Director discretion to grant a one-year, rather than six-month, extension of time to complete required education and to determine the number of hours, if any, of traditional (live, face-to-face) education required to meet the continuing education requirement. Making similar amendments to rule 10.474 would allow court executive officers greater discretion and flexibility in use of their workforces, consistent with directive #79.

RUPRO recommends amending rule 10.474, effective January 1, 2015, to give court executive officers greater discretion and flexibility in using their workforces. Specifically, RUPRO recommends that the rule be amended to give each court executive discretion to grant a one-year, rather than six-month, extension of time to complete required education. (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 10.474(d)(1).) In deciding to recommend that each court executive officer be given authority to grant a one-year extension of time to complete the education requirements, RUPRO also considered whether to retain the language in the current rule that provides authority for the executive officer or a supervisor, if delegated by the executive officer, to extend the compliance period. RUPRO decided to eliminate the authority to delegate this decision, believing that it would allow divisions of a court to act independently and could result in different compliance periods even within a particular superior court.

The rule would provide that the next compliance period begins after the extended compliance period ends, unless the court executive determines otherwise.<sup>2</sup> Because some education requirements are mandated by statute, an advisory committee comment has been added to the rule to provide that “[t]he time frame for completion of compliance courses based on statutory or regulatory mandates is unaffected by the one-year extension in (d)(1).”

In addition, RUPRO recommends amending subdivision (c)(5) to give each court executive officer the discretion to determine the number of hours, if any, of traditional (live, face-to-face) education required to meet the continuing education requirement.

Comments, Alternatives Considered, and Policy Implications

This proposal circulated for public comment from December 12, 2013 to January 24, 2014. Four comments were submitted; commentators were the Superior Courts of Los Angeles and San Diego Counties, an employee of the Superior Court of Sacramento County, and the Joint Rules Working Group (JRWG) of the Trial Court Presiding Judges Advisory Committee and Court Executives Advisory Committee.<sup>3</sup> Three agreed with the proposal and one agreed if modified. All commentators responded that the proposal appropriately addressed the stated purpose. Commentators’ responses to specific questions about the proposal and RUPRO’s responses to the comments are discussed below.

Sunset date for relaxing face-to-face education requirements

The proposal as circulated for comment would amend subdivision (c)(5) to give each court executive officer the discretion to determine the number of hours, if any, of traditional (live, face-to-face) education required to be completed by employees in his or her court to meet the continuing education requirement. The invitation to comment asked for comments on whether the proposed amendment should have a sunset date. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County commented that a sunset date is unnecessary and that an individual should be able “to analyze his or her court and determine a plan that best fits their needs.” Similarly, the commentator from the Superior Court of Sacramento County responded that the proposed amendment should not have a sunset date because online education is a trend that will likely continue due to budget restraints. The Superior Court of San Diego County responded that delivery of face-to-face education is not possible with the current budget situation. The JRWG agreed, stating that “[a]llowing court executive officers the discretion to determine the number of required live, face-to-face hours permits the individual court executive officer to analyze his/her court and determine a plan that best fits the court’s needs.” RUPRO agreed.

Uniform one-year extension

The proposed one-year extension of time was drafted to allow each court executive officer, for good cause, to grant a one-year extension of time to complete the education requirements. It would provide that if an extension is granted, the subsequent two-year compliance period begins immediately after the extended compliance period ends, unless otherwise determined by the executive officer. An alternative amendment would have granted a one-year extension of time to the compliance period ending December 31, 2014, effectively giving all trial court employees subject to the rule an extension for the current compliance period, rather than leaving it to each court executive officer. The invitation to comment asked whether the extension of time proposed in subdivision (d)(1) should apply to all trial court employees or be left to the discretion of each court executive officer to grant an extension, as proposed in the version of the rule that circulated for comment.

The Superior Court of Los Angeles County responded that the court executive should be given discretion to grant the proposed one-year extension. It noted that doing so will create logistical challenges in tracking compliance periods, but it believes that the flexibility gained will outweigh that issue. The other commentators agreed that this should be within the discretion of the court executive. RUPRO acknowledged that this could result in different compliance periods in different courts but agreed that whether to grant the extension of time should be left to the discretion of each court executive officer.

Sunset date for one-year extension

The proposed amendment that would allow a court executive officer to grant a one-year extension of time to the compliance period, as circulated, did not have a sunset date. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County commented that the amendment should not have a sunset date and noted that the current rule provision allows a six-month extension of time at the discretion of the CEO. The three other commentators agreed. RUPRO agreed with the comments and does not propose a sunset date.

Other rule amendments

Though not included in the proposed amendments, the invitation to comment asked about other changes to the rules governing education requirements for trial court employees. Responses to these questions will be provided to the Center for Judicial Education and Research Governing Committee to consider.

In response to the question asking whether the number of hours of education required in subdivision (c) be reduced or otherwise changed, the Superior Court of San Diego County commented that as long as the executive officer has discretion to grant an extension of the compliance period, the number of hours is fine. The commentator from the Superior Court of Sacramento County responded that it should be reduced somewhat. The JRWG did not think the hours requirement should be reduced but suggested that the requirements be recast as guidelines.

In response to the question asking whether the length of the compliance period in subdivision (c) should be changed, the Superior Court of Los Angeles County stated that changing it from a two-year cycle to a three-year cycle would make it consistent with the education cycle for judicial officers and court executives, and though it would require significant changes to the court's education tracking system, it would standardize training periods across the court. The JRWG responded "no," but agreed that the benefit of modifying the two-year education cycle to a three-year education cycle would be to make it consistent with the education cycle for judicial officers and court executive officers. The two other commentators did not think the cycle length should be changed.

The invitation to comment asked whether the education requirements in the rule should be made nonbinding recommendations rather than mandatory requirements. To do so, the language would be changed from "must" to "should." The commentator from the Superior Court of Sacramento County responded that they should remain mandatory and the Superior Court of San Diego County and the JRWG responded that they should be made nonbinding.

All four commentators responded that the orientation required in subdivision (c)(3) should count toward the total hours requirement. The JRWG included a comment about tracking employees' compliance with education requirements, stating in part, that it "suggests the AOC provide a statewide training enrollment and tracking system [parenthetical omitted] or enter into a master service agreement that courts could opt to use similar to how NeoGov for online recruiting was done. This would automate providing the AOC with relevant and up-to-date training information, and it would be very useful to the majority of the courts."

Implementation Requirements, Costs, and Operational Impacts

Based on the comments received, the proposal would provide cost savings. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County stated that reducing the face-to-face training requirement will reduce the mileage expense the court incurs: a class of 20 participants could save $400. The court also noted that it will reduce the “transactional” time employees spend in preparing for and traveling to off-site training. The other commentators agreed that decreased travel costs to attend in-person training will provide savings.

Implementation requirements for courts are minimal and the commentators agreed that eight months from Judicial Council approval of this proposal until its effective date would provide sufficient time for implementation.

For larger courts it is more time consuming but smaller courts would also benefit from not having to track each employee's training, which can likewise be very time consuming. Additional comments:           The Joint Rules Working Group suggests the AOC provide a statewide training enrollment and tracking system (that is part of a larger Learning Management System) or enter into a Master Service Agreement that courts could opt to use similar to how NeoGov for online recruiting was done. This would automate providing the AOC with relevant and up-to-date training information, and it would be very useful to the majority of the courts. While the AOC would provide the enrollment and tracking system, the participating courts would retain the responsibility of entering their court's data and have the ability to utilize the system to run reports, track their employees' training, and perform other necessary functions. In addition, the AOC recently (October 30th, 2013) awarded an RFP to Syntrio of San Francisco to provide online training for numerous classes – including those that are required of court staff. Statewide access to such a system would also be a great help to the courts. |                           |

Information on Judicial Council Directives

Council Directive 80

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts to evaluate the efficiencies identified by the working group reviewing all education for new judges to ensure that education is provided in the most effective and efficient way possible.

SEC Recommendation 7-20

The Education Division’s current staffing level is one of the highest in the AOC and should be reduced. To achieve the reduction, the following areas should be reviewed and considered, and appropriate actions taken:

(a) A workgroup has been formed to review all education for new judges to ensure that it is being provided in the most effective and efficient way possible. The efficiencies identified by this working group may present opportunities for reductions.

Executive Summary

At its meeting on February 5, 2013, the CJER Governing Committee accepted a report from a working group it had appointed to review and evaluate CJER's new judge education programming required under rule 10.463(c)(1) and to submit recommendations to the Governing Committee for consideration. After reviewing the working group's findings and recommendations, the Governing Committee endorsed the group's recommendations and is now presenting these (with some modifications made by the committee) to the Judicial Council for consideration and adoption. These recommendations also respond to the council's directive #80.

Recommendation

The CJER Governing Committee has determined that the New Judge Education Workgroup's examination and review of new judge education has confirmed that the model is, by and large, effective and efficient. The Governing Committee hereby submits the workgroup's recommendations, as modified and revised by the committee, for the Judicial Council's consideration and adoption and in response to the council's directive #80:

1. New Judge Orientation (NJO), the B. E. Witkin Judicial College (as modified in 2011 and 2012 to reduce both length and content), and the Primary Assignment Orientations (PAOs) should remain as currently designed and delivered because the current content and method of delivery are the most effective and efficient way to provide this education.
2. CJER, the Judicial College Steering Committee, and the PAO faculty teams should continue evaluating and refining the new judge education programs through the work of the curriculum committees and workgroups to eliminate any unnecessary overlap among NJO, the Judicial College, and the PAOs.
3. The Judicial College Steering Committee should explore the use of WebEx as a way to connect seminar groups after the college has concluded to answer questions, see how the college has affected participants' work back at their courts, and gain feedback from participants on the college after they have had a month or two to digest the learning and apply it.
4. PAO faculty teams and education attorneys should continue to explore ways to increase the efficiency of delivering PAO education by:
  - Examining the possibility of moving some content to blended learning options without reducing the quality of the learning experience;
  - Having the PAO faculty teams explore the possibility of designing separate orientation courses for experienced judges returning to an assignment, along the lines of the civil law PAO for experienced judges with civil law experience; and
  - Having the curriculum committees consider whether subject matter institutes, where appropriate, can fulfill the education requirement for experienced judges returning to related assignments after two years.
5. CJER should explore the possibility of moving a PAO to Southern California.

Additional detail about these recommendations and the Governing Committee's review and modification of them is provided in the attached report of the New Judge Education Workgroup.

Previous Council Action

Rule 10.50 of the California Rules of Court, originally adopted by the Judicial Council effective January 1, 1999, defines the role, duties, and responsibilities of the CJER Governing Committee and subdivision (c) outlines several duties, including the following:

(c) Additional duties

In addition to the duties described in rule 10.34, the committee must:

¶ . . . ¶

- (3) Evaluate the effectiveness of judicial branch education, the quality of participation, the efficiency of delivery, and the impact on service to the public;
- (4) Review and comment on proposals from other advisory committees and task forces that include education and training of judicial officers or court staff in order to ensure coordination, consistency, and collaboration in educational services;

At the August 17, 2011, meeting of the Trial Court Presiding Judges Advisory Committee (TCPJAC), during a brief presentation by Dr. Diane Cowdrey, CJER Director, about how CJER notifies the courts when new judges complete their required education, some TCPJAC members inquired about extending the time limit for new judges to complete their PAO requirements under the education rules. This led to a broader discussion of new judge education and the amount of time new judges are required to be away from court attending education programming, a total of four weeks within a two-year period (often completed within the first year). Dr. Cowdrey agreed to bring these concerns to the CJER Governing Committee. Moreover, the current fiscal environment created a need to review whether there was any way to reduce the cost of these programs while still providing the necessary education. Dr. Cowdrey brought this issue to the CJER Governing Committee at its August 23, 2011, meeting.

Pursuant to the duties in rule 10.50, outlined above, and the recent discussion with the TCPJAC, the CJER Governing Committee subsequently included the following item in its 2012 Annual Agenda as a top priority and appointed a working group made up of representatives of the committee, experienced CJER faculty, and members recommended by the TCPJAC Chair:

CJER Governing Committee Annual Agenda 2012 (excerpt):

(3) Evaluate New Judge Education—Due to concerns that have been raised and inquiries made by the TCPJAC regarding the amount of time new judges spend at education events during their first two years on the bench, we propose to convene a workgroup of judges and stakeholders experienced in this area of judicial education to examine our current approach to new judge education and make recommendations to the Governing Committee.

Rule of Court 10.462(c)(1), originally adopted by the Judicial Council effective January 1, 2007, outlines the education requirements for new judges, as follows:

(c) Content-based requirements

(1) Each new trial court judge and subordinate judicial officer must complete the “new judge education” provided by the Administrative Office of the Courts’ Education Division/Center for Judicial Education and Research (CJER) as follows:

(A) The New Judge Orientation Program (NJO) within six months of taking the oath as a judge or subordinate judicial officer. For purposes of the [NJO] Program, a judge or subordinate judicial officer is considered “new” only once, and any judge or subordinate judicial officer who has completed the [NJO] Program, as required under this rule or under former rule 970, is not required to complete the program again. A judge or subordinate judicial officer who was appointed, elected, or hired before rule 970 was adopted on January 1, 1996, is not required to complete the program.

- (B) An orientation course in his or her primary assignment (civil, criminal, family, juvenile delinquency or dependency, probate, or traffic) within one year of taking the oath as a judge or subordinate judicial officer; and
- (C) The B. E. Witkin Judicial College of California within two years of taking the oath as a judge or subordinate judicial officer, unless the new judge completed the Judicial College as a new subordinate judicial officer, in which case the presiding judge may determine whether the new judge must complete it again.

In addition, Judicial Council directive #80 directs the Administrative Director of the Courts to evaluate efficiencies identified by the working group reviewing all education for new judges to ensure that education is provided in the most effective and efficient way possible. This Judicial Council directive came out of the Strategic Evaluation Committee (SEC) Report's recommendation 7-20(a).<sup>1</sup>

Rationale for Recommendation

The New Judge Education Workgroup was charged with evaluating the following four inquiries and returning to the Governing Committee at the end of calendar year 2012 with recommendations:

1. Is the current approach to education for new judges meeting the educational needs of this audience in the most effective and efficient manner possible?
2. Given the wide variety of methods for delivering education, would you support the use of alternative approaches for the delivery of new judge education which could reduce the length of time new judges are currently required to spend away from their courts while continuing to meet their education needs?
3. Should specific content areas be added to or deleted from the B. E. Witkin Judicial College (College), New Judge Orientation (NJO) or the Primary Assignment Orientations (PAOs), and if so, what content and what delivery method is the most appropriate?

4. How best can the issue of having deliberately overlapping content in these programs, knowing that it is intended to repeat certain content areas that are critical for new judges, be addressed?

The findings of the New Judge Education Workgroup, which are discussed below and with which the CJER Governing Committee agrees, support the recommendations presented to the council in this report.

Findings

The workgroup found that overall the current approach of new judge education meets the needs of new judges in a very effective and efficient manner. While live, face-to-face programs are more costly, the workgroup determined that delivering these foundational programs using this method is the most appropriate for new judges. However, the workgroup did identify several areas where changes and modifications should be considered in order to ensure that this education model continues to be effective.

The workgroup found that it was critical for the Governing Committee to enhance its review and evaluation of the NJO, Judicial College, and PAO programs and their curricula, especially where content appeared to overlap among the three programs. Elimination of unnecessary overlap was deemed by the workgroup as very important in order to maintain the effectiveness of this overall education model. But the workgroup also acknowledged that overlap was necessary in some areas, particularly in the area of judicial ethics.

The workgroup determined that technology could be employed to elicit more effective evaluation of the educational experience after participants have returned to court. College seminar leaders could connect with their groups via WebEx, for example, after the college to assess how that program impacted their work, and answer questions. This would help keep the college curriculum relevant and reinforce it.

The workgroup did determine that some efficiency could be achieved in the current Primary Assignment Orientation programming. First, the workgroup recommended that the Governing Committee integrate technology more fully into these programs. Technology could ultimately move appropriate content to a distance-delivery model, thereby freeing up the live component of a program for more-focused education or shortening the overall length of a program. Also, the workgroup felt that shorter, more-focused orientation courses could be developed for experienced judges who are returning to an assignment they previously held. The workgroup acknowledged that the Civil Law Curriculum Committee had taken this step in developing a Primary Assignment Orientation for experienced judges and encouraged the Governing Committee to explore this for the other PAOs.

The workgroup did note that, in response to budgetary reductions, in 2011, the Judicial College was reduced by 1.5 days, and several introductory courses were removed from the curriculum.

Subsequently, in 2012, one half day was restored, and one of the introductory courses, family law, was restored, in response to slightly improved budget conditions.

Enhanced review process

Adoption of the recommendations presented in this report also will enable the Governing Committee to implement a more regular review process of the new judge education model to ensure that it continues to be both effective and efficient.

Comments, Alternatives Considered, and Policy Implications

The Governing Committee reported on this final report of the New Judge Education Workgroup at the TCPJAC Executive Committee meeting on March 21. The TCPJAC had no comments that would have altered the submitted recommendations. These recommendations affirm the policy about education for new judges and the need for these three programs, incorporating the modifications recommended by the New Judge Education Workgroup (e.g., incorporating more blended learning, developing shorter orientation courses for experienced judges, and considering alternative locations for some of the orientation programs).

Implementation Requirements, Costs, and Operational Impacts

Some of the recommendations could result in increased costs and staff time, especially if additional orientation courses are developed for experienced judges. But these shorter courses would reduce time away from court, which would be beneficial to the courts<sup>2</sup>. Other recommendations that involve incorporating more distance education into these programs could also reduce costs.

Relevant Strategic Plan Goals and Operational Plan Objectives

Because the recommendations in this report focus on improvements to new judge education, they support Judicial Council Strategic Goal V, Education for Branchwide Professional Excellence.

Executive Summary of the New Judge Education Report CJER Governing Committee, June 2013

Introduction

In February 2012, the CJER Governing Committee requested that the education programs for new judges be studied, as a group, to determine whether the current approach was the most effective and efficient. The Governing Committee commissioned a New Judge Education Workgroup to conduct this study, which took approximately eight months. The New Judge Education Workgroup grappled with and answered an overarching question: is the current 20 days of live, face-to-face education for a new judicial officer within the first two years days of their term of office the most effective and efficient method to ensure public trust in the judiciary? The Workgroup concluded that current programs—with the current reductions in place and some additional recommendations—comprise the most effective, comprehensive, and efficient method to achieve both education and orientation for judges making the transition from lawyer to judge. The Workgroup recognized that after taking the oath of office, judges immediately begin to make decisions that affect public safety and all aspects of the lives of the litigants before them, and that sufficient training is essential.

Charge of the Workgroup

The Workgroup was tasked by the Governing Committee with answering four questions:

1. Is the current approach to education for new judges meeting the educational needs of this audience in the most effective and efficient manner possible?
2. Given the wide variety of methods for delivering education, would you support the use of alternative approaches for the delivery of new judge education that could reduce the length of time new judges are currently required to spend away from their courts while continuing to meet their education needs?
3. Should specific content areas be added to or deleted from the B. E. Witkin Judicial College, New Judge Orientation, or the Primary Assignment Orientations, and if so, what content and what delivery method is the most appropriate?
4. How can the issue of having deliberately overlapping content in these programs, knowing that it is intended to repeat certain content areas that are critical for new judges, be best addressed?

Process

The New Judge Education Workgroup was formed by the CJER Governing Committee in February 2012 with representatives from the Trial Court Presiding Judges Advisory Committee (TCPJAC) and consisted of:

- Hon. George J. Abdallah, Jr., Chair
Superior Court of San Joaquin County
- Hon. Christopher R. Chandler
Presiding Judge, Superior Court of Sutter County
- Hon. Janet Gaard
Superior Court of Yolo County
- Hon. Adrienne M. Grover
Court of Appeal, Sixth Appellate District
- Hon. Mary Thornton House
Superior Court of Los Angeles County
- Hon. Patricia M. Lucas
Superior Court of Santa Clara County
- Hon. L. Jackson Lucky IV
Superior Court of Riverside County
- Hon. Beverly Reid O'Connell
Superior Court of Los Angeles County
- Hon. Mary Ann O'Malley
Superior Court of Contra Costa County
- Hon. Theodore M. Weathers
Superior Court of San Diego County

The Workgroup commenced its study of new judge education by reviewing a number of documents, including course curricula (old and revised) of all new judge programs, participant evaluations for those programs from 2008–2011, course outlines for all programs, advantages and disadvantages of various delivery methods, and the CJER curriculum development process.

The Workgroup also reviewed a survey conducted in 2010 of B. E. Witkin College participants from the previous five years to ascertain the long-term effectiveness of the College courses. Members of the Workgroup also interviewed presiding judges and sought feedback from a variety of judicial officers as to how new judge education could be improved. Reports by members of the 2011–2012 B. E. Witkin Judicial College Steering Committee were made, both in writing and orally.

Additionally, the Workgroup solicited input from the TCPJAC and received comments from seven courts on the three programs under review. They discussed specific suggestions that were made and the benefits and disadvantages of each (such as separating the two weeks of the college by several months or going straight through the weekend). They discussed input from the Director of the Commission on Judicial Performance and Judge David Rothman (Ret.) who has taught judicial ethics at the College and NJO for over 20 years.

Findings of the New Judge Education Workgroup

The Workgroup found that overall the current approach of new judge education meets the needs of new judges in a very effective and efficient manner. While live, face-to-face programs are more costly, the workgroup determined that delivering these foundational programs using this method is the most appropriate for new judges. In addition, some efficiencies to these program had already been made. At NJO, the number of faculty had been reduced from six to four. The College agenda had been reduced two years ago, with resultant operational savings, and most seminar leaders also doubled as faculty. Moreover, the workgroup did identify several areas where changes and modifications should be considered in order to ensure that this education model continues to be effective.

The Workgroup found that it was critical for the Governing Committee to enhance its review and evaluation of the NJO, College, and PAO programs and their curricula, especially where content appeared to overlap among the three programs. Elimination of unnecessary overlap was deemed by the Workgroup as very important in order to maintain the effectiveness of this overall education model.

In addition, the Workgroup recommended that the Governing Committee integrate technology more fully into these programs for two reasons. One, technology could ultimately move appropriate content to a distance delivery model, thereby freeing up the live component of a program for more focused education or shortening the overall length of a program. Second, technology could be employed to elicit more effective evaluation of the educational experience after participants have returned to court. College seminar leaders could connect with their groups via WebEx, for example, after the College to assess how that program impacted their work, and answer questions. This would help keep the College curriculum relevant and reinforce it.

The Workgroup did determine that some efficiency could be achieved in the current primary assignment orientation programming. The workgroup felt that shorter, more focused, orientation courses could be developed for experienced judges who are returning to an assignment they previously held. The Workgroup acknowledged that the Civil Law Curriculum Committee had taken this step in developing a primary assignment orientation for experienced judges and encouraged the Governing Committee to explore this for the other PAOs.

The Workgroup did note that, in response to budgetary reductions, in 2011, the Judicial College was reduced by 1.5 days, and several introductory courses were removed from the curriculum. Subsequently, in 2012, one half day was restored, and one of the introductory courses, family law, was restored, in response to slightly improved budget conditions. Reductions in faculty had already been made at both NJO and the College.

Overview of Programs for New Judges

New judge education includes five days of New Judge Orientation, a Primary Assignment Orientation course in the area of the judge's primary assignment (typically five days long), and eight and one half days at the B. E. Witkin Judicial College. These programs are continuously updated in both content and approach by the various committees, workgroups, faculty, and CJER staff. All programs include subject matter content delivered by judges who are considered experts in their area and conducted in a classroom or small group setting, or a combination thereof. Each program is structured for judges to interact and discuss best practices, the relationship of the judge to the judicial branch, the relationship of the judge to court administration, and the relationship of the judge to the public.

At the College, the art of judging is at the core of each course, each small group, and each opportunity for the new judge to interact with judges from across the state. Courses such as "Court as Employer," "Americans with Disabilities Act," and "Alcohol and Drugs in Court," in addition to tours of San Quentin and Delancey Street, are offered only at the College.

At New Judge Orientation (NJO), the emphasis is ethics, the mastery of legal content, and emphasis on the art of judging. The goal is to develop a judge who is knowledgeable and capable in deciding the cases before him or her, thus engendering trust in the justice system and cutting the costs of appeals and/or reducing referrals to the Commission on Judicial Performance.

The Primary Assignment Orientation (PAO) courses provide nuts-and-bolts content in each of the substantive law assignment areas: civil, criminal, family, dependency, delinquency, probate and traffic law. These courses are highly interactive and often include blended learning, for example, participants view online video lectures or courses before or during the course. Participants use hypothetical case scenarios, group discussions, and role-playing so that the lectures are integrated with practical experience. While not required, many experienced judges changing assignment do attend PAO courses. In fact, experienced judges now often constitute the majority of participants in Primary Assignment Orientation courses.

Workgroup Recommendations and Governing Committee Actions

Recommendation #1: The Workgroup recommended that NJO, the College, and the PAOs (as recently modified), remain as currently designed and delivered. The Workgroup found that the current content and method of delivery were the most effective and efficient way to provide this education.

Governing Committee Action: Adopted. [Note: In 2011, the College was reduced by 1.5 days, and several introductory courses were removed from the curriculum. In 2012, one half day was restored, and one of the introductory courses, family law, was restored. College seminar leaders also serve as faculty for many of the courses, thereby reducing faculty costs and time overall. NJO had recently been redesigned and the faculty team reduced from six to four, resulting in savings in cost and in time away from the court.]

Recommendation #2: The Workgroup recommended that CJER, the B. E. Witkin Judicial College Steering Committee, and the PAO faculty teams continue to evaluate and refine the New Judge Education programs through the work of the curriculum committees and Workgroups to eliminate unnecessary overlap among NJO, the College, and the PAOs.

Governing Committee Action: Adopted

Recommendation #3: The Workgroup recommended that the B. E. Witkin Judicial College Steering Committee explore the use of WebEx as a way to connect seminar groups, after the College had concluded, to answer questions and to see how the College has impacted their work back at the court. This would also be a way to gain feedback from the participants on the College after they have had a month or two to digest the learning and apply it.

Governing Committee Action: Adopted.

Recommendation #4: The Workgroup recommended that PAO faculty teams and education attorneys continue to explore ways to increase the efficiency of delivering PAO education. First, the Workgroup recommended that the faculty teams and education attorneys examine the possibility of moving some content to blended learning options without reducing the quality of the learning experience. Second, the Workgroup recommended that PAO faculty teams explore the possibility of designing separate orientation courses for experienced judges returning to an assignment. The goal would be shorter PAOs for that audience and at less cost to the courts. The Workgroup did recognize that a separate orientation course already exists for experienced civil law judges returning to that assignment. The Workgroup also recognized that both these possibilities could result in increased costs and resource demands for CJER.

Governing Committee Action: Adopted, but with modification. In addition to designing shorter PAOs for experienced judges, the Curriculum Committees should also consider a recommendation that the subject matter (e.g., Civil, Criminal, etc.) Institute, where appropriate, would also fulfill the education requirement for the experienced judges returning to an assignment after two years.

Recommendation #5: The Workgroup recommended that CJER explore the possibility of moving a PAO to southern California.

Governing Committee Action: Adopted.

Additional Actions

The Governing Committee has recommended to the Executive and Planning Committee that the Dean of the Judicial College be appointed as an advisory member. This appointment will ensure that the Governing Committee is more fully connected and engaged in the development and delivery of this critical judicial education program.

INTRODUCTORY LETTER FROM THE CHAIR OF THE WORKGROUP:

The rule of law governing the families, fortunes, and freedoms of all Californians is placed in the hands of 2,000 judicial officers. In order to serve the interests of the state's citizens, California has established the preeminent judicial education system in the United States.

In the 1960s, members of the judiciary instituted a formal education system for the new judicial officer. The programs were developed to assist and train new judicial officers as they made the transition from advocate to judge. In 1973, development and operation of education programs for the judicial branch was turned over to a new and independent entity: The Center for Judicial Education and Research (CJER) (CRC 10.50). CJER's role has expanded over the decades. CJER now also provides education for court staff and administrators and, through its Governing Committee, serves as an Advisory Committee to the State's Judicial Council. CJER also serves as the Office of Education of the Administrative Office of the Courts. The education that is provided is the foundation to a career in the judicial branch. The uniform, critically developed, high-quality education is intended to assure all Californians of a well-prepared, fair, and impartial judiciary.

In keeping with its historical approach to CJER's growth and development, in March 2012, the CJER Governing Committee created the New Judge Education Workgroup (Workgroup) to review the current approach to new judicial officer education and to make recommendations to the Governing Committee. The Workgroup is composed of ten judges of the Superior Court of California and is assisted by thoughtful, committed, and knowledgeable staff attorneys. The members have varying years of experience as bench officers as well as varying years of experience in judicial education. Many of the members have served or are now serving as presiding judges.

In order to respond to the charge given by the Governing Committee, the Workgroup met in person by conference call and by Webinar. Each member reviewed the documented evolution and development of the New Judge Orientation, the Bernard E. Witkin Judicial College (College), and the Primary Assignment Orientation (PAO) programs. The members, both individually and as a Workgroup, reviewed each program's subject matter and schedule. The schedules were reviewed day by day and hour by hour.

It has been a great privilege to have undertaken this task for the benefit of the CJER Governing Committee, newly appointed and elected judicial officers, and our fellow Californians.

A. GOVERNING COMMITTEE CHARGE TO THE NEW JUDGE EDUCATION WORKGROUP

Summary

The CJER Governing Committee convened a Workgroup to review the current approach to new judge education and to make recommendations to the Governing Committee regarding the following:

1. Is the current approach to education for new judges meeting the educational needs of this audience in the most effective and efficient manner possible?
2. Given the wide variety of methods for delivering education, would you support the use of alternative approaches for the delivery of new judge education that could reduce the length of time new judges are currently required to spend away from their courts while continuing to meet their education needs?
3. Should specific content areas be added to or deleted from the B. E. Witkin Judicial College (College), New Judge Orientation (NJO), or the Primary Assignment Orientations (PAOs), and if so, what content and what delivery method is the most appropriate?
4. How can the issue of having deliberately overlapping content in these programs, knowing that it is intended to repeat certain content areas that are critical for new judges, be best addressed?

Background

The Workgroup was formed to examine issues that have periodically been raised regarding new judge education, and these include:

- Concerns about the time spent away from the bench that is required of new judges to complete their education requirements (raised at a meeting of the Trial Court Presiding Judges Advisory Committee)
- Requests to add topics to the College and NJO curriculum
- Participant comments about content that was (intentionally) duplicated in more than one program for new judges
- Budget issues related to possible reduction in costs at the College
- Concerns about how content was selected for College

New judges are a critical audience, and therefore it was appropriate for the Governing Committee to request that these three programs be reviewed to ensure that appropriate content, efficient delivery, and respect for tradition, time, and costs are all considered.

Initial Proposal

The New Judge Education Workgroup focused on the four questions posed above and provided recommendations to the CJER Governing Committee at their October 2012 meeting. The Report of the Strategic Evaluation Committee (SEC) was published at the same time that this Workgroup was studying and evaluating new judge education. The Workgroup reviewed the comments made and issues raised in the SEC report relating to New Judge Education. The SEC report states and the Workgroup agreed that “A well-educated judiciary is critical to the fair and efficient administration of justice, and is recognized as a stated goal of the judicial branch.”

The Judicial Council Report submitted to the Judicial Council at their April 2013 meeting, and this accompanying report, serve as responses to Judicial Council directive #80: “E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts to evaluate the efficiencies identified by the Workgroup reviewing all education for new judges to ensure that education is provided in the most effective and efficient way possible.”

In the past several years, the Workgroup noted that CJER has been aggressive in exploring and using a variety of delivery methods to provide education and training to the branch. The technology available for distance education has increased and improved, allowing CJER to take advantage of multiple delivery methods (see Distance Learning Options, Section M), which in some situations can substitute for live education, and in most situations can augment it. Combining multiple types of delivery methods has become much more commonplace, and this effort is referred to as blended learning.

The Workgroup reviewed what content is provided at each of the three major programs for new judges, using the work that has already been completed in this area, and considered the possible use of blended learning to meet the current needs. When looking at content where there is deliberate overlap, they also considered whether blended learning would be useful.

The Workgroup was asked to look at the costs associated with new judge programming including time away from the bench. As such, the Workgroup considered reducing the live education portions, e.g., offering the College in a different format using a blended design. It was always a possibility that the Workgroup would recommend that no cost savings could be made and that the current format would be the best way to provide this critical education.

The Workgroup was an ad hoc committee that dissolved after it conducted its review and provided its recommendations to the CJER Governing Committee.

C. NEW JUDGE EDUCATION PROGRAM DESCRIPTIONS

Description of New Judge Orientation

This one-week orientation program is designed to introduce new judges, commissioners, and referees to their judicial duties and to familiarize them with their ethical responsibilities in ensuring fairness in all proceedings, promoting uniform court practices, and improving the administration of justice. Enrollment is limited to 12 participants in each program, in order to ensure regular and meaningful interaction by all participants with faculty, the content, and each other. The curriculum for the program is the most structured of all CJER programs, in order to ensure that all essential content is covered, and that all new judges receive the same educational experience. Faculty for the program is trained on the NJO curriculum prior to teaching, and the curriculum is regularly updated by a Workgroup comprised of experienced faculty. During the program, participants meet with the Chief Justice, members of the Judicial Council, and AOC leadership. The program is typically offered ten times each year.

Description of B. E. Witkin Judicial College

The B. E. Witkin Judicial College of California marked its 46th year in 2012 in which it has presented its comprehensive educational experience to new members of the California judiciary. Participants in the Judicial College have found that it provides extensive training in many areas of the law and broadens their understanding of the judicial process and the role of judicial officers.

Judges, commissioners, and referees attending this intensive two-week educational program commit themselves to active participation in acquiring the knowledge, skills, and approaches needed to perform their judicial work fairly, correctly, and efficiently. A full schedule of classes, concurrent sessions, and small-group seminars in all phases of judicial work is offered. Participants also analyze judicial philosophies, styles, work methods, and their roles as public servants; improve their skills in the arts of judging, decision making, handling counsel, litigants, and witnesses, and explaining the judicial function to the public; and explore better ways to handle court business, increase court efficiency, and ensure fairness to litigants. Instructional methods emphasize problem-solving exercises, panel discussions, small-group seminars, case studies, role-playing, and other innovative learning methods. Frequent small-group seminars allow students to clarify and evaluate their understanding of the course content. Specially prepared program materials are provided for study at the college and for later reference as practice aids.

Under the leadership of the Judicial College Steering Committee, and the appointed Judicial College Dean, instruction is provided primarily by more than 55 highly qualified judges, commissioners, and referees selected for their recognized abilities as judges, teachers, and legal writers, and for their interest in improving the administration of justice. Experts and representatives from component agencies within the California justice system also participate to increase the judiciary's awareness of interagency problems and to coordinate responses to these problems. Faculty does not receive compensation, other than reimbursement for travel and lodging expenses according to state rules.

Description of Primary Assignment Orientation Courses

The Primary Assignment Orientation courses provide nuts-and-bolts content in each of the substantive law assignment areas: civil, criminal, family, juvenile, probate, and traffic law. These courses are highly interactive and often include blended learning, in that participants view online video lectures or courses before or during the course. Faculty lectures are supplemented with faculty demonstrations of how to conduct hearings or how to question parties (i.e., expert witnesses, self-represented litigants, or children). Participants use hypothetical case scenarios, group discussions, and role-playing to integrate the lectures with practical experience. These courses are designed to satisfy both the content-based requirements of California Rules of Court 10.462(c)(1)(B), applicable to new judges and subordinate judicial officers, as well as the expectations and requirements of Rule 10.462(c)(4), applicable to experienced judges and subordinate judicial officers new to, or returning to, an assignment. CJER has found that many participants at the PAO programs are experienced judges returning to an assignment.

D. EVOLUTION OF EACH OF THE THREE NEW JUDGE EDUCATION PROGRAMS

Evolution of New Judge Orientation

The New Judge Orientation curriculum is updated annually to ensure that the law is current and has been revised several times over the years to ensure that the hypotheticals are effective. In 2009, the faculty recommended, based upon their own experience with the curriculum, as well as participant feedback, that the fairness segments of the curriculum should be reevaluated and revised. In June of 2009, the NJO Fairness Curriculum Workgroup was established to do this work. The Workgroup was composed of several experienced NJO faculty and several members of what was then the Fairness Education Committee.

The NJO Fairness Curriculum Workgroup met by conference calls over the course of a year to discuss what changes should or should not be made to the curriculum. The Workgroup started by formulating the participant goals for this segment of the course, and from there determined whether the existing curriculum fulfilled those goals. After determining those areas where changes were to be made, individual members of the Workgroup worked on revisions or created new content. For example, a new sentencing hypothetical and stereotyping exercise were created, and new exercises were incorporated into the sections dealing with social cognition and fairness. Much of the content remained the same, but the order in which topics were taught was rearranged to create an easier flow of the material for participants to absorb.

The Workgroup concluded its mission with the roll out of the revised fairness segments of the NJO curriculum in 2010. However, the Workgroup concluded that more work needed to be done and recommended that the fairness and ethics content be woven throughout the entire New Judge Orientation curriculum. A new NJO Curriculum Workgroup was formed in the fall of 2010 to undertake this task. This new Workgroup was composed of three members from the NJO Fairness Curriculum Workgroup and four experienced NJO faculty.

The NJO Workgroup began with a two-day in-person meeting. All members agreed that integrating fairness and ethics throughout the NJO curriculum would make the curriculum more effective by reinforcing the concept that ethics and fairness are the underlying principles fundamental to the judicial officer's role. A list of concepts/content was created of all the topics that new judges needed to learn, and all the content that is taught in NJO was included. As retired Judge David Rothman, author of the California Judicial Conduct Handbook, suggested, how do we "blend the trials and ethics curriculum into a seamless whole: teaching the best practices and law in trials along with the interplay of ethics and fairness, while being sure these best practices and law of each subject are made clear?" This became the Workgroup's mission for the next two years. Meeting via videoconference and conference calls, the NJO Workgroup volunteered their time to work on how best to integrate what were discrete segments on ethics/fairness and trials/evidence and integrate ethics and fairness throughout the curriculum.

The original NJO curriculum was taught by a faculty team made up of two ethics specialists and two trials specialists who taught from Monday through Wednesday afternoon and from Wednesday through Friday, respectively. Two seminar leaders assisted the students and faculty during the entire week for a total of six faculty per week. With the blending of ethics/fairness and trials/evidence segments, both ethics and trials faculty were required throughout the program.

Reductions in CJER's Mod Funds, starting in fiscal year (FY) 2011–2012, necessitated some changes to NJO. Funding for faculty was reduced from six to four people, some lunches were eliminated, and participant travel reimbursement was eliminated.

Based on budget and curricular changes, four faculty stay the entire week. At a meeting with the Workgroup and June NJO faculty team, it was agreed that this was the better model, given the demands on the faculty.

Evolution of B. E. Witkin Judicial College

The B. E. Witkin Judicial College Steering Committee (previously the New Judge Education Committee) is responsible for planning the Judicial College. The Steering Committee members are expected to serve as seminar leaders at the program, so that they are familiar with the program and able to experience the program they designed. The committee reviews the new judge education curriculum and receives input from the substantive law curriculum committees with respect to the content that should and should not be included at the program to ensure essential education is covered and unnecessary duplication is avoided.

Each year the committee also carefully reviews all participant evaluations and often makes changes to the program based upon participant feedback. For example, courses that were not well-received are redesigned or dropped from the program.

Similar to NJO, Mod Funds to support the College were reduced in FY 2011–12. As a result, the length of the College was shortened. Before 2011, the program lasted a full two weeks, beginning on Sunday night, and continuing through Friday afternoon, then beginning again the next week on Monday morning and ending Friday afternoon. In 2011, the program was shortened by one-and-a-half days, to begin on Monday afternoon both weeks, and end on Friday afternoon both weeks. The opening dinner, which had been offered on Sunday night, was cancelled. The shortening of the program obligated the Steering Committee to meet and identify the content that was ultimately removed. Additionally, funds to support travel for participants were eliminated.

Other changes that have been made to the program in an effort to reduce costs and increase efficiencies include reducing the amount of materials printed for the program (only materials actually used in class are printed; resource materials are now found online only), eliminating the use of binders and shifting to the use of spiral or tape binding only, and reducing the number of CJER on-site staff at the program. All materials are posted online to Serranus.

In 2012, the College Steering Committee recommended adding back four hours of education. Because there were fewer participants (fewer judges appointed by the Governor), the reduced funding was sufficient to cover those costs.

Evolution of Primary Assignment Orientation Courses

Civil Law Orientation

CJER currently offers three separate civil law orientation courses:

1. Basic Civil Law Orientation,
2. Civil Law Orientation for Experienced Judges, and
3. Limited Jurisdiction, Small Claims and Unlawful Detainer Orientation.

In 2008, there was only what was then called the “Civil Law Overview.” This course was offered to all judges and subordinate judicial officers who were new or returning to a civil assignment. Judges who had an extensive civil practice before taking the bench often found this course too basic. Based on evaluation and participant comments, the Civil Law Education Committee (now the Civil Law Curriculum Committee) directed that a separate orientation course for experienced judges be created. The committee also decided to create a separate orientation course for judges who handled only limited jurisdiction cases. The two new courses were created by Workgroups composed of experienced civil law orientation faculty and some Civil Law Education Committee members.

The first “Overview for Experienced Civil Law Judges” was offered at the Fall Continuing Judicial Studies Program in October of 2008, and the course is now offered annually. The faculty members review the course curriculum both before and after the course, and they update the content every year depending on the latest developments in the civil law area. The course emphasizes areas of civil law that judges who are experienced in civil law might find complex and new issues with which they might not be familiar.

The Basic Civil Law Orientation is offered for judges and subordinate judicial officers who are new to a civil law assignment and, like the Civil Law Orientation for Experienced Judges, is offered annually. Faculty members review the curriculum every year and update it as necessary with new cases, statutes, and rules affecting civil law. After the course, the faculty members also revise the content based on participant evaluations.

The Limited Jurisdiction, Small Claims and Unlawful Detainer Orientation course was first offered as a pre-institute workshop of the 2008 Civil Law Institute. This course was developed for judges and subordinate judicial officers in a civil assignment who do not handle unlimited civil cases. Faculty review the curriculum before each course offering and update the content based on new case law, statutes, and rules of court. In 2011, content on foreclosures and unlawful detainers was added to the curriculum as a result of the increase of those case filings.

Civil content at the Judicial College includes civil settlement, civil post-trial motions, restraining orders in civil cases, civil discovery, and unlawful detainers, but these topics are covered in greater depth at the College and only briefly at the PAO.

Criminal Law Orientation

The content of the Criminal Law Orientation course, like that of the other orientation courses, is regularly updated depending on the latest developments in that area of the law. For example, significant changes in sentencing law have taken place over the last several years, and the orientation course has been revised accordingly.

The majority of the concurrent sessions in the second week of the College include criminal content. The Criminal Law Curriculum Committee has continued to work closely with the B. E. Witkin Judicial College Steering Committee, in the planning of the Judicial College. The New Judge Education Workgroup has been provided with a detailed overview of the relationship between the criminal law content offered at the College and that included in the orientation course in order to identify overlapping content and to guide program assessment and planning.

Family Law Orientation

The content of the Family Law Orientation course, like that of the other orientation courses, is regularly updated depending on the latest developments in that area of the law. In addition the delivery of the content has been revised over time, allowing for more hypotheticals and more or less time for certain topics. Although some new judges have mentioned that there is overlap with regard to the content in the family law orientation and the College courses, “Domestic Violence Awareness” and “Working With Self-Represented Litigants,” this overlap is intentional, and much effort has been made to ensure that the two programs are not unnecessarily duplicative. Intentional overlap is the result of a Primary Assignment Workgroup and the College Steering Committee agreeing that an area of content requires the additional emphasis for new judges and is therefore approved for duplication. There is also a course at the College entitled “Introduction to Family Law,” which is fairly duplicative of the Family Law Orientation course, but which is attended by those new judges who do not take the Family Law Orientation course.

Juvenile Law Orientations: Dependency and Delinquency

Since 2008, there have been a number of changes to the two juvenile law primary assignment orientation courses (the dependency orientation and the delinquency orientation). In January 2008, the Dependency and Delinquency PAOs were each three days, and they were followed by a one-and-a-half-day course entitled “Highlights in Delinquency” and “Highlights in Dependency.” These one-and-a-half-day courses were an attempt to meet the needs of those who preside over both types of cases, but they were not successful. In 2009, the one-and-a-half-day highlights courses were dropped, and the three-day orientations were reinstated. In 2010, the courses were each expanded to four-and-a-half days and have been very successful at that length, since they now include more essential content (substance abuse, mental health issues, child development, etc.). The persistent struggle to meet the education needs of those who hear both dependency and delinquency cases continues. The most recent attempt is being addressed in the 2012–2014 Education Plan cycle by offering a Webinar close in time to when the live course is offered (e.g., live course on Dependency with Webinar on Delinquency). The Webinar will be a stopgap course for those who are either in both assignments or are assigned to a dependency or delinquency court months before or after the PAO was offered. We are hopeful that this will meet participant needs.

Due to reduced resources that led to the shortening of the Judicial College, the two juvenile law course offerings at the College were removed from that program. As a result there is virtually no overlap between the juvenile orientation courses and the Judicial College curriculum at this time.

Probate Law Orientation

The content of the Probate Law Orientation course, like that of the other orientation courses, is regularly updated depending on the latest developments in that area of the law.

Recently, there have been constant updates in the areas of trusts and estates, conservatorship, guardianship, and Lanterman-Petris-Short (LPS) law. Some of the legislative updates were in part due to the increased requirements imposed upon probate courts by the Omnibus Conservatorship and Guardianship Reform Act of 2006, along with the lack of funding to implement the new requirements and the subsequent economic downturn. Aside from updates in the law, the most significant recent change in the course is the addition of a segment on civil protective orders and handling elder abuse cases, which entailed the shortening of the probate conservatorship segment on the same day. The civil protective orders component was added in response to Rule 10.464 of the California Rules of Court, which sets forth education requirements and expectations for judges and subordinate judicial officers on domestic violence issues and mandates that domestic violence education be included in the Probate Orientation, among other courses.

In addition, in 2010 the Probate Curriculum Committee recommended that the LPS segment of the course be held regionally in order to be accessible to judges and subordinate judicial officers who have an LPS or mental health assignment, but not a regular probate assignment. The half-day LPS orientation was held in three regional locations in 2012 and will be a regular offering.

In past years an introductory probate law course was offered at the Judicial College, but as a result of several years of very low enrollment, that course is no longer offered. It appears that very few new judges are placed in a probate assignment.

Traffic Law Orientation

Before 2010, CJER offered a Traffic Institute every two years. In 2011, rather than offering an institute, three, two-day regional Traffic Orientation courses were offered. Now the Traffic Orientation is offered once per year, and there is no traffic content at the College.

E. WORKGROUP EVALUATION PROCESS

Overview of Process

The Workgroup focused on both effectiveness and efficiency. The content for all New Judge Programs was reviewed for completeness, whether the content was essential for new judges, and possible unintentional overlap of content. The Workgroup found that only 5 percent of a new judge's time in the first two years is spent attending NJO, the College, and one PAO program.

The Workgroup examined the evaluations for each of the new judge education programs for themes and issues raised by judges who attended the program(s) over the past two years. The Workgroup evaluated the possibility of shortening the current schedule for each program in light of travel demands, out-of-court time, and overall cost. These scenarios for the College are presented in Section G. This was balanced with the need for excellent, comprehensive education for new judges that includes both group interaction and building a community of support for new judges to assist them in the transition from advocate to judge.

The Workgroup, through Judge Mary Ann O'Malley, solicited comments from Trial Court Presiding Judges related to the Workgroup charge. Seven courts responded with comments for the Workgroup's consideration.

The Workgroup considered cost and recognized that live delivery is the most costly. It was difficult to quantify new judge education in terms of dollars and cents. The Workgroup did analyze multiple delivery options and thoroughly reviewed the curriculum designs, the course outlines, and the evaluations, as well as feedback from several Presiding Judges and recent new judge program attendees. CJER staff provided a brief history of CJER's curriculum development history and process (see Curriculum Development Process Summary, attached).

New Judge Orientation

The Workgroup reviewed the recently completed extensive revision of the New Judge Orientation curriculum as well as the schedule for the program. The Workgroup met with Judge David Rothman, author of the California Judicial Conduct Handbook and a member of the New Judge Orientation Curriculum Workgroup, who discussed the revisions to the NJO curriculum. Judge Rothman made a very compelling presentation to the Workgroup on the value and significance of the New Judge Orientation content and his strong belief in the need for new judges to have the opportunity to attend all three programs (New Judge Orientation, B. E. Witkin Judicial College, and Primary Assignment Orientation) in their current form. He also addressed the issue of intentional duplication especially in the areas of ethics, demeanor, and fairness as necessary to reinforce the importance of each in the daily life and work of a judge.

Judge Rothman's letter to the Chief Justice and Judicial Council (Regarding: The Strategic Evaluation Committee Report, Item SP 12-05 Comment on Section 7—Education Division and Judicial Education) was provided to the Workgroup for consideration and can be found in Section I of this document.

Additionally, the Workgroup reviewed and discussed the New Judge Orientation 2011 and 2012 evaluations.

Lastly, the Workgroup considered and weighed the concerns expressed by the Commission on Judicial Performance in its September 14, 2011, correspondence to the Director of CJER, Dr. Diane Cowdrey, in Section J.

B. E. Witkin Judicial College

The Workgroup spent significant time reviewing evaluations of curriculum and content for the B. E. Witkin Judicial College. Evaluations included those from the 2008, 2009, and 2011 College participants and the 2010 Survey of Past College Attendees.

The Workgroup members reviewed the 2012 B. E. Witkin Judicial College course schedule and course descriptions, and discussed the program content and design at length at its May and June meetings. The Workgroup members, which included Presiding Judges (current and past) and faculty (current and past) for the College, NJO, and PAOs, discussed their personal experiences as court leaders and faculty, as well as the feedback received from participants in the evaluation documents.

The issue of further shortening the college was discussed from the perspective of cost, efficiency, and programmatic loss. The Workgroup examined several potential scenarios and evaluated the potential gains and losses resulting from each scenario.

The Workgroup members studied and discussed the issue of intentional and unintentional overlap between the College and the other New Judge education programs. They also reviewed online educational offerings for new judges.

Primary Assignment Orientation

The Workgroup reviewed the curriculum designs for each area of the law, focusing on the content that each committee identified as essential for new judges. The Workgroup then reviewed the outlines for each of the nine Primary Assignment Orientation courses as follows: Civil Law Basic PAO, Criminal Law PAO, Family Law PAO, Juvenile Delinquency PAO, Juvenile Dependency PAO, Probate PAO, Traffic PAO, Experienced Civil Law PAO, and Limited Jurisdiction Civil Law PAO.

The Workgroup also reviewed an analysis by the Criminal Law Curriculum Committee and CJER staff of overlap that exists between content offered at the Criminal Law PAO and the Judicial College. The Workgroup understands that this analysis is representative of that which has been done for the other PAOs, and that the criminal law analysis is the most extensive because the bulk of subject matter content at the Judicial College is criminal law.

F. FINDINGS AS TO QUESTIONS POSED IN CHARGE BY GOVERNING COMMITTEE

- 1. Is the current approach to education for new judges meeting the educational needs of this audience in the most effective and efficient manner possible?*

The Workgroup found that the current approach meets the needs of new judges in a highly effective and efficient manner. CJER, through its curriculum and oversight committees, has instituted an objective, critical, and insightful assessment of each of its programs. These assessments result in ongoing program refinements in delivery, calendaring, and content. CJER's Director and staff demonstrate a keen awareness of the economics associated with program delivery, and they work diligently to reduce costs and maintain allocated budgets. They also rely on the acumen of experienced judicial officers and CJER's internal curriculum plans to identify new judges' needs and to develop responsive program content. The program planning, delivery methods, and assessment process result in a flexibility that allows for a timely incorporation of changes in the law.

The Workgroup also found that presenting these foundational new judge education programs through face-to-face programs is especially effective and efficient. Although distance delivery methods are less costly, it does not outweigh the benefits of live, face-to-face education for new judges. Live, face-to-face delivery incorporates mentoring practices and approaches by experienced judicial officers. This approach adds a crucial refinement to the presentation of the designed program content. Among other benefits, during the live presentations, the instructors and seminar leaders immediately address the new judges' expressed concerns and questions, thereby enhancing the curriculum, building an atmosphere of trust, and assisting the new judge in gaining both knowledge and confidence. Further, it has been regularly reported to oversight committees that the mentoring process continues beyond program schedules—at all casual and planned contacts with instructors and seminar leaders.

The instructors and seminar leaders remain an available, invaluable resource who can be called upon throughout a new judge's career.

In making its findings, the Workgroup read and considered several years of participant survey responses. Upon being surveyed, typical new judge remarks have included the following that strongly support the Workgroup evaluation of the efficacy of live programs:

"Each (faculty) added unique elements to wonderful whole. I can't think of changes to improve."

"[R]eceiving wisdom of such gifted, knowledgeable and talented judges; observing judicial demeanor and best practices modeled; interaction between participants and faculty; practical focus and structure on dealing with foundation of good judging . . ."

- 2. Given the wide variety of methods for delivering education, would you support the use of alternative approaches for the delivery of new judge education that could reduce the length of time new judges are currently required to spend away from their courts while continuing to meet their education needs?*

The Workgroup found that new judge education is currently well-supported by distance products that can be found online in the Serranus Judicial Education Toolkits. The New Judge Toolkit was especially developed to provide information and education for judges prior to their participation in NJO or the College. The Workgroup supports the continued development of education for new and experienced judges that can be accessed at the time of need rather than at a program. It did not, however, fill the need for live education that creates and supports a network or community of judges. Each of the current live programs that are the focus of this report offers judges the opportunity to work with their colleagues across county lines, share expertise, and support the development of consistent statewide practices.

The Workgroup found that the seminar meetings and relationships with seminar leaders were an essential part of new judge education and often focus on “the art of being a judge.”

The Workgroup found that the format of the College as two consecutive weeks rather than two separate weeks creates the best environment for learning and exchanging of ideas, building trust, and building lasting relationships with faculty and among participants. Additionally the Workgroup noted that no cost savings would be realized by separating the program into separate weeks.

3. Should specific content areas be added to or deleted from the B. E. Witkin Judicial College (College), New Judge Orientation (NJO), or the Primary Assignment Orientations (PAOs), and if so, what content and what delivery method is the most appropriate?

The content included in each of the live programs is identified and developed by judges serving on Workgroups for this specific purpose. Each year the content is examined to be certain it appropriately and completely meets the needs of new judges, and that the delivery methods chosen are the most efficient and effective for that content.

In addition, the CJER Curriculum Committees in each area of substantive law and the Judicial Ethics and Fairness Curriculum Committee work to identify the content that they recommend is developed for distance delivery. This process is driven by experienced judges, and the resulting products are designed and developed with judicial Workgroups and education attorneys working together to build the final product.

This current process for identifying content, developing programs, and delivering education for new judges was validated and supported by the Workgroup.

4. How can the issue of having deliberately overlapping content in these programs, knowing that it is intended to repeat certain content areas that are critical for new judges, be best addressed?

The current process includes a review by the education attorneys who staff each program followed by a discussion of the respective Workgroups on how to limit the overlap to intentional rather than unintentional duplication of content. Content overlap that does occur is intentional, having been identified and approved by Workgroup members for each of the new judge programs as educationally necessary and essential for the transition from advocate to judge.

Some content is covered in both the PAO and the College, but for specific reasons. For example, some areas are covered in the PAOs with specific focus on the mechanics, whereas at the College, the judge's role in that area is covered in greater depth (interpreters, pleas, evidence, jury selection, trial management). Additionally, at the College, there is some content provided in concurrent sessions, which might be covered at a PAO. This is so that judges can choose to take a concurrent session in an area that may not be their primary assignment, but one in which they still need to have a working knowledge. Another reason is that some content is fairly complex and completely foreign to judges who lack a criminal law background (e.g., gang issues, felony sentencing, search and seizure). The Workgroup found these rationales satisfactory.

The substantive law curriculum committees regularly work with the Judicial College Steering Committee to review the content offered at each of the new judge education programs (NJO, the PAOs, and the College) to ensure that (1) the content that the curriculum committees have determined to be essential for new judges is included in at least one of the three new judge education programs, and (2) that the essential education is duplicated within the new judge education programs only when necessary.

G. WORKGROUP RECOMMENDATIONS

Recommendations for New Judge Orientation

Recommendation #1: The Workgroup recommended that New Judge Orientation remains as currently designed and delivered. The Workgroup found that the current content and method of delivery are the most effective and efficient way to provide this education.

Recommendation #2: The Workgroup recommended that CJER continue to evaluate and refine the NJO program through the work of its curriculum committees and Workgroups to eliminate unnecessary overlap with College and PAOs.

The basis for the above recommendations is contained in the discussion below.

Issue #1: Changes to NJO design and delivery

The Workgroup discussed the benefits and drawbacks of possible changes, including regionalizing the program and shortening the program to less than one week. The Workgroup also discussed the option of putting some of the content online. After studying the evaluations and feedback from Presiding Judges, and taking into consideration their own experience as attendees and as faculty/seminar leaders for New Judge Education Programs, the Workgroup members determined that the current format is critical to the effective delivery of the content. Offering the program regionally would limit the statewide perspective that program participants are provided in the current format. The Workgroup felt it was essential that a new judge gain an appreciation that he or she is joining the California Judicial Branch, the third branch of government, not solely the local bench.

The Workgroup found that only 5 percent of a new judge's time in the first two years is spent attending NJO, the College, and PAO. The one exception would be the few judges who attend multiple PAOs. New judge education is focused on preparing judicial officers for their career, moving from advocate to neutral judge. The seminar setting for both NJO and the College supports the learning and change from advocate to judge and encourages community building, mentoring, resource sharing, and identifying with their new role as judge.

Issue #2: Overlap of Content

CJER currently has a robust process that connects the education attorneys with the curriculum committees and Workgroups that oversee new judge education to continually identify possible content overlap and evaluate whether existing overlap is essential for emphasis or unintentional and could be eliminated from one program while covered in another. The education attorneys are the links between the groups planning the education each year and work together with their respective committees to continually refine the curriculum and courses to include as little overlap as possible while still meeting the need to emphasize and reinforce some content as identified by the committees and Workgroups.

Recommendations for B. E. Witkin Judicial College

Recommendation #1: The College program, as recently modified in 2011 and 2012, reflected reductions in both length and content and should continue as currently constituted. The Workgroup found that the current content and methods of delivery were the most effective and efficient way to provide this unique orientation and education for the new judicial officer.

Recommendation #2: The Workgroup recommended that the B. E. Witkin Judicial College Steering Committee explore the use of WebEx to connect seminar groups after the College had concluded as a way to answer questions and to see how the college has impacted their work back at the court. This would also be a way to gain feedback from the participants on the College after they have had a month or two to digest the learning and apply it.

Recommendation #3: B. E. Witkin Judicial College Steering Committee, with the assistance of CJER Education Attorneys, should continue to evaluate and refine the program to eliminate unnecessary overlap with NJO and PAOs.

The basis for the above recommendations is contained in the discussion below.

Some Presiding Judges and College participants have voiced concerns about the length of the College. Some Presiding Judges expressed the difficulty in covering the courts presided over by College participants for a two-week period. Participants voiced concerns about the length of the College from the perspective of information overload, overlap with the Primary Overview Course and NJO, and the length of time away from home and families.

The concerns of the Presiding Judges are understandable. Regardless of the size of the court, coverage for a courtroom for two weeks is administratively difficult in the best of times and certainly more problematic in these times. With the addition of a primary assignment orientation requirement to the NJO and College requirement in the first two years, the additional administrative burdens might well be solved by shortening the College.

The Workgroup wanted to place the time away by a new judicial officer in perspective. The College, NJO, and PAO courses comprise at least 20 days of education in a new judicial officers' first two years after their oath. The Standards of Judicial Administration suggest that a judicial officer engage in at least 8 days of education each year. Thus, in a two-year period, that time is only lengthened by four days for the new judicial officer. When one looks at the conceivable number of days on the bench in a two-year period and deducts the 20 days for the two-year period, education of the newest members of the bench is 5 percent of their time.

The Workgroup discussed the following possible scenarios suggested by a small number of past college attendees and Presiding Judges:

Option #A: Shorten the College from 10 days to 8 days by scheduling classes that run from Saturday to Saturday.

- This would only compound and worsen past participants' concerns with the exhausting college course schedule that currently exists to give participants the weekend off; going straight through one or two weekends would add to this level of exhaustion, and thereby potentially reduce the learning for the participants.
- Past participants have expressed concern about being away from families for the two Monday to Friday weeks of the current schedule. Changing from two 5-day weeks to a solid 7- or 10-day schedule might be equally challenging for families.
- Holding the College over a Saturday or Sunday would conflict with the religious practices and observances of some of the judges, making it difficult or impossible for them to attend.

For these reasons, Option A was rejected.

Option #B: Instead of two consecutive weeks, separate the two weeks over the two-year period, so that the College curriculum is staggered. The Workgroup could not identify any cost savings for this scenario, so from an economic standpoint, this option would only assist courts administratively, not fiscally.

- This option would dampen one of the stated goals of the College which is to begin building and reinforcing a community of statewide judges—interruption of this process might occur.
- Seminar groups (a highly rated part of the program) would only just be reaching the necessary levels of familiarity and trust that support learning and develop ongoing relationships at the end of the first week.
- Scheduling for return to “Part 2” by all attendees who attended a particular “Part 1” would be challenging. It would be preferred by most and be deemed essential to attend with your College Seminar group—but court calendars may not make that possible to accommodate. Changing to a different college group for Part 2 was not advisable in the estimation of the Workgroup.
- Continuity of faculty and seminar leaders on second week might be challenging.
- Presiding Judges of some courts told the Workgroup that two separate weeks would be more difficult for them to schedule around than two consecutive weeks.

For these reasons, Option B was rejected.

Option #C: In some fashion, shorten the College by one or two days.

- The Workgroup was advised that since 2011, the College had already been reduced by a number of hours equivalent to one day. (The College starts on Monday, rather than Sunday of the first week, and Monday afternoon of the second week, rather than Monday morning. This has eliminated costs associated with opening dinners, travel, and overnight accommodations.) The Steering Committee is reluctant to engage in further cuts, as that would impact the content of the course work.
- As a result of the modifications already in place, the Workgroup discussed this at length, including which day or days might be eliminated and how that would benefit the court. The Workgroup determined that the benefit of gaining one day for the court over keeping the content intact and maintaining the current schedule was not sufficient to recommend the change.
- The Steering Committee is continually looking for more time to cover even more content at the College. The Steering Committee has a waiting list of content suggestions that have been made to add to the College.

For these reasons, Option C was rejected.

Option #D: Shorten the College by moving some of the content online.

- This option highlights the difference between orientation versus education. The purpose of New Judge Education via NJO and the College is to offer information, surely, but it is also to offer "art of judging" guidance by senior judicial officers and through group discussions in a safe-harbor environment. This atmosphere cannot be achieved through online education.
- Although the Workgroup places a high value on CJER's online offerings, it was the consensus of the group that the College serves the dual purpose of educating and providing a community of interests and mentoring for new judges that must be delivered in a live, face-to-face environment even if this is at a higher cost.

For these reasons, Option D was rejected.

Issue #2: College Course Content: Duplication and Overlap

The College Steering Committee has been committed to eliminating duplication and overlap since instituting PAO courses. Currently, program Workgroups and CJER staff attorneys work to identify unintentional overlap and move that content to other delivery options.

The attention to unintentional overlap is given by all the education attorneys as part of their work with Workgroups and curriculum committees. Fine-tuning is a continual process. In past years, when overlap was identified, some family and juvenile content was eliminated from the College, but upon later review, family law content was added back in. Again, constant evaluation and modification by the College Steering Committee is ongoing in order to be responsive to the courts and individual new judges' needs.

The Commission on Judicial Performance (CJP) has identified common ethical missteps by new judicial officers (within their first five years on the bench). The CJP findings prompted both the NJO Workgroup and the College Steering Committee to take a hard look at ethics content at both NJO and the College. The NJO Workgroup developed a new format for NJO based upon Judge Rothman's "8 Pillars" model, integrating ethics content throughout the NJO program. Judge Rothman, who is both a member of the NJO Workgroup and serves as faculty for the ethics course at the College, also integrated the "8 Pillars" model in the College ethics course. Judge Rothman and members of the NJO Workgroup worked to identify unintentional overlap in NJO and College ethics content, while maintaining intentional overlap necessary to reinforce the core ethical concepts for new judges by repetition. Much of the education for a new judge only makes sense once he or she has a context. Simply stated, new judges don't know what they don't know. NJO functions as a type of "issue spotting" educational experience. The College goes over important material already introduced, but as participants have more time on the bench, coverage of the ethics content at the College is wider in scope and deeper in exploration. Therefore, the best possible model of monitoring the overlap and knowing what is necessary for repetition is achieved.

Issue #3: Cost, Content, and Perception Issues

The Workgroup was asked to look at whether efforts were being made to adjust to cost, content, and perception issues that have arisen in the past four years.

As has been expressed throughout and deserves emphasis here, the College is continually being fine-tuned by the Steering Committee. This fine-tuning has resulted in the following changes:

1. The College has been shortened by 8 hours.
2. Some content has been eliminated and some returned, based upon review of the evaluations.
3. The Steering Committee eliminated the non-education content.
4. The College has essentially "gone paperless" by moving reference materials online, limiting the amount of paper course materials to those actually signed up for the course, and thereby eliminating costly binders.
5. Fewer CJER staff are present onsite at the College.
6. Fewer formal dinners are included in the program to cut costs.
7. Most of the seminar leaders also serve as faculty for one or more courses in addition to leading their seminar groups, thereby serving "double-duty."

One issue has been the recent site of the College at the Hayes Conference Center in San Jose. Previous colleges have been housed at the Clark Kerr Campus at UC Berkeley and the Holiday Inn in downtown San Francisco. Clark Kerr was primitive at best and generated multiple complaints: bugs, break-ins, mold, bunk-beds, and shared restrooms. Renovations performed in 2011 led Clark Kerr to raise its prices, rendering it more expensive than its hotel competitors, with fewer amenities. Holiday Inn conference rooms were in the basement, the hotel did not engender a campus atmosphere, and numerous safety complaints were made about the facility. Other sites that have bid on the Judicial College program have not had enough meeting rooms to accommodate the program's needs.

State contracting guidelines mandate that the site that offers accommodations suitable for the program at the lowest bid must be selected. For the last several years, the only location that fits that description is the Hayes Conference Center. The Hayes Conference Center easily and comfortably accommodates all the program's needs—providing sufficient meeting space, comfortable sleeping rooms, and a crime-free, safer environment. The problem has been that it is the site of the Hayes Mansion, a historical landmark, and the grounds are lush. This has led to the perception that despite its cost being bid at the same price as or lower than the other locales, the "lushness" has been commented upon in the media as inappropriate for training in these hard economic times. The CJER Governing Committee was concerned about these perceptions, but did not wish to compromise the quality educational experience engendered by eliminating uncomfortable accommodations and inadequate teaching space found at the other locations previously housing the College.

As noted throughout this report—and relied upon by the Workgroup—comprehensive evaluations are made by the participants and the instructors to ensure that course content is accurate, delivered well, and delivered in a cost-effective fashion. There was also a survey conducted of past attendees who were 2, 3, and 4 years out from their college experience. Although the length of the College was a concern for a small number of respondents, the uncomfortable facilities provided by the Holiday Inn and Clark Kerr were a frequent source of negative feedback.

Issue #4: The Need for In-Person Training

The Workgroup was tasked with determining whether and why face-to-face instruction was necessary, and whether the College should be streamlined to include remote and/or distance learning through online courses, Webinars, and other mechanisms.

The Workgroup concluded that the small seminar groups were essential to the success of the College and the learning environment. Seminar groups cover content that is critical to the judge's job, but not covered formally elsewhere, e.g., handling blanket papering by a party and stress management, managing staff appropriately with respect to the role of a judge, asking for help, and knowing where to go for help, just to name a few of these topics. These are essential for new judges, and not all are covered comprehensively in other statewide and local training. The design of the seminar groups and meetings is one that encourages dialogue among the judges—sharing experiences, asking questions, and taking advantage of the more experienced seminar leaders. Seminar groups are very learner centered, providing time to reflect and share. Nowhere else is an understanding of a judge's role as part of the third branch of government covered—this is the essence of the emphasis of orientation versus education.

Data from surveys of past College participants have demonstrated strong support for the seminar groups as integral to the education offered at the college and personally valuable as relationships are often formed that last for years. In the 2010 survey of past participants at the College, 70 percent responded in the positive to the seminar meetings they attended. One participant wrote: "The group meetings were useful in two ways, first as an opportunity to get to know and interact with the group members and, second as an opportunity to gain insight from group members who had particular expertise in various areas."

In short, the College is about learning, changing behavior, and avoiding potential missteps before they occur. To achieve these results, standard learning principles require live courses. A live classroom/group discussion setting is the most effective way to ease the transition from advocate to neutral judge. The quality and quantity of mentoring that is offered at New Judge Education programs could not occur in an online environment. A solid support system and lifetime friendships and professional relationships begin at NJO and the College. Because a judge cannot look to another organization or government entity to support him or her in their work, these relationships become foundational to his or her learning.

The Workgroup recommended that seminar groups be encouraged to use online resources to continue their discussions after the College; many already have reunions and keep in touch, as their experience together at the College was a bonding opportunity that transcended court district boundaries. The isolating nature of the judicial officer's job can lead to stress and missteps. The long-term support provided by tightly bonded seminar groups can help judicial officers offset their isolation.

Issue #5: Course Content in General

The issue is whether or not course content is relevant to today's judicial officer due to a judge's prior knowledge in a field, the specific assignment, and the existence of PAOs for subject matter education.

It is axiomatic that a knowledgeable judicial officer promotes public trust and confidence in the branch, and the public is best served. To that end, recent college content has been designed to build from one week to the other, from one program to another. These are not stand-alone education programs. They are designed to work together to cover the essential knowledge and skills a new judge needs to be effective on the bench.

The variety of courses has also become necessary for public trust in a judge as trying budget times make it more likely that a judge cannot be a specialist. Judges are now being asked more and more to be interdisciplinary, sitting on multiple assignments due to the challenging budget environment. Even a small amount of exposure to content for some areas increases confidence, and that is a benefit to the new judge and the Presiding Judge. This is especially true of small courts and is important when looking at the content to include in the College.

The Workgroup considered a suggestion regarding the plenary session: "As to Judicial College—allow opt-out of specific classes in which judicial officer is already familiar and replace with assignment specific updates only." This position ignores the fact that judges learn from different perspectives of their colleagues and faculty, not just their personal knowledge. Learning and applying knowledge as a judge is most likely different from that of a practitioner.

The Steering Committee's 2010 survey of judges who attended the College in years past demonstrated that after some time following the college, the necessity of plenary courses was understood and appreciated. Out of concern for this comment, the College Steering Committee started planning a new college schedule without using the past college schedule. This was done to see if, from a purely curriculum planning perspective, a different college program would emerge. Even starting from scratch, the Steering Committee still arrived at effectively the same content contained in the existing college schedule.

The SEC Report noted: “With respect to judicial education, the Education Division is to be commended for its practice of surveying judicial officers to determine whether education course content has been taught in satisfactory fashion. This is one of several instances in which an AOC division makes a consistent effort to determine whether its end-use consumers are satisfied with its services.”

As discussed above, the College Steering Committee has relied heavily over the years on feedback from participants and has altered the College content accordingly.

Recommendations for Primary Assignment Orientation Courses

Recommendation #1: For the PAOs for new judges, the Workgroup recommended that each course remain as currently designed and delivered for the time being. The Workgroup found that the current content and methods of delivery were the most effective and efficient way to provide this education.

Recommendation #2: The Workgroup recommended that PAO Workgroups and education attorneys continue to annually examine the possibility of moving some content to blended learning options without reducing the quality of the learning experience.

Recommendation #3: The Workgroup recommended that PAO faculty teams explore the possibility of designing separate orientation courses for experienced judges returning to an assignment or use blended learning (a combination of live, online, video, WebEx, etc.) for delivery of some of the content to that audience. The goal would be shorter PAOs for that audience and at less cost to the courts. The Workgroup did recognize that a separate orientation course already exists for experienced civil law judges returning to that assignment. The Workgroup also recognized that both these possibilities could result in increased costs and resource demands for CJER.

Recommendation #4: The Workgroup recommended that PAO Workgroups, with the assistance of CJER education attorneys, continue their current practice of evaluating and refining the programs to avoid unnecessary overlap with NJO and College curriculum, recognizing that some of the overlap is intentional and necessary to emphasize the importance of the content.

Recommendation #5: The Workgroup recommended that CJER explore the possibility of moving a PAO to southern California.

The basis for the above recommendations is contained in the discussion below.

Issue #1: Live vs. distance delivery

The Workgroup discussed online or distance delivery of the content offered at the PAOs and concluded that a new judge needs the opportunity to work with experienced judges, learning from and with his/her colleagues.

Although many of CJER's online products support this education, it is important to note that although the online products are an effective way to introduce judges to new content, the live training is the most effective way to provide new judges a way to explore the content in detail—to safely ask questions, practice skills, and consider alternatives.

The Curriculum Committees for each substantive law area have discussed and come to the same conclusion: that PAOs for new judges need to be delivered live. These same committees identified additional content for distance delivery that expands the learning beyond the PAO.

Issue #2: Experienced Judges

The Workgroup recognizes that PAOs often have very experienced judges returning to an assignment, and they have different needs than a new judge. These judges may be served by online delivery of some or all of the content in a PAO.

One serious concern of the Workgroup was that if PAO content is offered online for experienced judges, those judges will not be able to find the time to complete the online learning. Live delivery provides an uninterrupted time and space for education and focuses the learners on the content and applying the learning.

Issue #3: Content Overlap

The Workgroup found that a comprehensive review of content for PAOs for potential overlap of content with the College was done by the PAO Workgroups with the assistance of CJER staff. Some content was only touched on in the PAO and then covered in greater depth at the College. Some content has been flagged by a Workgroup and faculty as necessary to repeat in an effort to emphasize the significance of the content. Overlap between NJO and the College in the areas of ethics and fairness particularly is intentional and necessary.

Issue #4: Moving one or more PAO programs to southern California

This recommendation might result in a reduction in both travel costs for the courts and in the time away from the bench. The Workgroup did recognize that this would increase the cost for CJER to support the program. The cost-effectiveness for this change would need to be analyzed against the possible loss of a statewide opportunity for judges to meet and learn in a community setting and the total savings, if any. It is anticipated that judges from the north could attend a PAO in southern California, but more likely that judges from the north would attend in San Francisco and judges in the south would attend in Southern California to save time and money for hotels and travel.

Closing

Despite the identical language, literature, tools, and tactics deployed by lawyers, the transition between lawyer and judicial officer is not easy: although lawyers and judges speaking the same language and using the same legal principles, they deploy them in a way that was merely observed and not practiced. Leaving the world of advocacy to enter the world of objectivity after a 30-second oath is not easy; there is definitely a great deal at stake in this transition process. Regardless of where a judge practices his other judicial skills—Northern, Central, or Southern California, small judicial district or a large one, from one with high crime, high economies, or rural concerns—all are tasked with making decisions that directly impact people's lives. Should this tenant be evicted? Should this defendant spend 30 days or 30 years in a jail cell? Where should a child grow up—in foster care? In the care of one parent over the other when you've had less than 5 minutes to size up the warring parents? Will this small claims case, with only one side who can appeal, even though a small amount, impact the small business owner in front of you? Do we issue that injunction to change the course of a corporation's life, the lives of its employees, and the lives of its customers?

California's New Judge Education programs are designed to address the dichotomy that exists between lawyering and judging. New judge education is critical to sustaining the credibility of our branch of government and to making sure that we are mindful of our roles as judges, mindful of the rule of law, and that our decisions are reasoned and carried out with both compassion and objectivity. These programs provide the opportunity for new judges to engage meaningfully and over time with their peers and experienced judges to ensure that they successfully make the transition from advocate to judge. The Workgroup that reviewed these programs made their recommendations based on this understanding and what will ultimately best serve the people of California.

I. LETTER FROM JUDGE DAVID ROTHMAN DATED JULY 22, 2012

July 22, 2012

To

The Honorable Tani Cantil-Sakauyue
Chief Justice of California and the Judicial Council of California

From

David M. Rothman
1729 Madera Street
Berkeley, CA 94707

Regarding: The Strategic Evaluation Committee Report, Item SP 12-05
Comment on Section-7 – Education Division and Judicial Education*Dear Chief Justice and Members of the Judicial Council:

Thank you for the opportunity to address the Report of the Strategic Evaluation Committee (SEC). I would like to give my views on certain portions of the part of the Report that deal with judicial education aspects of the section regarding the Education Division of the Administrative Office of the Courts (AOC). I will not be commenting on any other parts of the Report.

The present budget crises in our state combined with certain findings in the SEC Report raise concerns for the future of the one of the oldest and highly regarded judicial education programs in the United States, with consequential harm to the quality of our judiciary and the people of this state.

General comment on "Cost Benefit Analysis"

The Education section of the SEC Report contains a number of evaluations based on a "cost-benefit" conclusion in regard to judicial education programs. The Report, however, does not contain an explanation of the standards by for making such cost-benefit conclusions.

What all judicial officers (whom I will call judges here) do, the art of judging, and the fundamental mission of the central principle of of being a judge (assuring the honesty and integrity of the process of decision making and the decisions they make, including the courage to do what it right), is something that judges learn through experience, education programs and by constantly seeking to gain self-awareness. I do not believe that the value of any of this is measurable by examining the "cost-benefit" of the educational components of such efforts. Judges are not little businesses that produce products. They are guardians of our Constitutions, the Rule of Law, our system of justice, and our liberty.

Local judicial education programs as a substitute for the statewide model

The Report suggests that education programs in large courts may be a substitute of some of CJER's programs that require judges from around the state to attend, such as new judge education programs and new assignment programs. (Pp. 107-108)

Obviously reliance on a variety of sources for judicial education in addition to CJER is beneficial to judges, including self study, programs provided by legal education providers, local court programs, and California Judges Association education programs. All are important in assuring that judges are well trained, fulfilling their obligations under the Code of Judicial Ethics to establish, maintain and enforce "high standards of conduct," and "maintain professional competence in the law." (See Canons 1, 2A, and 3B(2)) None, however, are a substitute for CJER's core programs.

Over the last half century the judicial institution, first through the California Judges Association and shortly thereafter through the Judicial Council, assumed the duty of assuring that all judges in California have a common understanding of what it means to be a judge. Over the years we have come to accept that there are not 58 legal systems in California administering a "law unto themselves," but a single rule of law with highest standards and best practices accepted throughout the state that assure the rule of law.

The suggestion in the Report that large local courts may be able to undertake some of what CJER does poses the potential of undermining the achievements of judicial education of the past 50 years and eliminating important values for judicial education of these programs.

For example, the Report's conclusion based on "cost-benefit considerations" in reviewing this subject ignores the value of live, in person, programs where judges from around the state meet and study together. The personal connections and discussions among judges from courts all over the state, large and small, rural and urban, north and south, are a critical element of CJER's judicial education program. In every program I have taught the participant judges from diverse backgrounds and courts share their knowledge, problem solving, perceptions and ideas. Almost invariably we realize that everyone (including faculty) learns as much from one another as they do from the faculty. This and many other benefits of meetings among judges from diverse courts should not be rejected because one has difficulty placing a value on what is learned.

One must also be concerned that the focus of local court education may tend to subjects and content that are perceived by court managers as "useful", "practical," "bread and butter," and aimed at the efficient functioning of the local court, rather than those subjects that focus on the basic premises of what it means to be a judge and judging.

New judge education

The Committee's Report contains reference to the concerns of "many judicial officers and courts" about having new judges away from their courts for the one week for New Judge Orientation and two weeks for the Judicial College. (Report p. 107) There is also concern expressed in regard to education required for a judge's new assignment.

In my 34 years of CJER teaching (as well as my years in managing the West District of the Los Angeles Superior Court) this concern is regularly voiced. It is understandable that a court might not want to suffer the loss of a new judge for so long. Even so, I am convinced by my experience that most judges and presiding judges in California who have this concern know that, in the long run, the loss of three or four weeks of education is inconsequential when weighed against the value to the system of justice of providing comprehensive judicial education to new judges.

It is, of course, never inappropriate to reexamine and improve what the Judicial College and NJO are doing. These are core institutions of California's judiciary and their curriculum and management are of great importance to the people of this state, our judges and the Judicial Council. In addition CJER's management and structure should also be studied and improved. But proposals for actions that could result in undoing the Judicial College and NJO should be declined.

Finally, we need to be mindful that judicial education is an essential component of judicial accountability. Adequate judicial education helps insure that the conduct of judges meets the highest standards, and that a judge cannot credibly claim that the judge did not know his or her ethical responsibilities. The stakes are high when the quality of the judicial education institutions is compromised.

Attorneys in CJER

Recommendation No. 7-20 the Committee Report contains the conclusion that "education specialist positions are staffed by attorneys, a staffing practice that appears unnecessary." This conclusion seems to rest on the idea that what attorney educators do can be done by non-attorney staff members at less cost. I believe this conclusion is wrong.

It is true that attorneys cost more. It is not true that they are "unnecessary" in the role of managing and planning education programs and publications. CJER's first and most critical job is the planning and administering programs for education of judges, and these programs must include careful quality control by a staff that includes lawyers. The judicial education curriculum is fundamentally about legal issues (the constitution, statutes, rules, case law, procedures, the Code of Judicial Ethics, and so on) from the point of view of a judge. Eliminating lawyers from education staff at CJER to save money would leave the judge-lecturer without the back-up necessary to prepare and deliver reliable content.

Final note

There is no question that much can be done to improve the accountability and functioning of AOC as well as judicial education in California. Building trust among judges and the public by objective appropriate analysis and constructive change, although hard, painful and difficult, is always necessary, appropriate and doable. It will take work, understanding and patience (three essential qualities of being a judge). We need to remind ourselves of Coach John Wooden's advice: "Be quick, but don't hurry."

Sincerely yours,

David M. Rothman

Dear Dr. Cowdrey:

I am pleased to hear that you are interested in the State Bar of Texas' efforts to improve the judicial system. I am confident that your expertise and leadership will be instrumental in this effort.

The State Bar of Texas is committed to providing the highest quality of legal services to the public. We are currently working on several initiatives to improve the judicial system, including the implementation of a new judicial selection process. We would like to invite you to participate in this process and share your insights and expertise.

We are currently seeking individuals who are interested in the judicial system and who have the ability to lead and inspire others. We are looking for individuals who are committed to the public good and who are willing to take on the challenges of this role.

If you are interested in this opportunity, please contact me at [phone number] or [email address]. We would be happy to discuss this opportunity further with you.

K. ADDITIONAL EDUCATION RESOURCES FOR NEW JUDGES PROVIDED BY CJER

Publications and Online Courses

In 1965, Government Code §§68551 and 68552 were enacted. Section 68551 authorized the Judicial Council to conduct institutes and seminars for the judiciary. Section 68552 authorized the Judicial Council to publish and distribute “manuals, guides, checklists, and other materials designed to assist the judiciary.” With this statutory background and authorization, the California Center for Judicial Education and Research (CJER) was formed as a result of an agreement between the California Judges’ Association (CJA) and the Judicial Council in 1973 to eliminate duplications of effort.

From the beginning, a significant part of CJER was producing publications for judicial officers that was based on the statutory authorization and the vision of CJER founders. The publishing effort took shape when CJER took responsibility for publishing the College Notebooks. These publications, originally written by judges who taught at the Judicial College, evolved through the years into the present offering of 62 different publications covering criminal, civil, small claims, domestic violence, probate and conservatorships, landlord-tenant, juvenile dependency and delinquency, traffic, and family law.

CJER has produced and now updates 56 publications ranging in size from benchguides of 120 pages or less to volumes of benchbooks between 600 and 900 pages (see list of CJER publications on pages 36–37).

This evolution did not happen in a vacuum. Throughout the process, CJER has had volunteer judges, either on the Benchguide Planning Committee, reviewing each individual publication, or more recently on the curriculum planning committees, providing judicial guidance and input. That judicial input provides a practical approach to the analytic text now written by CJER staff attorneys. Most of the publications include practical judicial tips suggested by reviewers through the years.

This evolution has continued as the publications became the basis of many of the online courses that have been developed specifically for self-study for judges and SJOs. Online courses are available in Juvenile Dependency and Delinquency, Criminal, Family Law, Small Claims, Traffic, and Landlord-Tenant. For the past eight years, CJER has produced and updated more than 20 online courses that provide education credits between 1 and 3.5 hours each. These courses, like the publications, are updated regularly and provide training on an as-needed basis.

The quality of the publications and online courses is demonstrated by the fact that the faculty for the new judge programs, including New Judge Orientation, the Judicial College, and the Primary Assignment Orientation courses, not only recommend CJER publications to the participants in the classes they teach, but use them as course reference materials as well, and refer to them repeatedly throughout the programs. Faculty for the Family Law Orientation and the Juvenile Delinquency Orientation courses ask that participants in those courses review the videos and online courses in those areas before coming to class. And while new judges await the Orientation course offerings, they are encouraged to review the publications and online courses in their assignment areas.

Experienced judges and subordinate judicial officers also find the publications and online courses invaluable as both reference material as well as self-study material. They provide a quick resource that experienced judges use to research areas that are new to them or to make sure they are up to speed on new developments in an area with which they are already familiar.

Numerous published decisions refer to and recommend CJER publications to trial court judges, both as excellent resources and as tools to be used to avoid error. For example, the court recommended CJER publications to trial judges and referenced them as excellent legal resources in Koehler v. Superior Court (2010) 181 Cal. App. 4th 1153, 1158, citing CJER's Courtroom Control Benchguide, and in Fasuyi v. Permatex, Inc. (2008) 167 Cal. App. 4th 681, 691, citing CJER's Civil Benchbook, California Judges Benchbooks: Civil Proceedings—Before Trial.

In its decision in In re I. G. (1st Dist. 2005) 133 Cal. App. 4th 1246, 1254–1255, the court lauded the benefits of CJER's judicial education offerings (including publications), saying: "The sheer volume of cases demonstrating noncompliance with ICWA provides reason enough for supervising juvenile court judges throughout this state to take immediate steps to ensure that all judicial officers under their supervision avail themselves of these educational opportunities [offered by CJER]."

In its opinions in People v. Hinton (3rd Dist. 2004) 121 Cal. App. 4th 655, 661–662, and People v. Norman (3rd Dist. 2007) 157 Cal. App. 4th 460, 467, the court of appeal specifically cited CJER's publication CJER Mandatory Criminal Jury Instructions Handbook as tools to be used to avoid error. Even the California Supreme Court has chastened the lower court for not utilizing CJER's plethora of publications to avoid error. See People v. Heard (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 946, 966, which cited CJER's Death Penalty Benchguides on Pretrial and Guilt Phase, Penalty Phase and Posttrial, and Bench Handbook on Jury Management.

L. CURRICULUM-BASED PLANNING FOR JUDICIAL BRANCH

In early 2000, members of the Governing Committee for the Center for Judicial Education and Research asked staff and members of its numerous Education Committees to design, develop, and implement curriculum-based planning for their respective target audiences. Curriculum-based planning is a process that ensures comprehensive, relevant education is available for individuals throughout their careers and/or assignments. Staff and members of the various Education Committees began a four-year initiative that resulted in curricula for judges and court personnel that include entry, experienced, and advanced levels of content.

In the development of the curriculum work, the processes used and the products envisioned were based on numerous goals, including:

- Providing relevant content to individuals at all levels of their careers.
- Ensuring consistency of content over time, from venue to venue, and from faculty member to faculty member.
- Providing guidance to faculty without inhibiting/stifling their creativity.
- Ensuring that the curriculum work can be used regardless of the course length and delivery mechanism.
- Making the content relevant to the reality of performance of the job.
- Ensuring that the curriculum work is flexible and can be used in a variety of situations by a variety of individuals.

The Three Phases of Curriculum Work

Phase I is a basic assessment of the work of individuals in a particular target audience. Developed by Education Committee members and CJER staff, the Phase I document includes:

- The tasks, skills and abilities, beliefs and values, and associated knowledge and information for the target audience.
- Reflects a grouping of data into areas of similarity for ease of reference and to provide a basic framework for educational content.
- Provides faculty with important basic information not stated in other documents.
- Should always be used in conjunction with Phase II information to develop Phase III.

Phase II is a series of educational designs based on the Phase I work. Developed by Education Committee members and CJER staff, Phase II designs:

- May collapse or expand the original groupings from the Phase I work.
- Are created for entry, experienced, and advanced level learners in the specific content area. [An experienced judge who is entering a criminal assignment would be at the entry level for the criminal curriculum work.]

- Serve as the basis for faculty to create a delivery plan or lesson plan. [The delivery or lesson plan will be influenced by the amount of time available and the delivery mechanism, but will always be based on the Phase II work.]
- Assume that faculty has expertise in the content area.
- Serve as a basic guide that can be expanded upon by faculty based on a variety of factors.
- Include learning objectives, associated content, teaching methods, and learner activities, etc.

Phase III is a series of delivery plans or lesson plans. These plans may differ in look and feel, depending on a variety of factors. The Phase III plans:

- Are the creations of individual faculty
- Reflect the individual expertise of faculty
- Reflect further detail regarding specific content areas
- Are also influenced by faculty review of the Phase I work, which deals with the reality of the work for the target audience
- Are the product of the time available and the delivery mechanism
- May be broader than the Phase I and II work, but should be based on them
- Use at least the first several learning objectives from the Phase II work
- May combine objectives and content from several Phase II designs, if appropriate, depending on a variety of factors

Use of Phase I and Phase II to Develop Phase III

Workgroup members identify:

- Target audience
- Content area/appropriate level of content (entry, experienced, advanced)
- Time available/delivery mechanism (hours or days/live, broadcast, online)
- Potential faculty member(s)

Faculty collaborate with Education Attorneys and Workgroup members to:

- State a goal for the course (what the faculty member hopes to accomplish; information that may be used to promote the course)
- Finalize learning objectives
- Select content based on learning objectives
- Outline the course (the order and timing for various segments)
- Select teaching methods for various components of the course (lecture, panel discussion or debate, demonstration)
- Determine/design teaching aids (PowerPoint, videos, case studies, etc.)
- Design handout materials
- Determine approaches to evaluate participant learning

M. EDUCATION DELIVERY OPTIONS

FACE-TO-FACE EDUCATION—Courses are designed and delivered to encourage participants to interact with the content, and share experiences, expertise, challenges, concerns, and successes. This format is especially effective when interaction and immediate feedback are important.

Statewide: Opportunity to work with participants from across the state and learn from their varied experience. This delivery option is the most costly form of education per participant.

Regional: Focused on a tighter geographical area/content that can be covered in a 1-day format.

Local: Content delivered by courts internally in partnership with CJER.

ONLINE VIDEO—Video for content that can be developed in short segments designed for focused and/or “just-in-time” learning. (24/7)

Lecture Series—Discrete topics delivered in primarily lecture format by one or more subject matter experts that last 30 minutes to 1 hour.

10-Minute Mentor—This series consists of short topic videos presented by judicial officers who are experts in the areas they discuss.

Video Simulation Series—A series of short videos demonstrating techniques that participants can use to increase efficiency and effectiveness.

BROADCAST—Scheduled courses developed for delivery through the statewide satellite broadcast system and focused on specific audiences.

Live Broadcast—Content selected may be either lecture-/information-based (short format) or skills-based (1–2 hour format).

Individual & Facilitated Locally—Courses are repurposed for online desktop viewing and/or viewed by a group in a face-to-face course facilitated locally from DVD.

SELF-PACED ONLINE—Education that is designed for online delivery. These courses represent a range of complexity and interactivity. Content is generally stable, with limited updating requirements. Additionally, online courses provide judicial branch audiences with a convenient reference for related statutes, rules, and forms. (24/7)

PUBLICATIONS—Benchguides, Bench Handbooks, Benchbooks, and Job Aids are resources written and updated by staff with review by Workgroups. These are available in hard and/or soft copy online. (24/7)

VIDEOCONFERENCE TRAINING—Videoconferencing is linking two or more locations (up to 8) by two-way video, allowing participants to communicate with each other and faculty during the course. Best designed for small numbers in multiple locations and short formats (1–2 hours). Currently only available at the Appellate Courts and the AOC Regional Offices.

WEBINARS—Short for Web-based seminar. These are courses transmitted over the Internet, consisting of a shared group environment online that includes live audio and video communication with an audience that is in a remote location from the faculty. Webinars may include video, PPT, chat capability with faculty, faculty feedback, and polling for audience participation (i.e., WebEx).

Each of these delivery options can be part of a blended learning plan. For example, a face-to-face course might require participants to complete an online course before attending the course, or a Webinar might follow a studio video as a way to expand the learning.

EXCERPT FROM ASSIGNED JUDGES PROGRAM
SUMMARY OF ASSIGNMENT POLICIES AND PROTOCOLS
(Revised July 2012)

I. Assignment Distribution Policy

General Policy Statement for Fiscal Year 2012–13

Staff will provide an initial estimate of the number of days of judicial assignment that will be made available to each individual court by the Chief Justice early in the fiscal year. The estimate will be based on the actual FY 12-13 budget for the Assigned Judges Program and on a distribution formula that accounts for each court's profile and is weighted most heavily to the judicial need in each court. The estimate is a tool for planning purposes and does not represent a fixed allocation. Adjustments to individual courts will be made as necessary over the course of the fiscal year based on the available budget and each court's individual needs.

The distribution estimate includes assigned judge coverage for all of the following:

- Criminal, civil, juvenile, family or probate OVERLOAD (for eligible courts);

Information on Judicial Council Directives

Council Directive 81

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts to consider SEC Recommendation 7-20(b), taking into account the results of the classification and compensation studies to be completed.

SEC Recommendation 7-20

The Education Division’s current staffing level is one of the highest in the AOC and should be reduced. To achieve the reduction, the following areas should be reviewed and considered, and appropriate actions taken:

(b) There are in excess of a dozen attorney positions in the Education Division in units such as Design and Consulting, and Publications and Resources, in addition to the Judicial Education unit. All attorney position allocations should be reviewed with a goal of reducing their numbers and/or reallocating them to non-attorney

In 2012 at the time of the initial SEC review there were 100 employees in the Education Division with 15 of the staff working as attorneys. Since the initial review, the Education Division has reorganized and reduced its size by 56%. The number of attorneys was reduced by 20% and those 12 remaining attorneys have a new classification of Attorney I.

On August 21, 2015 the JCC completed a Classification and Compensation Study, completed by Fox Lawson, that resulted in the implementation of a new salary structure for the organization. The compensation phase of the project followed the classification portion of the study that began in December 2013 and ended in March of 2015, when JCC staff received their new classification specifications.

As a result of the comprehensive classification review, all Judicial Council jobs classified as attorney were reviewed and a new classification structure was developed. Fox Lawson determined that staff within CJER were appropriately allocated as attorneys. However, Fox Lawson also determined that the Decision Band Method rating of the work performed by the Education Division attorneys was at a lower level—in scope and breadth of responsibility to the organization--because the work performed was specific to the needs of the Education Division only. Therefore, Fox Lawson developed a single level classification of attorney (Attorney I) that is only applicable to the work performed by those attorneys within the Education Division.

Information on Judicial Council Directives

Council Directive    82

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council support SEC Recommendation 7-20(c) with no further action, as the positions and activities related to the Court Case Management System in the Education Division have been eliminated, through the AOC’s initiatives to reduce costs and downsize its workforce and operations.

SEC Recommendation    7-20

The Education Division’s current staffing level is one of the highest in the AOC and should be reduced. To achieve the reduction, the following areas should be reviewed and considered, and appropriate actions taken:

(c) The Court Case Management System training unit and any other positions engaged in CCMS-related activities should be eliminated in light of the Judicial Council’s decision to cancel the full deployment of the CCMS system.

Efforts to assist in the CCMS deployment training for three early adopter courts were halted after the March 27 Judicial Council decision to suspend deployment of CCMS and the CJER staff were reassigned back to their original departments and resumed their full workload assignments.

As background, in March, 2011, the PMO asked CJER to assist in the CCMS deployment training efforts for three early adopter courts. CJER did not acquire additional funding or personnel to assist in these initial efforts which lasted approximately one year. The division reallocated personnel to accommodate the project needs. These personnel continued to perform other assigned duties while working on the CCMS project and some of their current work was reassigned while other work was temporarily suspended. Other positions within the division were utilized on an ad hoc basis to assist with the project as needed.

As the project continues to evolve, the role and activities of the Education Division will be modified as necessary to ensure that the training needs are met at every stage of deployment and into steady state, and that the training efforts align with overall deployment schedules for the early adopter courts.

Education Division Activities and Tasks in CCMS Deployment Training

The following outlines the broad services and tasks that the Education Division can accomplish and which will contribute to the success of the early adopter CCMS deployment. A more detailed list of each of the Phases, and all activities contemplated within each phase is attached. As we engage with the overall deployment effort, some or many of these tasks may already be completed or for other reasons may not need to be completed by us, so this plan will be modified as needed. The focus is on work with early adopter courts, and can be expanded as new courts are added to the deployment schedule.

A. Needs Assessment

- a. The purpose of this activity is for the Education Division to:
  - i. Be able to credibly and accurately develop useful training plans
  - ii. Successfully implement training
  - iii. Increase efficiency and effectiveness of future training activities
  - iv. Become familiar with project background, what exists, and how it can be of value to the training development
  - v. Provide feedback to Deloitte on proposed training documentation and methodology
  - vi. Align training efforts with Inter Branch Agreements (IBA)
  - vii. Determine where Deloitte efforts start and end
  - viii. Learn what has been done in the courts to date and avoid duplication
  - ix. Learn culture and needs of each of the early adopter courts, asses their readiness for change and business process re-engineering
  - x. Determine what worked with V3 training and what should be changed in V4
  - xi. Identify scope of training needed by courts and Justice Partners from e-filing to Document Management System (DMS) to conversion to pre-deployment to post-deployment
  - xii. Develop appropriate training methodology and plans for each court
- b. The tasks we need to complete, include, but are not limited to:
  - i. Obtain hands on experience with the product
  - ii. Review existing documentation

- iii. Meet with court CCMS Project Managers, courts, and subject matter experts (SMEs)
- iv. Develop strategy documents
- v. Work with consultant to assess court readiness and needs related to change management and business re-engineering

B. Curriculum Development

- a. The purpose of this activity is for the Education Division to:
  - i. Design a training plan that coincides with the overall deployment schedule, documentation, and court needs
  - ii. Ensure consistency of training during and after deployment
  - iii. Institutionalize training process and training materials
  - iv. Develop and implement successful training materials during and after deployment
  - v. Ensure training materials align with actual system functions
  - vi. Develop relevant content and training outside system functionality (e.g. web-based training, change management, business flow)
- b. The tasks we need to complete, include, but are not limited to:
  - i. Design a master training plan
  - ii. Develop training documentation standards
  - iii. Develop training materials
  - iv. Work with court Super Users
  - v. Implement faculty development sessions for court “super users”

C. Delivery: Deployment and Steady State

- a. The purpose of this activity is for the Education Division to:
  - i. Ensure training and timing needs of courts are met
  - ii. Develop protocols and materials that can be sustained, remain relevant, and useful to the courts during additional deployments and into steady state
  - iii. Align training delivery with overall project plan and timelines
  - iv. Develop and deliver online training, job aids and other resources
- b. The tasks we need to complete include, but are not limited to:
  - i. Assist courts with training delivery logistics
  - ii. Deliver Train-the-Trainer training
  - iii. Deliver Core Court training to required users
  - iv. Evaluate Early Adopter Court Training
  - v. Create training for post-deployment/steady state, including online products

Resources Needed to Accomplish These Activities

Relationship with the PMO and the CCMS Teams

The most critical aspect of this effort is to establish productive and effective working relationships with all who are involved with the project, including the PMO, other AOC divisions (e.g., Office of Communications), the CCMS teams and the courts. The Education Division will need to be at the table (in the person of the CCMS training project manager) to be fully informed regarding the deployment schedule and plans for CCMS, as well as to keep the PMO current on the training and education plans to assure a smooth deployment process.

We have begun meeting with Renea Hatcher, Senior Manager for CCMS Deployment, and the other CCMS teams to not only understand the overall project, goals, timelines, and outcomes, but to establish the necessary relationship with our colleagues within the AOC. It is imperative that all involved with CCMS work closely and stand united when working with the courts. Deployment of the CCMS provides an opportunity for the AOC to collaborate as a single entity to effectuate a successful deployment.

Funding

In order for the Education Division to perform the required roles and responsibilities as outlined in this memo, it is essential that appropriate funding be allocated for CCMS training for not only the initial deployment, but also into steady state. Funding would include but not limited to:

- Travel expenses for the CCMS training team:
  - To and from the SRO to meet with the CCMS development team and learn the system,
  - To and from the early adopter and/or other CCMS courts
- Staff, as identified below, for the length of the deployment and possibly into the maintenance phase. It is not necessary to have full time staff for all listed positions (e.g., graphic designer, instructional designer) but rather short and mid-term temporary employees, some current Education Division staff as well as using:
  - Materials, both hardcopy and online
  - Travel expenses for the court trainers
  - Adequate computers for training, potentially including a mobile computer training unit and requisite AV equipment
  - Software to develop online training programs and materials

Staffing

The following is the profile of our CCMS project team, consisting of AOC, contract, and court staff. The makeup of this team may change overtime depending on the outcome of the assessments and reviews that are pending, and any changes in the deployment schedule.

AOC Staff

- Project Manager—This position, which would be a Manager level classification, would be responsible for the overall effort and would be the Education Division’s primary contact to all other relevant stakeholders (e.g., PMO, adopter courts). I have asked Lisa Galdos to serve in this capacity, currently in a .5 FTE position.
- Education Specialists—Responsible for developing the curriculum for CCMS training, working with appropriate SMEs both from the courts and from the software developer. For example, they would help shape the structure and organization of the content so that it could be easily translated into effective courses and other educational products.
- Online Instructional Designer and Editor/Graphic Designer(s)—Responsible for creating the overall design, look, and feel of the educational materials for CCMS; both hardcopy and online. It is crucial that there be a consistent, intuitive overarching design for all materials which users will be accessing, whether they are in class, reaching for a job aid, or going to the Web.
  - Note: Although the Education Division currently has many well regarded online educational resources, including courses and other reference materials, this project calls for a different and more contemporary online presence, as well as one which can be more rapidly developed and closer to what private, commercial entities currently provide. A more robust and current presence will ensure stability and user acceptance during the initial deployment and into steady state.
- Administrative Coordinator(s)—Responsible for all logistical and administrative aspects of the training aspect of the project and may be physically located in all regional offices, if needed.
- Administrative Secretary—Responsible for training document management and other training administrative tasks not normally handled by an Administrative coordinator (e.g. scheduling of meetings and conference calls).
- Change Management/Business Re-engineering Consultant—A critical aspect of the overall deployment and installation of CCMS is the paradigm shift this will create throughout the branch. Training the courts regarding the impact of CCMS on business process, workflow, and interaction with justice system partners, and overall working culture is critical and complex. This type of education is more fully developed in the private sector and we should tap into that expertise in lieu of attempting to develop it within the branch, and assume this would be temporary, contract staff who would serve in a consulting role to develop training plans for each court as well as to deliver training and coaching on change management.

Court Staff

- Local and Regional Trainers—A yet-to-be-specified number of court trainers who will be deployed to courts and regions to conduct CCMS training. These individuals will be experienced court staff who are CCMS power-users and who have been trained in the CCMS education curriculum.

Concerns and Suggestions to Potentially Ameliorate

As with any new project, there are legitimate concerns. Below we have identified some possible concerns for the Education Division taking on this new role, as well as some potential solutions to ensure the success of this project.

Concerns

- Unfamiliarity with the CCM project or schedule
  - Solution: Work closely with AOC and CCMS teams to learn the system and get up to speed on overall project goals, timelines, and obstacles.
- Not able to meet training needs as required
  - Solutions:
    - Work closely with early adopter courts and other CCMS teams, and have the appropriate authority to be effective
    - Ensure training environment and functional needs are met
    - Ensure all training needs are met either through train-the-trainer, hands on training of court users and/or develop court “power users.
    - Carefully and thoroughly review all existing documentation including lessons learned from courts who have deployed V2 and/or V3
    - Establish court processes to manage training while maintaining current level of court operations
- Lack of available funding
  - Solutions:
    - Work with CCMS-PMO to obtain adequate funding
    - To a limited extent, utilize current Education Division staff
    - Minimize and effectively use funding resources
    - Create steady state materials in conjunction with initial deployment to maximize resources
    - Develop on-line tools and training materials that can be used by multiple users
- Possible Court Perception of the Education Division utilizing resources ineffectively

Ronald G. Overholt
Mark A. Moore
April 15, 2011

- Solutions:
  - Work and collaborate early and closely with all AOC divisions and CCMS teams who have a role in the deployment efforts
  - Work and collaborate early and closely with all courts and remain flexible to their needs
  - Work closely with Office of Communications to ensure unified message

In summary, I am pleased to have the opportunity to work with the PMO on CCMS deployment training and taking on this new challenge. I would respectfully request approval of this draft CCMS Deployment Training Plan, your review and input on the Plan, and your approval to provide funding for the staffing and other resources to enable us to successfully complete this work.

2. Curriculum Development
  - Objective 1: Develop Training Documentation Standards and Delivery Analysis
  - Objective 2: Develop Training Materials

3. Delivery: Deployment and Post-Deployment
  - Objective 1: Manage Training Delivery
  - Objective 2: Deliver Core Court Training
  - Objective 3: Create Training for Post-Deployment Activities

The Education Division/CJER did not acquire additional funding or personnel to assist in these initial efforts which lasted approximately one year. The division reallocated personnel to accommodate the project needs. It was envisioned that funding would be provided to the Education Division/CJER to hire additional personnel and purchase the tools necessary to develop and deliver the highest quality of training. However, due to severe budget reductions, CCMS funding was redirected to trial court operations for FY11–12 and no funding was transferred to the Education Division/CJER.

The AOC Internal CCMS team met on or about March 28, 2011 to ‘kick off’ the early adopter court deployment efforts. Although work had been done previously, the March 2011 meeting was deemed the official ‘kick off’ where the Education Division/CJER was first introduced to the different internal partners (Data Integration, Communication, CCTC, etc.) and the early adopter court program managers.

Resources

Personnel

The Education Division/CJER’s CCMS team consisted of a Program Manager (50%) a Senior Education Specialist (25%), and two Education Specialists (25% each), and administrative support staff (25%). These were existing positions within the division. CET continued to perform other assigned duties while working on the CCMS project. Their current work was not reassigned. Other positions within the division were utilized on an ad hoc basis to assist with the project as needed.

Funding

The division did not hire new positions for this project nor did it receive any funding to augment the existing salaries and benefits. The funding of these positions for this project was absorbed by the division.

The Education Division CCMS Team incurred minimal travel expenses during the year. They made a site visit to San Luis Obispo as part of Phase I in late June 2011 at a cost of approximately $875.00, and also traveled to the Southern Regional Office the first week in February 2012 to learn the system to begin Phase II as deployment for the early adopter courts was still a possibility. The expenses for that trip were approximately $1900. These travel costs were borne by the CCMS PMO.

No other funding was provided to the Education Division for the CCMS project.

Deliverables

April 2011-March 2012 (Phase I: Objective 2)

The Education Division CCMS Team began Phase I with a review of the readiness documents prepared by Deloitte in partnership with the Court. Staff gained an understanding of the training challenges identified by the courts. Additionally, the team reviewed documentation on V2 and V3 to understand the system and configuration as well as general CCMS documentation prepared by the PMO. The goal was to learn how CCMS was governed, the history, and overall goals and objectives of the project.

CET developed several budget estimates for the phases set forth above as the project scope changed and evolved during the year.

June 2011-March 2012 (Phase 1: Objective 2)

In addition to the above-stated tasks, the Education Division CCMS Team also assisted the PMO in reviewing the V4 training materials prepared by Deloitte. Each team member reviewed Instructor Guides (IG), Quick Reference Guides (QRG), and Online Help Documentation as outlined below.

| Instructor Guides (IG) |    | Quick Reference Guides (QRG) |    |

Each Instructor Guide ranged from 10–100 pages. Each Quick Reference Guide typically was one page. The online help documentation closely mirrored the Instructor Guide for each category. The goal of these reviews was to determine:

- If screen shots matched the text
- Text was clear
- Steps were logical
- Overall process flowed
- Format and language were consistent

Each team member averaged 3–4 hours per each category review. After these materials were reviewed, the administrative support staff compiled the final edits into a clean and updated version. By March 27, 2012, approximately 10–15% of the above-referenced totals were reviewed by the team with 5% going through final editing.

June 2011 (Phase I: Objective 3)

Education Division CCMS Team was to visit each early adopter court to meet the stakeholders and tour the training facilities. The only site visited conducted was to San Luis Obispo on June 28, 2011. Subsequent visits were postponed due to the shift in project direction in July/August 2011.

October 2011–February 2012 (Phase I: Objective 1 with initial work on Phase II: Objective 2)

The Education Division CCMS Team gained access to the system through the production acceptance testing (PAT) environment which was shared with all CCMS product teams due to a reduction in funding. The team began a comparison of the online product with the training materials developed by Deloitte.

February 2012 (Phase I: Objective 1 with initial work on Phase II: Objective 2)

In this phase, staff traveled to SRO for a week to learn the system including all case types. The team then began a comparison of the IGs with the system functionality. However, this was cut short due to the uncertain direction of CCMS and ultimate termination in March 2012.

The team began updating a previous version of an online CCMS tutorial course. The goal was to complete and roll out in June 2012. Those efforts were halted after the March 27 Judicial Council decision. The team had gained access to the test scripts after the February training to begin Phase II, Curriculum Development. However, these efforts were halted after the March 27 Judicial Council decision.

Summary

From April 2011–March 2012 the Education Division CCMS Team concentrated on Phase I, Objectives 1 and 2 with some initial work on Phase II while performing their daily responsibilities within the Division.

The Project Management Office (PMO) has requested the Education Division/ CJER consider whether it could take a lead role in providing and/or coordinating CCMS training. This shift in responsibility from an outside vendor to the Division within the AOC means that adequate resourcing and knowledge transfer must occur. During the past two months, the Education Division/CJER has developed an initial plan to identify an appropriate role in providing training and education to the courts on CCMS. Because this is our initial iteration of these components, it is fully expected that many of these terms and expectations will be modified, changed, and added to as we all move forward with CCMS deployment and training.

The purpose of this memo is to (a) outline the draft education plan for review by the PMO and the Executive Office, as well as other stakeholders as necessary; (b) identify the resources needed in order to complete the activities listed in the plan, and (c) to gain approval and authority to secure the necessary resources, or, if not possible, to modify the draft education plan.

Education Division/CJER Abilities

The following material outlines the broad services and tasks that we can accomplish and which will contribute to the success of the early adopter CCMS deployment. A more detailed list of each of the Phases, and all activities contemplated within each phase is attached. As we engage with the overall deployment effort, some or many of these tasks may already be completed or for other reasons may not need to be completed by us, so this plan will be modified as needed. .

Needs Assessment

Assess existing documentation resources. The Education Division/CJER will review the V2 and V3 documentation, Deloitte materials for CCMS, system administration manuals, any court internal team training/on-boarding materials, as well as other documentation sources (e.g., JAD materials, configuration documents).

Assess training needs for each early adopter court. We will work closely with the specific CCMS court project manager for each early adopter court, as well as working with the Regional Administrative Directors and directly with the local courts to ascertain each court's training needs and therefore the most effective training model for that court.

Design the master training plan. This plan, which would align with the CCMS overall deployment plan, would at a minimum include the overall model we propose to execute, which at this point in time would likely consist of a combination of live face to face programs heavily augmented with web-based resource and other training materials. The heart of the training plan would be a train-the-trainer model that would be implemented to assure appropriate faculty coverage at the local level.

Curriculum Development

Develop and institute the design and style of the educational materials. We will need to adopt a standard look and feel for all aspects of the training materials so that all users, regardless of their contact with resource and training materials, will encounter an appropriate level of similarity in design. This will greatly facilitate navigation through these materials, whether they are web-based or hardcopy. That is, it will be intuitive for users of these resources.

Develop training content. It is our understanding that Deloitte will be sending us its documentation and baseline training materials very soon. We have already seen significant samples from its V3 deployment and if the CCMS materials are similar in scope and quality, we may well be receiving virtually all of the baseline content for CCMS from which to begin crafting training materials.

Develop training materials. The content will need to be shaped into the many training material types, including instructor guides, participant workbooks, online simulations quick reference guides, job aids, as well as course evaluations, and eLearning tools as appropriate.

Enforce a comprehensive review process. Throughout the development of training materials, we will work closely with court and CCMS SMEs to assure accuracy, currency, and usefulness. Being aligned with release versions will be critical to keeping the training materials effective in this effort.

Identify appropriate materials to hand-off to the Help Desk for their use. It is essential that the various helpdesk resources, whether they are local or located at the technology center, be trained and provided with appropriate materials.

Delivery Analysis

Update earlier Training Delivery sub-plan. We will of course work with the CCMS deployment team to ensure that our training plan remains current and aligned with the overall CCMS deployment plan.

Conduct on-boarding and train-the-trainer efforts. A lynchpin of our educational efforts will be to recruit and train a pool of super-users. Ideally, these individuals will be experienced court staff who will be responsible for directly training their colleagues and other appropriate court individuals. We would also train appropriate individuals who would be responsible for judicial officers. Training for justice system partners and other audiences not specifically tied to court operations would also need to be developed and delivered but it is not decided at this point if we would provide that resource and service. There will also be AOC staff who, because of their ongoing involvement with the development of CCMS, would be equally familiar with the application and their expertise would be tapped.

Manage training enrollments and schedule. Part of our traditional function is to schedule and run the actual delivery of live trainings and this should not change as CCMS is deployed. However, given that we will also have trained local court trainers, there will likely be local trainings that would occur outside of our efforts.

Create and manage Training Communication component of the Training Logistics Plan for end-users, to include schedules, learning paths, and available support methods. This is a fancy way to say that, for those courts that are able to sustain an independent training program, such as LA or SD, we would work with them and provide them with whatever resources they might need in order to successfully maintain CCMS training locally.

Presentation and Delivery

Deliver Core Court training (End-users and Court Help Desk). Core training will include system navigation/system overview, introduction to role-specific learning paths, and functionality-based modules. Within agreed-upon restrictions, courts that have a document management system (DMS-e-filing) could also receive training which would be delivered as a module within core training. Refresher training will be delivered to Courts for subsequent releases of CCMS-V4 and DMS.

As mentioned in section C-2, trainings for justice system partners would also need to be developed and delivered but how this training is developed and delivered has not yet been fully determined.

Create ongoing training for new releases. The content and training materials for new releases, both dot releases (e.g., 2.01) and full numeric releases (e.g., 3.0), will be developed and a training schedule would need to be established that met the operational needs of the courts, such as statutory enactments.

Conduct training evaluations and take steps needed to improve training program. As with all of our educational products, we would provide both participants as well as faculty with course and program evaluations. These would be used to measure the effectiveness of both the curriculum and the faculty and we would adapt and revise both of these trainings as appropriate.

Certification of end-user training completion and Court readiness. As part of our registration services, we will be able to track who has completed which module(s) and provide the courts with a staff completion schedule. This will hopefully assist the courts with their go-live plans. It is not clear at this point if certification is necessary or even desirable.

Create and maintain training environments. As part of our live training delivery, we will need to ensure that the training environments are conducive to the trainings and are appropriately equipped.

Education Division/CJER Needs to Accomplish These Activities

Relationship with the PMO and the CCMS teams. The most critical aspect of this effort is having a productive and effective working relationship with all who are involved: the PMO, other AOC divisions (e.g., office of communications), the CCMS teams and the courts. The Education Division will need to be at the table (in the person of the CCMS training project manager) to be fully informed regarding the deployment schedule and plans for CCMS, as well as to keep the PMO current on the training and education plans to assure a smooth deployment process.

We have begun meeting with Renea Hatcher, Senior Manager for CCMS Deployment, and the other CCMS teams to not only understand the overall project, goals, timelines, and outcomes, but also to establish the necessary relationship with our colleagues within the AOC. It is imperative, especially in light of the many challenges outside CCMS that the branch faces, that all involved with CCMS work closely and stand united when working with the courts. Deployment of the CCMS provides an opportunity for the AOC to dispel some of the negativity about the organization and collaborate as a single entity to effectuate a successful deployment in all courts.

Funding

In order for the Education Division to perform the required roles and responsibilities as outlined in this memo, it is essential that appropriate funding be allocated for CCMS training and education for not only the deployment, but also into steady state. The funding would include but not be limited to:

- Travel expenses for the CCMS training team:
  - To and from the SRO to meet with the CCMS development team and learn the system,
  - To and from the early adopter and/or other CCMS courts.
- Staff, as identified below, for the length of the deployment and possibly into the maintenance phase. It may not be necessary to have FTEs for all listed positions (e.g., graphic designer, instructional designer) but rather short and mid-term temporary employees.
- Materials, both hardcopy and online.
- Travel expenses for the court trainers.

Staffing

The following is the profile of our CCMS project team, consisting of AOC and court staff. The makeup of this team may change overtime depending on the outcome of the assessments and reviews that are pending.

AOC Staff

- Project Manager – This position, which would be a Manager level classification, would be responsible for the overall effort and would be the Education Division's primary contact to all other relevant stakeholders (e.g., PMO, adopter courts).
- Education Specialists – These individuals would be responsible for developing the curriculum for CCMS training, working with appropriate SMEs both from the courts and from the software developer. For example, they would help shape the structure and organization of the content so that it could be easily translated into effective courses and other educational products.
- Editor/Graphic Designer – This individual would be responsible for creating the overall design, look, and feel of the educational materials for CCMS; both hardcopy and online. It is crucial that there be a consistent, intuitive overarching design for all materials which users will be accessing, whether they are in class, reaching for a job aid, or going to the Web.
- Online Instructional Designer – Although the Education Division currently has many well regarded online educational resources, including courses and other reference materials, this project calls for a different and more contemporary online presence, as well as one which can be more rapidly developed and closer to what private, commercial entities currently provide. A more robust and current presence will ensure stability and user acceptance during the initial deployment and into steady state.

- Administrative Coordinator(s) – These individuals would be responsible for all logistical and administrative aspects of the training aspect of the project and may be physically located in all regional offices, if needed.
- Administrative Secretary – This individual would be responsible for training document management and other training administrative tasks not normally handled by and Administrative coordinator (e.g. scheduling of meetings and conference calls).

Court Staff

- Local and Regional Trainers – A yet-to-be-specified number of court trainers who will be deployed to courts and regions to conduct CCMS training. These individuals will be experienced court staff who are CCMS power-users and who have been trained in the CCMS education curriculum.

Outside education consultant for business reengineering and change management

- An enormous aspect of the overall deployment and installation of CCMS is the paradigm shift this will create throughout the branch. Training the courts regarding the impact of CCMS on business process, workflow, and interaction with justice system partners and overall working culture is critical and complex. An analogous paradigm shift would be if Microsoft decided to abandon Windows as the OS it uses as its internal operating system and install Apple's OS in all its business locations (i.e., not only the programmatic and functional changes but to expect Windows developers to now work on an Apple OS!). One ancillary benefit to having this type of education developed would be that it could be applicable to other uses beyond the deployment of CCMS. We believe that this type of education is more fully developed in the private sector and we should tap into that expertise in lieu of attempting to develop it within the branch.

The CCM training team would operate independently from other AOC education efforts to assure that CCMS training remains it top priority.

Concerns and Suggestions to Potentially Ameliorate

As with any new project, there are legitimate concerns and hazards. Below we have identified some possible concerns as well as some potential solutions to ensure the success of this project. This list is of course not exhaustive, but it is a beginning.

Concerns

- Unfamiliarity with the CCM project or schedule

- Solution: Work closely with AOC and CCMS teams to learn the system and get up to speed on overall project goals, timelines, and obstacles.
- Not able to meet training needs as required
  - Solutions:
    - Work early and closely with early adopter courts and other CCMS teams to ensure all training needs are met either through train-the-trainer, hands on training of core users and/or develop court 'power users'.
    - Carefully and thoroughly review all existing documentation including lessons learned from courts who have deployed V2 and/or V3
- Lack of available funding
  - Solutions:
    - Work with CCMS PMO to obtain adequate funding
    - Minimize and effectively use funding resources
    - Create steady state materials in conjunction with initial deployment to maximize resources
- Perception of not utilizing resources effectively
  - Solutions:
    - Work and collaborate early and closely with all AOC divisions and CCMS teams who have a role in the deployment efforts
    - Work and collaborate early and closely with all courts and remain flexible to needs
    - Work closely with Office of Communications to ensure unified message

Council Directive 83

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts to evaluate the impacts of a reduction in the size of the Production, Delivery, and Educational Technologies Unit and the reduction in services that would result, and provide the findings and recommendations to the Judicial Council.

SEC Recommendation 7-20

The Education Division’s current staffing level is one of the highest in the AOC and should be reduced. To achieve the reduction, the following areas should be reviewed and considered, and appropriate actions taken:

(d) The Production, Delivery and Educational Technologies unit has grown to more than 25 positions plus several temporary staff. The number of staff in this unit should be reduced in light of the difficult fiscal environment.

Since May 2011, six positions in the Production, Delivery and Educational Technologies unit were eliminated including 2 Administrative Coordinators, 1 Administrative Secretary, and three temporary intermittent AV/Video Technicians. ### ASSESSMENT OF IMPLEMENTATION

The former PDET Unit is now called Judicial Branch Education Delivery & Operations and includes two units: Course and Faculty Services and Distance Education.

Since the initial elimination of the initial six positions additional reductions have occurred in this unit:

- 10 positions in the Records, Mail and Copy Department and Reception were relocated to the Administrative Services Office and/or to the Executive Office (October 2012) NOTE – this was part of the original restructure of the entire AOC, designed to make the organization more efficient.
- 20 positions in the Conference and Registration Services unit, Conference Center Support Unit, and AV/Video Technical Support Unit were relocated to the Administrative Services Unit (July 1, 2014).

- 2 positions in the AV/Video Systems Development and Integration Unit were moved to Capital Program Office (August 2014)

Information on Judicial Council Directives

Council Directive    84

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts to evaluate and consider reducing the positions assigned to develop training for AOC Staff in the Curriculum and Course Development Unit, especially if training requirements are relaxed.

SEC Recommendation    7-20

The Education Division’s current staffing level is one of the highest in the AOC and should be reduced. To achieve the reduction, the following areas should be reviewed and considered, and appropriate actions taken:

(e) The Curriculum and Course Development unit includes several positions assigned to develop training for AOC staff. This activity should be evaluated and reduced, especially if training requirements are relaxed.

As reported in July of 2013, the Administrative Director considered reducing the positions assigned to develop training for council staff in the Curriculum and Course Development Unit (now the Judicial Branch Education Development Unit) in light of the recent revision to CRC 10.491 (relaxation of education requirements) and determined that a reduction in positions is not warranted. The relaxation of the education requirements for council staff is not on-going. Some additional staff work was associated with adapting the Learning Management System (HREMS) compliance functionality due to the relaxation of the rules. During this relaxation period, any staff resources which may be partially relieved will be assigned to work on other existing education programs.

ASSESSMENT OF IMPLEMENTATION

Since May 2011, 3 positions have been eliminated through layoffs, VSIP, retirements/attrition.

These reductions dramatically reduced Judicial Council staff education. As indicated in Directive 88 below, CJER reviewed all of council staff education and identified that they could still offer training through online courses and broadcasts for council staff.

Additionally, CJER developed a 'Work of the Courts' online course as well as developed management training programs for council managers and supervisors leveraging other CJER management training programs (i.e. Core 40, Institute for Court Management, etc.).

Judicial Council Recommendation 88

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts to report to the council on a review of the content of training courses offered to AOC managers, supervisors, and employees, the number and location of courses offered, and the means by which courses and training are delivered. Training opportunities should include greater orientation and development of understanding of court functions.

Summary

In 2012, the Office of Education/Center for Judicial Education and Research (CJER) re-evaluated existing AOC Education courses and reduced them in order to match reduced resources and changed priorities. The review resulted in the elimination of courses that are not core to the mission of the Administrative Office of the Courts. In tandem, CJER increased the amount of education offerings for AOC staff that are more court focused, with the vision that this will increase the AOC's overall effectiveness in providing service to the courts. Court-related class offerings in 2012 were increased by 162%. CJER has accomplished this, in part, by making available to AOC staff broadcast programs and online classes originally developed and produced for court personnel. This leveraging of court related education enables CJER to devote the majority of its resources to developing education for the trial and appellate courts while still providing relevant education to AOC employees. In addition, some AOC Education courses are offered jointly to both AOC and trial and appellate court personnel.

Review of the Content of Current Training Offered to AOC Employees

At the end of 2011, CJER led a review of the current compliance requirements for AOC employees. As part of this review, CJER held meetings with representatives from the Human Resources Services Office, Legal Services Office, Risk Management Unit, Office of Emergency Response and Security, and the Injury and Illness Prevention Plan (IIPP) Working Group. The IIPP Working Group is responsible for identifying specific training for each job classification category of AOC staff, based upon a safety assessment conducted for each employee. The resultant changes primarily affected safety-related requirements. In 2012, the number of non-safety compliance classes offered was reduced by 12% in response to a decreased need for new employee education.

Safety Training. As part of the AOC compliance requirement changes, job specific safety-training is now identified as part of the IIPP, the majority of which is provided via online education. As a result of these changes, the number of live safety-related class offerings was reduced by 69%. Seven new safety-related online courses provided by the AOC online vendor Syntrio were added in January 2012; this represents a 116% increase in the number of online safety-related training options. The Office of Education/CJER will continue to provide compliance classes and to partner with the IIPP Working Group to provide safety-related education.

Computer Training. In addition to changes in compliance education, CJER also reduced computer class offerings by 46% from 2011. At the end of this calendar year, CJER will review computer class attendance to determine the number of computer classes to be offered to AOC employees next year. Of those classes that were offered in 2012, seven sessions were offered to a combined audience of AOC and trial and appellate court employees. Combined audience classes offer a meaningful way for AOC and court employees to interact together. Further, offering classes to a combined audience allows the Office of Education/CJER to focus more of its resources on developing education for the courts.

Court-Related Education: ICM Classes. Utilizing curriculum provided by the Institute for Court Management (ICM), CJER is able to efficiently develop education for AOC employees which focuses on the work of the courts. This national curriculum is owned by CJER, which enables CJER to create multiple separate courses, using the curriculum from each of the 2.5 day classes. These separate courses are developed with AOC staff in mind as the intended audience. Another advantage of these courses is that for some classes, court staff serves as faculty. The use of the ICM curriculum for this purpose began in 2010 and resulted in several classes for AOC employees. This effort has been accelerated this year. Courses now available for AOC staff and managers include the following:

- Court Community Communications: Purpose and Communication Fundamentals (new)
- Court Community Communications: Understandable Courts (new)
- Court Community Communications: The Media and Media Relations (new)
- Leadership: Be Credible in Action (new)
- Leadership: Create Focus through Vision (new)
- Leadership: Purposeful Planning; and Manage Interdependencies - Work Beyond Boundaries (new)
- Courts-Introduction to CourTools
- Courts-Purposes and Responsibilities
- Introduction to Project Management
- Visioning and Strategic Planning: Strategic Thinking
- Visioning and Strategic Planning: Organizational Foundations
- Visioning and Strategic Planning: Change & Alignment

Court-Related Education: Online Course. In addition, working with subject matter experts from the AOC and the courts, CJER developed an online course for AOC employees called “The Work of the Courts.” This class provides a general overview of court work and processes and is currently under final review by trial court employee subject matter experts. Court-related classes for AOC employees increased by 162% in 2012.

Training Offered to AOC Managers and Supervisors

CJER continues to leverage existing resources to support and develop manager and supervisor education at the AOC. In addition to the training and resources already available to managers and supervisors at the Administrative Office of the Courts, there were several new initiatives during the past year.

Management Training: Achieve Global Courses. During the 2012 – 2013 education period, CJER will provide courses for managers and supervisors using curriculum purchased from Achieve Global (a world-renowned international provider of leadership training programs) in 2004. AOC Office of Education/CJER employee, Rhonda Sharbono, completed the Achieve Global faculty training and certified to enable the AOC to utilize this previously purchased curriculum. Utilizing the Achieve Global courses will allow the AOC to provide education for up to 80 managers and supervisors with no additional financial investment, in four areas:

- Successful Delegation
- Strategies to Help You Build a Unified Team
- Tools to Lead Your Team through Change
- The Principles and Qualities of Genuine Leadership

Management Training: Leveraging Court Programs. A key area of focus for AOC management training is the development of courses that address knowledge, skills, and abilities to effectively manage staff performance through increased communication, clear performance expectations, and achievement of goals. CJER, Legal Services Office, and Human Resources Services Office began the process of identifying broad objectives and desired results for AOC management training. This involved leveraging content and objectives already developed as part of CORE 40 Supervisor Training for trial and appellate court supervisors and managers. Additionally, content from other programs including court management programs will be reviewed for inclusion in the overall course offerings. Multiple separate courses will be provided starting in January 2013 with subsequent courses being offered every other month. The initial proposal is to offer these courses in a live, face-to-face environment, with videoconference capabilities for AOC staff in regional offices.

Management Training: Online Training. An online orientation series for new supervisors, highlighting essential AOC policies, is being discussed as part of the training described in the previous section. Workgroups comprising AOC subject matter experts will begin the design and development of the new courses under the combined direction of CJER, HR, and the Legal Services Office, with some subject matter experts also serving as faculty.

The Means by Which Training is Delivered

CJER strives to hold AOC Education classes in the most cost-effective way. For some classes, such as “Preventing and Responding to Sexual Harassment” for supervisors and managers, the AOC has subject matter experts in San Francisco, Sacramento and Burbank who are able to serve as faculty which minimizes travel. Videoconference technology is utilized at both the Sacramento and Burbank locations, with an emphasis on the Burbank location. This allows the relatively small number of AOC employees in Burbank to participate in classes without traveling; this also allows CJER to maximize the number of class attendees while efficiently utilizing faculty time.

Computer classes are currently offered only in San Francisco and Sacramento; however, this year CJER piloted computer training via WebEx to the trial courts. On July 23, a webinar was provided for trial court employees in Contra Costa on the topic of “Word Report Features.” Employees in Alpine County have also requested computer training, and a pilot webinar training for “Microsoft Excel” is currently being planned for early 2013.

Online education is also a significant resource for AOC employees. CJER provides online education for AOC employees through a variety of sources, including utilization of an online course vendor (Syntrio), development of online classes specifically for AOC employees (“The Work of the Courts”), and utilizing online classes developed by CJER for trial and appellate court employees.

Training Related to Increased Understanding of Court Functions

In addition to increased classes available to AOC staff resulting from the use of the ICM curriculum as previously described in this report, CJER began other ways to implement the recommendation that AOC staff receive greater orientation and development of understanding of court functions. Without the advantage of increased staff or resources, AOC Education staff was best able to accomplish this by leveraging existing education developed for court staff.

Court-Related Education: Leveraging Court Staff Education. In addition to live classes, this year CJER began to provide select broadcasts and online classes designed for the trial and appellate courts to AOC employees. These broadcasts and classes provide AOC employees with additional orientation to the courts. By utilizing existing education designed for court employees, CJER can devote the majority of its resources to developing education for the trial and appellate courts while still providing relevant education to AOC employees. The following broadcasts and online classes are available to AOC employees via the AOC's Human Resources Employee Management System (HREMS):

- Appeals 101
- Appellate Court Records and Files
- Domestic Violence
- Everyday Court Practices: Exhibits
- Everyday Court Practices: Felony Minute Orders
- Everyday Court Practices: File Stamping
- Exploring the Code of Ethics
- Family Adoption of Minors
- How is a California Rule of Court Created?
- ICWA 101: Fundamentals of the Indian Child Welfare Act
- Juvenile Procedures: Confidentiality and Sealed Records
- A Practical Look at Probate Court Investigator Responsibilities
- New Court Investigator Responsibilities for Conservatorships
- Probate, Conservatorship, and Guardianship Video—A Look at Elder Abuse from the Perspective of Law Enforcement
- Probate Fundamentals
- Protective Orders: The Basics
- Traffic Counter Fundamentals
- Unlawful Detainers—the Basics

In addition to broadcast programs, several online courses designed for trial court employees are also available to AOC employees:

- The Courtroom Clerk in the Felony Courtroom (2 hrs)
- Handling Fee Waiver Applications (1.5 hrs)
- Introduction to Family Procedure (4 hrs)
- Requests for Domestic Violence Restraining Orders (2.5 hrs)

This cost-effective approach allows the Education Division to significantly increase the amount of court-related education provided to AOC employees while continuing to focus resources on developing and delivering education for the trial and appellate courts.

Over the past few years, partly due to staffing reductions and department reorganizations, responsibility for AOC Education is dispersed among several staff who now have a portion of their work assigned to AOC Education but with an emphasis on education that is more court focused. This model enables CJER to more easily shift resources to education areas as needed.

For example, the request to increase AOC management training can be met by engaging staff who are already working on court manager education. That is, the overlap in content for these two audiences can be leveraged. In making these changes, CJER has shifted how staff is used for AOC Education. With the added focus on developing and teaching management training classes for AOC managers and supervisors, some staff members are spending additional time on AOC Education, while others have moved their focus and time to court staff education, as it now has the added benefit of being used for both court staff and AOC Education.

Executive Summary

Rule 10.491 of the California Rules of Court addresses minimum education requirements for Administrative Office of the Courts (AOC) executives, managers, supervisors, and other employees. The Rules and Projects Committee (RUPRO) recommends amending rule 10.491 regarding AOC staff education to give the Administrative Director of the Courts greater discretion and flexibility in using the AOC workforce.

Recommendation

The Rules and Projects Committee recommends that the Judicial Council amend rule 10.491, effective July 1, 2013, to allow the Administrative Director of the Courts to:

1. Grant a one-year extension of time for AOC staff to complete the required education, and
2. Determine the number of hours, if any, of live, face-to-face education required to meet the continuing education requirement.

The text of the amended rule is attached at pages 6–7.

Previous Council Action

Effective January 1, 2008, the Judicial Council adopted rule 10.491 as part of a comprehensive set of rules addressing judicial branch education. Subdivision (c) of the rule was amended, effective January 1, 2012, to provide more individual choice and flexibility in what and how many hours count toward the continuing education hours requirement. The amendments provide that an individual must complete at least half of his or her education requirement as a participant in traditional (live, face-to-face) education. In addition, the amendments removed limitations on online course work, self-directed study, and faculty service by counting all education hours in the same way.

Rationale for Recommendation

On May 25, 2012, the Strategic Evaluation Committee (SEC) issued its report on the Administrative Office of the Courts. Among the recommendations to the Judicial Council was the following recommendation concerning AOC and trial court education requirements:

Recommendation No. 7-23: As to training currently required of AOC staff and court personnel, the Judicial Council should examine and consider a relaxation of current mandatory requirements to allow the Administrative Director of the AOC and/or court executive officers greater discretion and flexibility in utilizing their workforces during times of budget constraints.

The council's Executive and Planning Committee (E&P) evaluated and prioritized each recommendation in the SEC report and presented them to the council on August 31, 2012. As to recommendation No. 7-23, E&P proposed and the council adopted the following:

Directive #79: E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Rules and Projects Committee to evaluate relaxation of mandatory education requirements to allow the Administrative Director of the Courts and Court Executive Officers greater discretion and flexibility in utilizing their workforces during times of budget constraints.

In response, RUPRO considered Directive #79; recommendations from Administer Director of the Courts Steven Jahr; the rules that apply to education for AOC staff, trial court staff, appellate court staff, and clerk/administrators of the appellate courts; and the compliance periods for each category of employees. In its deliberations, RUPRO recognized the importance of judicial branch education and did not consider recommending that the education requirements be eliminated. Because of the impending end of the compliance period for AOC staff education on December 31, 2013, RUPRO decided to address immediately the rule pertaining to AOC staff education.

RUPRO recommends amending rule 10.491, effective July 1, 2013, to give the Administrative Director of the Courts greater discretion and flexibility in using the AOC workforce. Specifically, RUPRO recommends that the rule be amended to provide the Administrative Director with discretion to grant a one-year, rather than six-month, extension of time to complete required education. (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 10.491(d).) The rule would provide that the next compliance period begins after the extended compliance period ends, unless the Administrative Director determines otherwise.<sup>1</sup> This would allow the Administrative Director to grant an extension to all AOC employees and extend the compliance period one year, if deemed necessary. But it also would maintain the authority of the Administrative Director to grant individual extensions based on specific needs, such as for an employee in a unit that is particularly short-staffed or an employee who experienced a prolonged illness, without extending the compliance period.

In addition, RUPRO recommends amending subdivision (c) to allow the Administrative Director the discretion to determine the number of hours, if any, of traditional (live, face-to-face) education required to meet the continuing education requirement. Because some education requirements are mandated by statute, an advisory committee comment would be added to the rule to provide that “[t]he time frame for completion of compliance courses based on statutory or regulatory mandates is unaffected by the one-year extension in (d)(1).”

RUPRO considered the education requirements for trial court staff stated in rules 10.474 and 10.478. Because the end of the compliance period for trial court staff education is December 31, 2014—more than a year away—and to determine trial court needs for staff education, RUPRO decided to solicit information from presiding judges and court executive officers in all superior courts. RUPRO has begun to do so through a letter from Justice Harry E. Hull, Jr., chair, asking courts’ views on relaxing the mandatory education requirements for trial court staff to allow court executive officers greater discretion and flexibility in use of their workforces. In addition, Justice Hull and Justice Robert L. Dondero, chair of the Center for Judicial Education and Research (CJER) Governing Committee, will attend the statewide joint meeting of trial court presiding judges and court executive officers on August 29 to continue this dialog.

Though Directive #79 does not address appellate court staff education, RUPRO recognized that appellate courts may have the same need for a relaxation of education requirements. Because the appellate court staff education compliance period ends December 31, 2013, Justice Hull attended a recent meeting of the Administrative Presiding Justices Advisory Committee to solicit members’ views. Administrative presiding justices saw no need to amend the rules to provide an extension of time for appellate court staff or to relax the requirement for face-to-face education.

<sup>1</sup> The current rule provides that an extension of time to complete the hours-based requirement does not affect the timing of the next two-year period.

Comments, Alternatives Considered, and Policy Implications

This proposal did not circulate for public comment. Under rule 10.22, a proposal need not be circulated for public comment if it presents a nonsubstantive technical change or correction or a minor substantive change that is unlikely to create controversy, or RUPRO finds that compelling circumstances require a different procedure. The compelling circumstances exception provides as follows:

The procedures established in this rule must be followed unless the Rules and Projects Committee finds that compelling circumstances necessitate a different procedure. The committee's finding and a summary of the procedure used must be presented to the council with any recommendation to the council made under this subdivision.

(Cal. Rules of Court, rule 10.22(g).)

The existing two-year compliance period provided in rule 10.491 for AOC staff is currently nearly three-quarters completed. The number of AOC staff has been reduced since early 2012, when the current compliance period began, and the number of education courses offered has similarly been reduced. There is thus an urgent need to provide the Administrative Director with the discretion to relax the mandatory education requirements to allow staff to obtain the required education over a longer period of time (three years rather than two) and through delivery methods such as online courses that allow employees to select the course times that work best for them.

Circulating this proposal would delay the effective date beyond July 1, 2013 would reduce the number of staff benefitting from an extended compliance period. If fewer staff benefit from the extended compliance period and elimination of the rule requirement for face-to-face education, the overall benefits of increasing staff availability to provide needed services to the courts will likewise be reduced.

Though RUPRO recognizes the benefits of circulating rule proposals for comment in ordinary times, the extraordinary times and circumstances now confronting the judicial branch and the particular subject of this proposal compel adoption of the proposal without circulation for comment. If approved by the council, the proposal will be circulated for comment after adoption.

RUPRO considered alternative rule amendments that would simply state that the compliance period ending December 31, 2013, is extended one year to December 31, 2014, or that would allow the Administrative Director to grant an extension of the continuing education hours requirements, but not all education requirements. RUPRO decided not to recommend these amendments and instead grant the Administrative Director as much flexibility as possible to relax education requirements as needed.

Implementation Requirements, Costs, and Operational Impacts

If the Administrative Director exercises the discretion provided to him to extend the time by which employees must complete their education requirements, there will be some minimal requirements and costs associated with tracking employee education. Similarly, the elimination of face-to-face education requirements will result in some minimal requirements and costs associated with tracking employee education. These costs, however, are anticipated to be offset by a reduction in the need to provide face-to-face education. In addition, the proposal is expected to have positive operational impacts by allowing AOC employees additional time to complete educational requirements and flexibility with respect to alternatives to live training, thereby increasing employee availability to provide needed services to the courts.

Council Directive 85

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts to evaluate the impacts of a reduction in the size of the Administrative Services Unit and the reduction in services that would result, and provide the findings and recommendations to the Judicial Council.

SEC Recommendation 7-20

The Education Division’s current staffing level is one of the highest in the AOC and should be reduced. To achieve the reduction, the following areas should be reviewed and considered, and appropriate actions taken:

(f) The Administrative Services unit contains more than 20 staff engaged in support activities such as records management, printing and copying, scheduling and planning training delivery, and coordinating logistics for all AOC events. The number of staff in this unit should be evaluated and reduced commensurate with the reduction in the number of live programs and events, and reflecting a reduction in the number of employees AOC-wide.

This directive relates to a point in time when there was an Administrative Services Unit within CJER. Currently, all functions in the former ASU have been moved to a new Administrative Services Office. This movement began with initial AOC restructuring that occurred effective October 1, 2012, and the Records, Mail and Copy Department, was moved to the newly formed Administrative Services Office in order to provide organization-wide services under the direction of the Chief Administrative Officer. Seven staff moved from CJER to the new office; subsequent to the reorganization, one additional staff member was transferred from CJER to the Executive Office.

The remaining ASU Conference Services departments were subsequently merged with the Faculty and Course Services department within the Production, Delivery and Education Technology Unit (PDET) to streamline business processes associated with the delivery of live education programs. The existing ASU unit was eliminated with this restructuring.

Subsequently, 22 regular positions were transferred internally to other offices. This included:

- 20 positions in Conference and Registration Services, Conference Center Support and AV/Video Technical Support moved to Conference Support Services in the Administrative Services Office.

- Two staff in AV/Video Systems Development and Integration moved to Capital Programs.

Council Directive 86

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts that the Education Division should conduct true cost benefit analyses in determining the types of training and education it provides for new judicial officers and others, and to report to the council on the results. Analyses should include types, lengths, locations of programs, delivery methods, and the costs to courts.

SEC Recommendation 7-21

The Education Division should conduct true cost-benefit analyses — and not rely only on its own preferences — in determining the types of training and education it provides, including types, lengths, and locations of programs, delivery methods, and the costs to courts. This type of analysis should apply to training and education programs for new judicial officers.

TASK

|         |  |
| x       | COMPLETED: CJER presented a cost-benefit process at the January 17, 2013 Judicial Council meeting and based upon the council's approval of CJER's approach to the directive, a final report was submitted to the council at its April 2013 meeting. This directive was implemented in the 2013 calendar year. |

The Judicial Council requested that CJER submit recommendations on the cost-benefit process, and this was submitted at the January 17, 2013 Council meeting. Based upon the Council's approval of CJER's approach to the directive, a final report was submitted to the Council at its April 2013 meeting. This directive was implemented in the 2013 calendar year. To implement the directive, CJER's recommendations are to 1) increase oversight by the Governing Committee of CJER management with respect to determining the appropriate expenditures for developing education, 2) ensure validation by Governing Committee of the analyses and recommendations of curriculum committees, and 3) provide Advisory Committee level oversight of cost effectiveness in the manner in which education is delivered while maintaining educational effectiveness.

To comply with Judicial Council directive #86, CJER has strengthened the "cost" side of the equation by making the following changes to current process:

1. Prior to the development a two-year Education Plan, CJER staff will provide the Governing Committee with budget information on the programs and products that have the highest cost. The Governing Committee will review these to determine if (a) there are ways to reduce costs, and (b) whether the benefits of those programs and products justify the cost of their inclusion in the next Education Plan.
2. CJER staff will provide additional information on costs of each delivery method to the curriculum committees so they can analyze the relative delivery costs against the effectiveness of a particular delivery method for achieving stated educational goals and objectives.

3. The Governing Committee and curriculum committees should examine costs in their selection of the types of delivery methods. It should include variables such as the lengths and locations of live programs, direct and indirect development costs and estimated costs to courts.
4. Staff should facilitate discussion among committee members about the effectiveness and costs of various delivery methods and should ensure that the benefits of more expensive methods are clearly documented for review by the CJER Governing Committee should the curriculum committee determine that a more costly delivery method is necessary to effectively achieve educational goals.

After the curriculum committees conduct the cost-benefit analysis and made their prioritized recommendations to the Governing Committee, CJER staff continues with the established practice of resourcing the prioritized committee recommendations to ensure the efficient delivery of as many of the committee recommendations as possible, with the available budget and staff resources.

IMPLEMENTATION PROGRESS AS OF MARCH 2015

As additional programs are considered for development by the CJER Curriculum Committees and approval of the CJER Governing Committee the cost benefit analysis process developed by CJER will be utilized on an ongoing basis along with a new structure for evaluating the criticality and relative importance of CJER publications.

ASSESSMENT OF IMPLEMENTATION

CJER Governing Committee and the CJER Curriculum Committees are currently using the cost benefit analysis and forms for preparing the two-year education plan. Information is provided to the Curriculum Committees including:

- Topics and learning objectives in each assignment area
- What training/curriculum has already been provided
- Evaluation data from participants on preferences for various delivery methods
- What curriculum was not delivered in the last two-year period
- Best delivery method for types of education

This analysis is then provided to the CJER Governing Committee to determine what education can be provided with the resources and staffing available with input received from CJER staff.

Most recently, in light of staffing reductions (loss of three publication attorneys), CJER Governing Committee requested a process for all of the publications to rank them in relative importance and criticality. A structure was developed to be used ongoing for the next curriculum review in the summer of 2015. This structure was utilized February 2015, and resulted in a redirection of CJER resources by adding updates to four publications to the current education plan while deciding to remove updates to four publications in the current education plan.

E&P members were very impressed with these tools developed by CJER and indicated that these activities demonstrate that CJER took the recommendation to heart.

EDUCATION DELIVERY OPTIONS

FACE TO FACE EDUCATION—Courses are designed and delivered to encourage participants to interact with the content, and share experiences, expertise, challenges, concerns, and successes. This format is especially effective when interaction and immediate feedback are important.

Statewide: Opportunity to work with participants from across the state and learn from their varied experience. This delivery option is the most costly form of education per participant.

Regional: Focused on a tighter geographical area/content that can be covered in a 1-day format.

Local: Content delivered by courts internally in partnership with CJER.

ONLINE VIDEO—Video for content that can be developed in short segments designed for focused and/or “just-in-time” learning. (24/7)

Lecture Series—Discrete topics delivered in primarily lecture format by one or more subject matter experts that last 30 minutes to 1 hour.

10-Minute Mentor—This series consists of short topic videos presented by judicial officers who are experts in the areas they discuss.

Video Simulation Series—A series of short videos demonstrating techniques that participants can use to increase efficiency and effectiveness.

BROADCAST—Scheduled courses developed for delivery through the statewide satellite broadcast system and focused on specific audiences.

Live Broadcast—Content selected may be either lecture-/information-based (short format) or skills-based (1–2 hour format).

Individual & Facilitated Locally—Courses are repurposed for online desktop viewing and/or viewed by a group in a face to face course facilitated locally from DVD.

SELF-PACED ONLINE—Education that is designed for online delivery. These courses represent a range of complexity and interactivity. Content is generally stable, with limited updating requirements. Additionally, online courses provide judicial branch audiences with a convenient reference for related statutes, rules, and forms. (24/7)

PUBLICATIONS—Benchguides, Bench Handbooks, Benchbooks, and Job Aids are resources written and updated by staff with review by workgroups. These are available in hard and/or soft copy online. (24/7)

VIDEOCONFERENCE TRAINING—Videoconferencing is linking two or more locations (up to 8) by two-way video, allowing participants to communicate with each other and faculty during the course. Best designed for small numbers in multiple locations and short formats (1–2 hours). Currently only available at the Appellate Courts and the AOC Regional Offices.

WEBINARS—Short for Web-based seminar. These are courses transmitted over the Internet, consisting of a shared group environment online that includes live audio and video communication with an audience that is in a remote location from the faculty. Webinars may include video, PPT, chat capability with faculty, faculty feedback, and polling for audience participation. (i.e., WebEx)

Each of these delivery options can be part of a blended learning plan. For example, a face to face course might require participants to complete an online course before attending the course, or a Webinar might follow a studio video as a way to expand the learning.

JOB AID: Relative Costs of Education Delivery Methods

According to “Developing the Judicial Branch Education Plan: Objectives, Roles and Responsibilities,” approved by the CJER Governing Committee in November 2009, the primary role and responsibility of the Curriculum Committee is to develop a two-year education plan for its respective curriculum area, in partnership with CJER staff, for approval by the Governing Committee. Curriculum Committees determine what content should be addressed in a two-year plan, prioritize that content, and also make recommendations about the appropriate way to deliver the content. Curriculum Committee members have knowledge about the variety of delivery methods available to CJER. This job aid provides information about the relative cost of the various delivery methods so that committee members can weigh the costs and benefits of particular delivery methods and make informed decisions about which delivery method is the most effective, cost-effective and appropriate to use. Committee members should carefully consider the cost and benefit of choosing a high cost delivery method (items 1-5 on the attached summary), and work with CJER staff to document their rationale for doing so for review by the CJER Governing Committee.

Below are summaries of the primary methods of providing education, a chart of relative costs, and a set of individual charts that provide greater detail about the costs associated with each of the delivery methods.

Live, face-to-face education programs can involve the highest number of cost elements to the courts and the AOC, and some forms of this delivery method incur the highest aggregate costs among the various options available. They range in format from half-day local courses to multi-day programs held at a conference or hotel venue.

Distance Education (Satellite Broadcast) typically entails very little direct cost beyond faculty travel and meals unless video production is required (for development of vignettes or interviews of subject matter experts shown during the broadcast). In that case, standard direct costs such as staff and faculty travel and lodging are incurred and indirect staff time costs are significantly increased. The other standard cost is satellite broadcast transmission, which costs approximately $1,000 per hour. There are also annual costs associated with maintenance and repair and occasional installation charges for downlinks in new facilities.

Distance Education (Online Video) costs vary depending on the complexity of production. Only the video simulations, which entail the creation of vignettes, require a great deal of faculty and staff time and various direct costs. Video lectures from live programs incur direct costs for staff travel to record at a program and staff time to edit the videos, but they leverage faculty in a cost effective fashion. Videos created in the studio typically incur only costs for faculty travel and staff time.

Distance Education (Videoconference) typically entails very little direct cost beyond faculty travel and meals. There may be some indirect costs for faculty and staff preparation depending upon the complexity of the faculty and participant materials that must be developed and the technical challenges incorporating multiple sites. Because the signal is transmitted over the AOC and Appellate Court computer network, it is reliable and does not entail any transmission costs. There are some annual costs associated with equipment maintenance and repair.

Distance Education (Webinars) typically entails very little direct cost beyond faculty travel and meals. There are some indirect costs for faculty and staff preparation depending upon the complexity of the faculty and participant materials that must be developed. There are some annual costs associated with the software and some associated telecommunication charges.

Distance Education (Online Courses) involves preparation from staff writers and faculty reviewers similar to CJER publications. They require a greater level of instructional design than publications and the added element of media production staff to create the web pages and their various elements. They vary significantly in length and complexity and the indirect cost of CJER staff time varies proportionately.

Publications currently provided by CJER are available in print or online. The bench books and handbooks are the only publications remaining solely in print form, and most of the costs for printing are funded by legal publisher partners. The primary costs are indirect, and are associated with the staff that write and edit the publications and the faculty time to review that work. The largest publication product, the Civil Bench Book series, is written by contractors and funded almost entirely from grant money. CJER's bench guides are provided only online. As with online course development, publications vary in length and complexity and the staff time required varies proportionately.

Direct cost factors and how they are funded:

- Faculty Lodging and Meals (Trial Court Improvement and Modernization Fund or IMF)
- Faculty Travel (IMF)
- Contract faculty and contract publications writers (IMF, other Special Fund money or Grant Funding)
- Participant Lodging and Meals (IMF)
- Meeting room rental costs (IMF)
- Satellite broadcast transmission time (IMF)
- Participant Travel (Individual Court)

CJER Staff Lodging, Meals, and travel (AOC General Funds)

Curriculum Committees determine what content should be addressed in a two-year plan, prioritize that content, and also make recommendations about the appropriate way to deliver the content. Curriculum Committee members have knowledge about the variety of delivery methods available to CJER. Committee members should carefully consider the cost and benefit of choosing a high cost delivery method (items 1-5 on the Relative Cost Summary Chart) and work with CJER staff, using this form, to document their rationale for doing so for review by the CJER Governing Committee.

Note: Use this form only when proposing use of delivery methods that have a high cost element (Items 1-5 on the Relative Cost Summary Chart: Education Delivery Methods)

The number of offerings of this course was cut from 3 to 2 in the 2012-2014 Education Plan. The Curriculum Committee believes the number of times this course is offered should be returned to three times a year due to the essential nature of the content and consistently high number of judges attending the course. The length of this course should also be increased from 2 to 3 days because the amount of content could be more effectively delivered if faculty had more time. | Maximum number of participants for this class is 35, but classes are full to over-enrolled each time this course has been offered. Participant evaluations consistently request more time due to a lot of content delivered in too short a time period. | Trial Court Judicial Attorneys Institute | Statewide, three-day meeting at a hotel meeting facility offered every other year. (very high cost) | There is no curriculum committee for trial court attorneys. Given that the majority of research attorneys handle civil matters, the Curriculum Committee believes this program should continue to be offered to the state's research attorneys to provide them with education required by CRC 10.474(c)(2). Courses offered for practicing attorneys are not appropriate for the type of work done by court research attorneys, so it is difficult for the research attorneys to get the education elsewhere. This live face-to-face program also offers the attorneys an opportunity to network with attorneys across the state to discuss common issues and share ideas. | Two trial court attorneys currently serve on the Civil Law Curriculum Committee, and are participating on the workgroup planning the 2014 TCJAI. Answer #52

A 70-year-old male patient with a history of hypertension, diabetes, and peripheral vascular disease (PVD) presents with an acute increase in lower extremity edema. The patient reports that the swelling has worsened since starting a new medication. The physical examination reveals bilateral lower extremity edema, 2+ in the ankles and 1+ in the lower shins. The patient also reports shortness of breath and a weight gain of 5 pounds in the last two weeks. The patient is currently taking lisinopril, metoprolol, and aspirin. The most likely cause of the patient's symptoms is heart failure. The patient's symptoms are consistent with a diagnosis of congestive heart failure (CHF). The patient's history of hypertension, diabetes, and PVD are all risk factors for the development of CHF. The patient's acute increase in lower extremity edema, shortness of breath, and weight gain are all signs of fluid overload, which is a common complication of CHF. The patient's new medication, lisinopril, is a diuretic, which is used to treat CHF. However, the patient's symptoms have worsened since starting lisinopril, which suggests that the medication is not effectively treating his CHF. The patient's symptoms are also consistent with a diagnosis of heart failure with preserved ejection fraction (HFpEF), which is a type of CHF that is often associated with hypertension, diabetes, and PVD. HFpEF is characterized by a normal ejection fraction, but with signs and symptoms of heart failure. The patient's symptoms are also consistent with a diagnosis of heart failure with reduced ejection fraction (HFrEF), which is a type of CHF that is characterized by a reduced ejection fraction. The patient's symptoms are also consistent with a diagnosis of heart failure with mid-range ejection fraction (HFmrEF), which is a type of CHF that is characterized by a mid-range ejection fraction. The patient's symptoms are also consistent with a diagnosis of heart failure with normal ejection fraction (HFNEF), which is a type of CHF that is characterized by a normal ejection fraction.

Answer #53

The patient's symptoms are consistent with a diagnosis of congestive heart failure (CHF). The patient's history of hypertension, diabetes, and PVD are all risk factors for the development of CHF. 1. Multiple Choice (1 point)

The correct answer is 3. Dependent. Dependent variables are those that are measured or observed during the course of a study. The independent variables are those that are manipulated or controlled by the researcher.

2. All statements are accurate (1 point)

The statements are all accurate. The independent variable is the variable that is manipulated or controlled by the researcher. The dependent variable is the variable that is measured or observed during the course of a study.

3. All statements are accurate (1 point)

The statements are all accurate. The independent variable is the variable that is manipulated or controlled by the researcher. The dependent variable is the variable that is measured or observed during the course of a study.

10. Part B: Explain and justify the most accurate answer (3 points)

1. Answer is 1 because the independent variable is the variable that is manipulated or controlled by the researcher.

The independent variable is the variable that is manipulated or controlled by the researcher. The dependent variable is the variable that is measured or observed during the course of a study. In this case, the independent variable is the amount of time spent studying, and the dependent variable is the score on the test.

2. Answer is 2 because the dependent variable is the variable that is measured or observed during the course of a study.

3. Answer is 3 because the independent variable is the variable that is manipulated or controlled by the researcher.

4. Answer is 4 because the dependent variable is the variable that is measured or observed during the course of a study.

5. Answer is 5 because the independent variable is the variable that is manipulated or controlled by the researcher.

6. Answer is 6 because the dependent variable is the variable that is measured or observed during the course of a study.

Ranking and Prioritization of CJER Publications

(High – 5 Low – 1)

House, Gaab, Juhas, Riley, Robie, Weathers, Mavis, Bottke

I. DESCRIPTION OF THE CRITERIA

A. Priority of Own Genre Curriculum Committee: If a specific discipline listed a subject matter related publication as a high priority or not, this would be a factor in this score.

5 Highest Priority      4 High Priority      3 Medium Priority      2 Low Priority      1 No Priority      0 Not applicable

B. Priority of Other Curriculum Committees: If other curriculum committees agreed that a publication from another discipline deserved priority, this would be a factor in this score.

5 Highest Priority      4 High Priority      3 Medium Priority      2 Low Priority      1 No Priority      0 Not applicable

C. CJP Related Area of Concern: The CJP lists its top categories for discipline in each yearly report. The last five years shows a trend of the following in the top five: failure to insure the rights of the litigants (SRL issues inherent), demeanor/decorum, abuse of contempt/sanctions, disqualification or disclosure, and bias/embroilment. Publications that relate to these categories would receive higher scores.

5 Highly Related      4 Very related      3 Related      2 Somewhat Related      1 Not Related      0 Not applicable

D. Relation to a Vulnerable Population: This might be duplicative of the CJP criteria, but it is a separate category because regardless of CJP emphasis, a priority ought to be given to these disciplines and materials related to them.

5 Highly Related      4 Very related      3 Related      2 Somewhat Related      1 Not Related      0 Not applicable

E. Dynamic/Complex Subject Matter: The criteria relates in three ways: the law is in flux and therefore a higher level of appellate activity, the subject matter is the target of appellate activity showing errors by trial courts, or the subject matter is an emerging area of the law (e.g., genetic modification of crops) therefore requiring a higher level of appellate guidance.

5 High Appellate Activity      4 On-going Appellate Activity      3 Some Appellate Activity      2 Little Appellate Activity

Ranking and Prioritization of CJER Publications

(High – 5 Low – 1)

House, Gaab, Juhas, Riley, Robie, Weathers, Mavis, Bottke

1 No Appellate Activity

0 Not Applicable

F. Priority for Newer Judges: Assuming that newer judges are in greater need for information, these scoring criteria bumps up a given category of publication. Note: CJER staff will indicate if the publication is currently recommended by a curriculum committee for New Judges in the Toolkits

5 Highly Related

4 Very related

3 Related

2 Somewhat Related

1 Not Related

0 Not applicable

G. Availability of Other Sources: If other resources are available, then the need for updating is not critical. The criteria is intended to reflect that in the overall scoring. Note: CJER staff will provide information regarding alternate sources, recognizing that you may be aware of resources which staff is not aware of.

5 No other resources

4 Very few resources

3 Some resources

2 Adequate amount of resources

1 Rich array of resources

0 Not Applicable

Age of Current Publication: This is placed after the title. While it does not add a specific numerical value to the ranking, the revision date should be taken into account in the overall ranking of the publication.

Information on Judicial Council Directives

Council Directive 87

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts that the AOC should support and provide requested assistance to those courts that collaborate with other regional courts in providing judicial education and staff training or that request support in providing their own programs.

SEC Recommendation 7-22

The Education Division should support and provide requested assistance to those courts that collaborate with other regional courts in providing judicial education and staff training or that request support in providing their own programs.

| x       | COMPLETED: CJER continues to promote and provide local education and training to both the trial and appellate courts by offering courses to the courts locally or with nearby courts, supporting a network of training coordinators, supporting regional locations for training multiple courts, providing council broadcasts, and assisting local courts in establishing their own local education programs. |

For several years, CJER has promoted and provided local education and training to both the trial and appellate courts. In 2010 CJER developed a local training catalogue in judicial education containing over 80 courses and which covers substantive law areas (civil, criminal, family, juvenile, probate and mental health) as well as access, collaborative courts, computer training, court security, domestic violence, fairness, judicial ethics, and self-represented litigants. Courts can choose to offer a course in their local court either on their own or with nearby courts. CJER pays for faculty expenses to the requesting court(s). In addition, CJER provides local training and education to both court staff and court management as requested.

More recently, CJER was able to offer all of the courts across the state specific trainings that CJER staff can teach at the local court level.

CJER has established a network of training coordinators at the local trial and appellate courts. CJER has also developed a website, LINC (Linking Individuals and Networking Courts), which enables courts to share educational content amongst themselves as well as post live training opportunities from court to court.

CJER supports local training in other ways. To better serve courts with both local and regional training, CJER has identified several locations that serve well as regional locations for training multiple courts. In 2006, some of these courts agreed to serve as regional centers for training, and were enhanced with audio visual equipment, provided by CJER, which greatly improved the learning environment of these rooms. All courts have been equipped with satellite downlink infrastructure which allows them to receive broadcasts from the council, and receive valuable education from CJER. With the new capital construction projects, CJER continues to work with courts in identifying areas of the state that can serve as regional training centers, and provides technical assistance to ensure these large training rooms are built to standards that support local and regional education.

CJER also assists local courts in establishing their own local education programs. One such program is the Judicial Education Services (JES) program at the Superior Court of Los Angeles. In early 2000, the Superior Court of Los Angeles County contacted CJER and expressed an interest in establishing a local judicial education program modeled after CJER and requested assistance to that end. Specifically, the court asked CJER to work with it to develop policies and procedures for the establishment and maintenance of an education Governing Committee, to assist the court in identifying, developing, and training a pool of qualified judicial faculty, and to train court attorneys to support this Governing Committee and its judicial faculty similar to how CJER attorneys support the CJER Governing Committee and its curriculum committees and judicial faculty. CJER agreed to provide all of these services.

Local Education: Convenient and Fiscally Prudent

Dear Colleagues:

The CJER Governing Committee is pleased to make this second edition of our catalog of courses available to local courts. Severe budget limitations continue and these courses provide high-quality judicial education at less cost. Sending faculty to local courts rather than having participants and faculty travel to a single site is both cost effective and provides small group interactive education.

One of the Judicial Council's highest priorities is to provide high-quality judicial education to ensure that our state maintains a professional judiciary that offers fair and impartial justice to all Californians. The goal is to ensure that, regardless of the court, judge, or type of case, the public will have access to the highest levels of expertise and service in all parts of the state.

The courses in this catalog are designed to give you as judges the resources to stay current with the law and procedure relating to your assignment without requiring you to take a lot of time away from the bench.

The Committee thanks the faculty members who give significant time to developing and teaching these courses. Without them we could not offer so many courses of such high quality at such great savings in costs.

As chair of the CJER Governing Committee, I look forward to receiving your comments and suggestions.

Sincerely,

Hon. Ronald B. Robie, Chair
CJER Governing Committee

Hon. Ronald B. Robie

OVERVIEW

The Education Division/Center for Judicial Education and Research (CJER) of the Administrative Office of the Courts (AOC) is proud to continue the Local Court Judicial Education Initiative, which we hope enhances your ability to provide high-quality judicial education to your bench officers by partnering with us. Courts can host judicial education classes locally by selecting the course(s) in this catalog and contacting the AOC with a proposed date. The Education Division/CJER recruits the faculty and works with the court to provide written materials for the course. Local courts will typically arrange for an appropriate classroom for the course and handle the participant attendance and registration aspects for the course, unless otherwise requested. As funds allow, the AOC pays for faculty travel expenses and course materials and will provide audiovisual support as requested.

Courses and Faculty

Statewide budget reductions over the past few years have necessitated that the Education Division/CJER offer a number of programs and institutes less frequently. This catalog contains some of the content that would have been provided at statewide events, and represents an alternative way to deliver the material. The courses listed in the catalog were taken from the many classes offered in our statewide programs as well as from some trial court programs and they are uniquely appropriate for local delivery. The courses offer effective judicial education in substantive areas of law, as well as access, collaborative courts, computer training, court security, domestic violence, fairness, judicial ethics, and self-represented litigants. The faculty members who teach the courses are very experienced in the areas they teach and they are trained in adult learning principles.

Statewide programs provide invaluable educational experiences and opportunities for interaction and discussions with your colleagues across California. These programs are still being held, but during these difficult budget times, they cannot be scheduled as frequently as in the past. We hope that this partnership between the local courts and the Education Division/CJER to deliver judicial education courses locally will help to bridge the educational gaps caused by the severely reduced statewide program schedule.

Partnering to Enhance Educational Opportunities

I am pleased to present the second edition of the Judicial Education Course Catalog. The Education Division/CJER supports local and regional education so that judges, commissioners, and referees can obtain needed education without travel and time away from the bench. We have found that partnering with local courts allows us to provide education that is cost-effective, timely, and convenient for your bench. All of these courses can be offered at your court, with a certain number of participants. As funds allow, the Education Division/CJER will pay for faculty travel costs as well as provide support for logistics.

We had a good response to this new initiative in its first year. Courses have been held in counties of all sizes from Lake to Los Angeles. I am very pleased to announce that the second edition of the Judicial Education Course Catalog includes 26 new courses. We are extremely grateful to the faculty who volunteer to teach these courses, and appreciative of the many courses in this catalog that were developed by the Los Angeles County Superior Court Judicial Education Seminars (JES) Committee, chaired by Judge Emilie Elias. I also appreciate the work of the CJER Governing Committee members and Justice Ronald Robie, Chair, who have been instrumental in leading the effort to develop local education.

There is extraordinary value in live programs; learning in community offers the opportunity for sharing ideas and practices, learning from others in the class, and having a highly qualified subject matter expert available to answer questions and discuss issues. This catalog offers administrative presiding justices and presiding judges the opportunity to hold a live program in the court without the associated burdens of travel costs and extensive time away from the bench.

Diane E. Cowdrey
Director, Education Division/CJER

We are very excited to be able to continue to offer the courts this educational resource.

Sincerely,

BRINGING A JUDICIAL EDUCATION COURSE TO YOUR COURT

Requesting a Course

Please fill out the Course Request Form (see page 7) and send it to Lina Kravetskiy, Program Coordinator for the Education Division/CJER. The application must be signed by the administrative presiding justice or presiding judge and clerk/administrator or court executive officer. Please submit one application for each course.

Ideally, please give the AOC Education Division/CJER 90 days' advance notice to allow ample time for faculty to be confirmed and for them to schedule time away from court. The minimum class size is 20 unless noted otherwise in the course description. Courts may invite judges and subordinate judicial officers from surrounding counties in order to meet the minimum number.

Courses are designed for a judicial audience, but the course description will indicate if specified court staff may attend the program. Practicing attorneys serving as temporary judges are not eligible to attend these classes.

Applications will be processed on a first-come, first-served basis. The number of courses that can be supported in a fiscal year will depend on budget limitations and the availability of faculty and audiovisual support.

Expenses Related to a Course

The AOC Education Division will pay the costs for faculty to travel to teach the course and will also pay for the production and shipping of the course materials to the course site. Courts will be requested to provide the number of participants to the program coordinator 30 days before the course so that the materials can be reproduced and mailed in a timely fashion. If the county does not have audiovisual support, CJER will also provide an audiovisual support person and equipment.

Costs to the local court should be minimal—expenses for participant travel, the meeting room, and any catering. Local access to a computer classroom is necessary for the computer courses.

Choosing a Course

Please review the course descriptions to determine the best course that meets the needs of your local court. If you would like to discuss the content of the courses or would like help in choosing the best course for your needs, please contact Lina Kravetskiy at 415-865-4548, Lina.Kravetskiy@jud.ca.gov.

Los Angeles Judicial Education Seminars Courses

The Judicial Education Governing Committee for the Los Angeles Judicial Education Seminars (JES) has agreed to include some of the JES courses in this catalog. We thank the Los Angeles Superior Court and the committee for their support of this local court judicial education effort.

Approval of Administrative Presiding Justice OR Presiding Judge and Clerk/Administrator OR Court Executive Officer

The court's administrative presiding justice or presiding judge and clerk/administrator or court executive officer must approve any request for resources for a local judicial education course before the request can be made. I support the provision of resources for local education in my court. We will provide follow-up information about the course as requested by the AOC.

ACCESS

AMERICANS WITH DISABILITIES ACT

Access Laws

Learn about the many different laws covering persons with disabilities, including the Americans With Disabilities Act, state statutes, California Rules of Court, and controlling case law. Find out the differences between federal and state laws. Participants will become familiar with disability symbols and will also learn about employee accommodations and the responsibilities of the court as well as accommodations for public court users. There are two versions of the course—one qualifies for ethics elective credit for judges, commissioners, and referees and the other version qualifies for elimination of bias MCLE credit.

1 hour ■ Either 1 hour elimination of bias MCLE credit or 1 hour Qualifying Ethics elective credit depending on audience

How to Communicate and Interact With Persons With Disabilities

Learn the appropriate way to communicate and interact with a person with a disability. How do you talk to someone with a hearing loss? What do you do when you see a person who is blind? Should you kneel when talking to someone in a wheelchair? Find out the answers to these and more in this fun interactive course. Participants will be provided with tip sheets on how to communicate with a person who is hard of hearing and a person who is blind. Participants will also learn the 10 tips for interacting with a person with a mental health disability.

How to Have Accessible Meetings

This course is designed to assist judges and subordinate judicial officers and anyone who plans, arranges, or coordinates meetings for the court. How do you know if a conference location is accessible to persons with disabilities? Which table arrangements best accommodate attendees who use a wheelchair or participants with a hearing impairment? What are the alternative formats you could use for participants who are visually impaired? Are there guidelines for speakers? In this course, participants will discuss the answers to these questions and more. Attendees will also learn about the use of assistive listening devices and the TDD/TTY equipment. This course provides participants with the tools and resources to have a successful and accessible meeting for everyone.

2 hours

ACCESS, continued

How to Provide Access to the Courts for Persons With Disabilities

Find out what you must do to provide accommodations for persons with disabilities. Participants will learn about the California Rules of Court and how to complete the Judicial Council form for requesting an accommodation. Learn about the different types of accommodations the court may provide and what accommodations the court may deny.

1 hour ■ 1 hour of elimination of bias MCLE credit

Service and Comfort Animals in Your Court

Learn the difference between service and comfort animals. Find out the different types of animals that may be considered a service or comfort animal. Which ones must be allowed into the courthouse? What questions are you allowed to ask? What questions are you prohibited from asking? When can you remove an animal from your court? May you charge extra fees? Can you separate the animal and owner from others in the court? Participants will learn the answers to these questions and more in this class.

1 hour ■ 1 hour of elimination of bias MCLE credit

CIVIL

Civil Expert Witnesses

Learn about frequently encountered expert witness issues in civil cases, including proper use of Kelly-Frye and how to determine whether there is a reasonable basis for an opinion under Evid C §801(b). Other topics may include qualification of witnesses, discovery disputes, and hearsay.

3 hours ■ Los Angeles JES course

Civil Harassment

Explore the Dos, Don'ts, and Best Practices for Civil Harassment Restraining Orders. From the TRO to final orders, learn how to conduct hearings, issue orders, prepare forms, and everything in between. Elder Abuse and Workplace Violence Restraining Orders will also be discussed.

3 hours ■ Los Angeles JES course

Civil Law Update

A legal update on civil law designed to provide experienced civil judges with practical analysis and a discussion on how recent changes in the law affect the trial judge.

Issues in Employment Law

This course highlights emerging issues in employment law litigation, such as enforcement of arbitration clauses, wage-and-hour issues, summary judgment issues, issues resulting from layoffs and reduced workweeks, stating wrongful termination claims based on violation of public policy, and proving hostile environment sexual harassment claims.

1.5 hours

Large Topics in Small Claims

Explore both routine and esoteric small claims issues using video vignettes and focused instruction. Share and discuss successful techniques for conducting small claims hearings.

Unlawful Detainers

This course arms participants with the knowledge to successfully negotiate the minefield of unlawful detainers. It is a unique area of law characterized by nitpicky details that are better understood in the context of its limited purpose and summary nature. Foreclosure evictions now dominate the unlawful detainer calendar, as well as bankruptcy issues unique to evictions. Specific areas of interest are jurisdiction/venue, notice requirements, habitability defenses, foreclosures, bankruptcy, and postjudgment issues.

CIVIL, continued

INSURANCE

---

Insurance Law—Basic

This course reviews various coverage principles and general key issues such as the duty to defend, bad faith, and settlement options.

3 hours

Insurance Law—Advanced

This course for experienced civil law judges focuses on complicated topics such as policy interpretation, multiple years of coverage, additional insured, reservation of rights, stacking, indemnity agreements, accident versus occurrence, and the genuine dispute doctrine.

3 hours

COLLABORATIVE COURTS

Drug Case Disposition

Discuss practical ways to manage the disposition of drug cases and their impact on your calendar. Learn the mechanics of drug diversion statutes and the continuum of handling drug cases. Topics discussed include alternative case management, assessing a drug program using current treatment protocol, mental health diversion, and community-based and treatment-oriented sentencing.

1.5–2 hours

Incorporating Collaborative Court Principles

Don't want to see the same defendants and clients over and over again throughout your career? Integrate highly effective collaborative court principles and practices into your current assignment and improve the lives of those who come before you while increasing your own personal job satisfaction at the same time.

This course is available in several versions. The full two-day course is for judges and subordinate judicial officers who have not sat in a collaborative justice court. A one-day course is available for judges who have previously sat in a problem-solving court. Additionally, a short 3.5-hour course can be requested to give an overview of the area. Judges in policymaking roles can request a 3.5-hour version that is adapted to their interests and includes an expanded discussion of costs, recidivism, benefits, and current and future trends.

Course length will be determined in consultation with local court.

COMPUTER TRAINING

Civil Jury Instructions With LexisNexis HotDocs

Learn about the Judicial Council's civil jury instructions (CACI) using LexisNexis® HotDocs® software. LexisNexis® has custom-designed its user-friendly HotDocs® program to easily insert names and gender references and to automatically select many other variables. Participants will learn how to use HotDocs® to create a case file, view instruction sets and use notes, assemble a set of jury instructions for a hypothetical civil case, use features of the software to enhance instruction discussions during trial conferences, edit or add instructions as necessary, and print instructions in alternate formats.

3 hours ■ Class size 15–18

Criminal Jury Instructions With LexisNexis HotDocs

Learn about the Judicial Council's criminal jury instructions (CALCRIM) using LexisNexis® HotDocs® software. LexisNexis® has custom-designed its user-friendly HotDocs® program to easily insert names and gender references and to automatically select many other variables. Participants will learn how to use HotDocs® to create a case file, view instruction sets and use notes, assemble a set of jury instructions for a hypothetical criminal case, use features of the software to enhance instruction discussions during trial conferences, edit or add instructions as necessary, and print instructions in alternate formats.

Internet Resources for Legal Information

What began as a research tool for scientists has blossomed into something unanticipated. In a very short time, the Internet has changed the way most of us do business, the way we communicate, and even the way we learn. Participants will become familiar with the basic functions of the Microsoft Internet Explorer® Web browser and will explore the AOC's Serranus Web site and other law-related sites of interest to judges and subordinate judicial officers.

Introduction to Microsoft Word and Windows

Learn the basics of Microsoft Word® and its everyday application to the tasks of judges and subordinate judicial officers. Participants will learn to open and save documents; use toolbar icons and shortcuts to make word-processing tasks easier; move text in a document by cutting and pasting; create a table; and use features like find and replace, autocorrect, and symbols. In addition, participants will become familiar with functions of the Microsoft Windows® environment, including being able to launch programs; create folders; copy, move, and delete files; and employ computer first-aid techniques.

LexisNexis Research

Participants will become familiar with the basic functions of the Lexis® online legal research system and will learn to search legal topics by case names and statutes, as well as by keywords using natural language and term connectors. The faculty are trainers from LexisNexis®.

2 hours ■ Maximum class size 15–18

PowerPoint for Trial Judges

Microsoft PowerPoint® is a powerful software tool that can be used to create professional-looking presentations and slide shows. Participants learn to create slides, insert and edit text, and work with audiovisual elements such as the slide color scheme and adding graphics and video to slides.

Examples of how trial judges use PowerPoint will be shown.

3 hours ■ Class size 15–18

COURT SECURITY

Personal Security and Judicial Privacy Protection

What steps can or should judges take to preserve their personal safety and the safety of their families and court staff, both at and away from the courthouse? In this course, participants will enhance their abilities to assess potential threats and learn avoidance techniques. Participants will also learn about tools to maximize privacy protection in both public records and nonpublic personal records.

1.5 hours

Stalking Cases and Court Security

National events and an increase in the number of cases have heightened awareness about both stalking cases and favorable practices for improving courtroom security. This course identifies stalking behavior, dynamics, and types and includes discussion of case management techniques in stalking cases. Additional issues include threat and violence assessment, cyberstalking, stalking law, firearms and court orders, and evidentiary issues in stalking cases. This course also touches on practical ways to increase court security.

COURTROOM AND TRIAL MANAGEMENT

Contempt

Courtroom control is essential to the administration of justice. Judges have the legal and inherent power to employ all means necessary to maintain order. Contempt is the ultimate tool of control, but must be a tool of last resort. The faculty will discuss sanctions and direct, indirect, and hybrid contempt and when it is appropriate to resort to sanctions or contempt. Using checklists, participants will learn the requirements regarding notice and the opportunity to be heard, and how to hold a contempt hearing, make a record, issue an order, and avoid common errors.

1.5 hours ■ 1 hour Qualifying Ethics elective credit

Disruptive Defendants and Problem Pro Pers

This course provides participants with problem-solving techniques and procedures for handling disruptive defendants and problem pro pers in criminal cases. Participants will be given examples of courtroom situations, suggestions for practical and legal solutions, and relevant case law.

Mental Health and the Courts

This is an introductory course about dealing with mentally ill litigants in court. Although focused on criminal law, the class will address issues that occur throughout the justice system. The goal of this course is to increase judges', commissioners', and referees' awareness of the special challenges presented by cases involving mental illness. After a brief examination of the types of mental illness and the differences between the various types of mental health litigation (competency, insanity, civil commitment, etc.), students will explore ways of combating stereotypes and treating the mentally ill effectively and with dignity in the courtroom. The instructors will also discuss resources and programs a court can use to help mentally ill litigants.

3 hours

Mental Health Issues in Criminal Courts

This course is an overview of the contexts in which mental health issues arise in criminal courts. Proceedings under Pen C §1026 (Not Guilty by Reason of Insanity) and Pen C §1367 (Incompetent to Stand Trial) are covered as well as:

- Mentally Disordered Offenders (Pen C §§2960 et seq)
- Mentally Disordered Sex Offenders (Welf & I C §§6300 et seq, repealed 1981)
- Sexually Violent Predators (Welf & I C §§6600 et seq)
- Mental Retardation Commitments (Welf & I C §§6500 et seq)
- CYA Commitments (Welf & I C §§1800 et seq)
- CRC Commitments (Welf & I C §§3050 et seq)
- Murphy Conservatorships (Welf & I C §5008h(1)(b))

Course length will be determined in consultation with local court

CRIMINAL JUSTICE REALIGNMENT

Criminal Justice Realignment: Judicial Issues Roundtable

During this facilitated roundtable judges and commissioners from neighboring counties will have an opportunity to discuss issues and local strategies relating to felony sentencing and postrelease community supervision. The requesting court may request specific topics be included or may select from the following:

- Felony Sentencing

- Adaptation of

  - Arraignment scripts

  - Plea scripts

  - Plea forms

  - Plea negotiations

- Evidence-based Practices

- Postrelease Community Supervision Revocation

  - Case management

  - Hearing procedures

- The Judge's Role in Determining County Implementation Strategy

  - Identification of judicial interests and ethical quandaries

  - Comparison of various counties' implementation strategies

  - Collaborative courts approach to implementation

Criminal Justice Realignment: Justice Partners Roundtable

A similar facilitated discussion to the one described above but altered to accommodate a combined audience of judicial officers and justice partners. The audience, to be determined by the requesting court, may include Judges, Commissioners, Hearing Officers, District Attorneys, Public Defenders, and Probation Officers from the requesting county and from neighboring counties.

Death Penalty

Advanced Capital Case Roundtable

This course is designed to provide the periodic update recommended by rule 10.469(d) of the California Rules of Court and two hours of qualifying ethics credit. Led by judges with extensive experience in high profile and death penalty cases, this course will consist of roundtable discussion during which participants will share their experiences and discuss effective courtroom practices.

REQUIRED COURSE PREREQUISITES

Eligible applicants must have taken the AOC Education Division's two-day Death Penalty Trials course.

COURSE TOPICS

Case law update

Voir dire—avoiding jury bias and selecting a fair jury

Jury death qualification

Individualized and sequestered questioning

Logistics of voir dire and the impact on jurors' comfort and willingness to reveal important information

Effective procedural practices

Use of questionnaires

Jury innovations

Evaluating hardships

Unique issues jurors face in a death penalty case and whether this does or should affect the jury selection process.

Difficult defendants

Pro pers and standby counsel

Handling disruptive defendants

Courtroom control

Media and cameras in the courtroom

Scope of public right of access and permissible limitations

Security

Personal and courtroom security measures a judge may consider

Maintaining fairness in process to the attorneys, the families and friends of the parties, the defendant, the victim, and the public.

Ethics

Ethical or moral issues that a judge may struggle with when handling this type of case. Increasingly, electronic evidence is becoming part of a criminal trial. Attorneys want to use technology to enhance their presentations to juries. Evidentiary foundation questions arise regarding the admissibility of information from social networks, e-mails, texts, and other electronic sources. This course examines discovery, pretrial, and trial implications associated with that trend.

1.5 days      2 hours of Qualifying Ethics elective credit

EVIDENCE

Admissibility of Technological Evidence in Criminal Cases

Increasingly, electronic evidence is becoming part of a criminal trial. Attorneys want to use technology to enhance their presentations to juries. Evidentiary foundation questions arise regarding the admissibility of information from social networks, e-mails, texts, and other electronic sources. This course examines discovery, pretrial, and trial implications associated with that trend.

1.5–2 hours

Discovery Issues—Advanced

This course takes an in-depth look at complex discovery issues. Topics include reciprocal discovery under Pen C §§1054 et seq. including impeachment evidence and oral statements of a witness not reduced to writing; the District Attorney's duty to investigate; attorney notes regarding interviews of witnesses; motions to access officer personnel records (Pitchess) and for disclosure of confidential informants; sanctions for discovery violations and compliance orders; and issues surrounding subpoenas duces tecum including limited disclosure per Teal, claims of privilege, and in camera reviews.

1.5 hours

CRIMINAL, continued

Evidence Hot Topics

Brush up on complex areas of evidence in this fast-paced and interactive course. Topics include the admissibility of evidence of other crimes in sex offense, domestic violence, elder abuse, and child abuse cases (Evid C §§1108, 1109), and the implications of the U.S. Supreme Court's decision in Melendez–Diaz v Massachusetts to the analysis of hearsay and the Sixth Amendment right to confront witnesses.

Expert Witness Issues in Complex Criminal Cases

Explore evidentiary issues arising in cases involving expert witness testimony. Learn to rule on objections to the admissibility and scope of expert testimony regarding gangs, new scientific techniques or devices, and mental disorders.

Forensic DNA Evidence

Forensic DNA testing technologies have presented the criminal justice system with powerful and unique tools in the solution of crime. Small, often invisible, biological material can successfully be obtained from evidence items previously thought to be useless in criminal investigations. The creation of local, state, and national databases of DNA profiles of previously convicted offenders has similarly resulted in the solution of otherwise suspectless cases. Of greater importance is the now-common use of DNA typing technologies to examine older cases in which inmates have frequently served lengthy terms in prisons or penitentiaries. In excess of 240 inmates in the United States have been exonerated by modern DNA analysis of samples seized prior to the availability of DNA testing.

Search and Seizure

This program provides judges and subordinate judicial officers with an overview of search and seizure law and procedure in California with an emphasis on major U.S. Supreme Court cases in areas such as standing, exceptions to the warrant requirement, temporary detention, good faith, and the evaluation of search warrant applications. It prepares them for not only the responsibility of reviewing a search warrant but also gives them the tools necessary to confidently and correctly rule on motions to suppress evidence pursuant to Penal Code §1538.5.

4–6 hours

Search and Seizure Update

This hypothetical-driven course focuses on recent changes in search and seizure law that directly impact the evaluation of suppression motions and warrant applications.

2 hours

Search Warrant Basics

This course covers the fundamentals of issuing search warrants. The objective of the class is to increase the skill level and confidence of new judges in evaluating search warrant applications. The course will cover the legal structure of search warrant practice, permissible communications with police and prosecutors on an ex parte basis, the components of probable cause, and common types of search warrants. The course is open to all judges, but its content assumes only limited or no prior experience in search warrant practice.

2.5–3 hours

Witness Testimony: Special Issues in Criminal Trials

Unexpected issues concerning witness testimony can derail a trial schedule and create appealable issues difficult to cure. Faculty will introduce effective pretrial conference strategies that can avoid common pitfalls and reduce delays related to witness issues during trial. Topics include the procedure for handling a witness's invocation of the Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination, use and transactional immunity, witnesses who testify under a plea bargain, marital and spousal privileges, and accomplice testimony.

JURY ISSUES

Juror Misconduct

An experienced criminal trial court judge discusses ways that juror misconduct is discovered, effective admonitions that aid in preventing misconduct, and the law controlling the judge's duty to investigate and remedy the situation.

1.5 hours

Jury Selection in Complex Felony Cases

This course focuses on procedural techniques that can increase the efficiency of jury selection in complex felony cases while reducing jury bias. Topics include a discussion of the pros and cons of various procedural practices such as the size of the venire and attorney time limits; the evaluation of hardships and techniques to reduce the number of hardship requests; the use of questionnaires and mini-opening statements; the management of large jury panels and selection of multiple juries; unique issues jurors face in lengthy or high profile trials, or emotionally intense cases and whether this does or should impact the jury selection process; Batson/ Wheeler issues; and procedural techniques that improve jurors' comfort and willingness to reveal important information.

Criminal Mediation:

Negotiating the Resolution of a Criminal Case: Ethical, Legal, and Practical

Considerations of Judicial Participation in Plea Bargaining

As opposed to the civil courtroom, plea negotiation and settlement in the criminal courtroom is fraught with ethical land mines. Judges must be diligent in protecting the rights of a defendant, the rights of a victim, and striving to achieve justice while facing the pressures of handling impossible caseloads. Learn techniques that other judges have developed to successfully strike this balance in this roundtable-style course

SENTENCING

Doing More With Less: Sentencing and Probation Considerations in the New Millennium

The parameters of probation reform in SB 678 are analyzed and “evidence based practices” are defined. “Evidence Based” sentencing practices are discussed as well as methods and criteria judges might consider in seeking to implement such practices in their courts.

Introduction to Felony Sentencing

This course covers all the basic sentencing concepts you need to know to complete almost every felony sentence. The course begins with an overview of the basic probationary sentence and a single-count state prison sentence. You learn how to conduct a sentencing hearing; determine eligibility for probation; impose an appropriate custody term; and make other necessary fines, assessments, and orders to conclude the sentence. The course also covers multiple count and multiple case sentencing, application of Penal Code §654, calculation of custody credits with multiple cases, indeterminate sentences, sentences after violation of probation, recall of sentences, Cruz waivers, and correction or modification of sentences.

Misdemeanors: Procedures and Sentencing (Including DUI Sentencing)

This course is for judges, commissioners, and referees handling any type of misdemeanor cases. The goal of the course is to provide an understanding of mandates in misdemeanor sentencing, as well as the fundamental principles of effective sentencing. The course starts by covering mandated sentencing in the areas of DUI, drug offenses, and domestic violence. The research on effective behavior modification and how that can be used in misdemeanor sentencing to increase success, reduce recidivism, and increase public safety are also discussed.

2 hours

Sentencing Considerations in Gang Cases

This course teaches judges how to sentence defendants in cases involving gang allegations. Topics include plea bargaining; rights of the victims to be heard; detailed, step-by-step analysis of gang enhancements and sentence calculation; calculation of credits; conditions of probation; and restitution, fines, and fees.

2 hours

Three Strikes

This workshop reviews the basic sentencing structure of this law, with emphasis on the mechanics of imposing a strike sentence. You learn which previous convictions constitute strikes, strike sentencing rules, and what sentencing options are available to the court in applying the law. You gain a working knowledge of the Three-Strikes law through class discussion, written materials, and practical sentencing hypotheticals.

3.5 hours

Treatment-Based Sentencing for Drug Offenders

This course explores the options for diverting drug offenders to treatment-based sentences. Topics include Deferred Entry of Judgment, Proposition 36, probation supervised inpatient or outpatient treatment, Drug Court, and state-level programs through the Department of Corrections. This course provides a continuum of sentencing alternatives available for the drug offenders.

Assessing Dangerousness in Criminal Domestic Violence Cases

This course features a review of important research conducted by nationally recognized experts on assessing dangerousness and lethality in domestic violence incidents. The course discusses the assessment tools that were developed as part of the research. Building on this research overview, the course uses a sample case file to discuss the practical application of this information. The course highlights and analyzes the judicial decisions that require risk assessment in criminal domestic violence cases. Additional key topics include examining criminal history and other case information, ethical limitations on assessing risk, and using calendar management to enhance safety.

Criminal Domestic Violence Cases

This course enables judges and subordinate judicial officers to handle a criminal domestic violence case from the arraignment stage through supervision on probation. Pretrial issues, such as protective orders and witness body attachments, are addressed. The course covers the complex evidentiary problems that often arise when victims are either absent or recanting, including impeachment with prior inconsistent statements; admission of spontaneous statements; use of absent victim statements under Evid C §1370 after Crawford v Washington; admission of prior domestic violence incidents under Evid C §1109; Battered Women's Syndrome evidence; and victims' assertion of the Fifth Amendment privilege. The mandatory sentencing provisions for these cases and how they may affect proposed plea dispositions are also covered.

Gang Issues in Criminal Cases

Explore strategies for handling legal and practical issues arising in gang cases from arraignment to sentencing. Topics include courtroom security, witness protection, assuring witness attendance, discovery, admissibility of gang evidence and expert testimony, technical requirements of the STEP Act (Pen C §186.22), jury selection, and sentencing.

Handling Sexual Assault Cases

Sexual assault cases require the judge to be familiar with a unique body of substantive and procedural law that is not necessarily applicable in other criminal cases. The judge must also be aware of and understand the dynamics of sexual assault cases, the needs of the victim and specially mandated accommodations, and myths and misconceptions about sexual assault victims and offenders. This course emphasizes these key issues and guides the judge through managing a sexual assault trial from arraignment through sentencing and postsentencing procedures. The course, or a part of it, may be delivered in one- to two-hour stand-alone modules. Key topics include:

- Voir dire/jury issues
- Experts
- Offender characteristics
- Special protection for victims
- Impact of DNA on sexual assault cases
- Managing the media in high-profile sexual assault cases
- Sentencing
- Postsentencing for sexual violence predators/mentally disordered sex offenders

ELDER ABUSE

Handling Elder Abuse Issues

Elder abuse cases can arise in virtually any department of the court. This course helps the judge or subordinate judicial officer become familiar with elder abuse in its various court settings and the relevant underlying law and procedure. The course also provides an awareness and understanding of the dynamics of elder abuse cases, the needs of the victim and appropriate accommodations, and myths and misconceptions about elder abuse victims and offenders. This course emphasizes these key issues and guides the participant through managing the complexities of elder abuse cases. The course contains a series of modules that can be delivered in one- to two-hour workshops that can be combined for longer courses. Key topics include:

- Aging and the dynamics of elder abuse
- Statutory framework in which elder abuse cases arise
- Domestic violence in later life
- Evidence in elder abuse cases
- Decisionmaking skills
- Elder abuse in probate and conservatorship proceedings
- Justice system agencies in elder abuse cases
- Judicial ethics in elder abuse cases

1–2 hours for each segment ■ Segments may be combined for longer courses

Restraining Orders in Elder Abuse Cases

This course focuses on restraining orders designed to protect elders from abuse. Key topics include how to recognize and understand the dynamics of elder abuse, identifying the statutory scheme and the legal requirements for issuing a restraining order under Welf & I C §15657.03; identifying what should be in a proper order under the Welfare and Institutions Code and comparing the results with the Domestic Violence Prevention Act; identifying the gaps in remedies, requirements, and what can be ordered; and discussing suggestions for options to fill the gaps.

1.5 to 3 hours

STALKING

Adjudication of Stalking Cases

This course focuses on a “nuts and bolts” approach to judicial decisionmaking in stalking cases. Topics will include the statutory basis for stalking cases, stalking behavior and dynamics, threats and threat assessment, special evidentiary issues, victim protections, and crafting effective court orders.

1.5 hours

Stalking in Cyberspace: What a Judge Needs to Know

This course provides practical information about the ways in which perpetrators of domestic violence and stalking may use technology, such as global positioning systems (GPS), cell phones, and handheld computers to control or track their victims. The course also focuses on how this issue might affect the terms of restraining and protective orders and other implications for judicial decisionmaking.

1.5 hours

Domestic Violence and Ethics

Judges and commissioners are expected and encouraged to engage in community activities and outreach within the limits of the law and ethical standards. This is especially true in cases involving allegations of domestic violence because of the presence of justice system partners and services. This course provides a forum to discuss these issues in the context of domestic violence cases, using a series of hypotheticals highlighting media inquiries, legislative activities, educational activities, and membership in domestic violence prevention councils. The course also includes an exploration of questions relating to handling cases that often involve self-represented litigants.

2 hours ■ 2 hours of Qualifying Ethics elective credit

Domestic Violence and Fairness Issues

Using a case scenario and practical applications for judges, subordinate judicial officers, and family dispute professionals, this course delineates a methodology for analyzing cultural issues as they occur in domestic violence cases. The goal of the course is not to provide a handy guide to cultural characteristics, but rather to present a practical way of thinking about culture that will assist in mediating and adjudicating cases involving a diverse population.

3 hours

Evaluating the Effects of Domestic Violence on Children

Research reveals that children suffer when they are exposed to domestic violence. This presentation provides an overview of the effects of domestic violence on children and the implications for judicial decisionmaking.

1.5 hours

Immigration Issues in Criminal Domestic Violence Cases

Immigration issues increasingly affect judicial decisionmaking, the nature of the information presented to the court, and safety issues in criminal domestic violence cases. This course provides a broad overview of the elements of immigration law that may affect decisionmaking in these cases and an understanding of the challenges facing victims of domestic violence as a result of the immigration concerns and status of the parties. Course topics include immigration concerns of immigrant victims of domestic violence; myths about immigration status; basic elements of immigration law relevant to adjudication of criminal domestic violence cases; consequences of adult criminal convictions; and protective orders and their impact on the safety of immigrant victims.

FAIRNESS

A Crash Course on Fairness in the Courts

Learn to recognize access and fairness issues in the court and implement practical solutions and strategies for dealing with them. This interactive small-group seminar uses thought-provoking clips from the Academy Award-winning movie Crash to raise issues and stimulate discussion.

3 hours ■ 2 hours of Qualifying Ethics elective credit ■ Los Angeles JES course

Micro-Aggressions and Fairness

This highly interactive course explores the ways in which unconscious bias manifests in verbal communications and nonverbal behavior. The course demonstrates scientifically proven methods for dismantling this bias.

2 hours ■ 2 hours of Qualifying Ethics elective credit

The Neuroscience and Empirical Psychology of Decisionmaking, Credibility Assessment, and Demeanor

In this interactive course, judges and subordinate judicial officers are provided with information on emerging research on how physiological and unconscious processes affect credibility assessments, and related conclusions that we draw about the character, veracity, and proclivity to engage in behavior. The course explores social cognition, in-group/out-group interactions as well as verbal and nonverbal communication. The course explains how Magnetic Resonance Imaging (MRI) of the brain may show instantaneous assessments of people as threatening or benign. The exercises and studies also add insight into the ways in which our courts interact with court users. The course provides tools for increasing the public's trust and confidence in the courts.

3 hours ■ 2 hours of Qualifying Ethics elective credit

Sexual Orientation Curriculum

This interactive course provides judges and subordinate judicial officers with tools to increase the public's trust and confidence in the courts, as well as effective communication with lesbian, gay, bisexual, and transgender court users. The course uses the latest research on fairness in decisionmaking, including neuroscientific and psychological studies. The course reviews interesting statistics and thoughtful discourse on avoiding pitfalls in communication.

FAMILY

Attacks on the Judgment in Family Law

This course is designed for the less experienced family law judge or subordinate judicial officer. It also serves as a refresher for those more experienced in family law. This course explores the various means used to set aside, modify, or reverse judgments and orders short of the appellate process.

1.5 hours

Attorneys Fees and Costs

This course reviews the recent changes to the law regarding attorney fees, including: the findings required when there is a disparity in access to funds to retain counsel, new forms and how they are likely to be used by self-represented litigants, how to assess the adequacy of a request for attorney fees, and factors to consider in awarding attorney fees.

2.5 hours

Basic Income Issues: Earning Capacity and Imputing Income

This course is designed for the less experienced family law judge or subordinate judicial officer. It also serves as a refresher for those more experienced in family law. This course examines the statutory and case law basis for allowing the court to use an income amount, other than a party's actual income, in setting support and making an order for attorney fees and costs; when and under what circumstances it is appropriate to impute income or a capacity to earn; and imputing income from various assets.

1.5 hours

Basic Spousal Support

This seminar is designed for family law judicial officers who have already completed the Family Law Primary Assignment Orientation. The faculty will review the Family Code 4320 factors using hypothetical case scenarios and explore in depth the factors that are particularly problematic given the current economy and the rise in self-represented litigants, who may be unfamiliar with burdens of proof or admissible evidence when seeking to establish or modify spousal support.

2.5 hours

Claims of Exemption and Defenses to Enforcement of Support Orders

This course examines ways to enforce support orders, deal with claims of exemption and defenses to enforcement, and handle requests that are not made in the proper form or procedure.

1.5 hours

Difficult Custody Modifications and the Role of the Court

Requests for modifications of custody and visitation can be challenging and difficult. In a discussion format, this course examines difficult case scenarios as a way of exploring how to think about and resolve the toughest cases. Topics include requests to separate siblings and to modify out-of-state orders, cases involving military families and deployment, and more.

1.5 hours

FAMILY, continued

Domestic Violence and Custody—Assessing the Risk

This course, designed for judges, subordinate judicial officers, and family court services professionals, presents an analytical process for assessing risk in custody cases in which domestic violence is a factor. Using a series of case scenarios that reflect a variety of domestic violence fact patterns arising in different contexts, the course focuses on the role of family court services, the role of the court, and statutory requirements and considerations. The course includes an interactive discussion about how to determine what is actually happening in the family and what the court should do.

1.5–3 hours

Domestic Violence Issues in Family Law Cases

This course alerts judges and subordinate judicial officers about the domestic violence issues that arise in family law cases. Topics emphasized are the statutory presumption based on a history of domestic violence under Fam C §3044 and crafting custody and visitation orders in the best interest of the child when domestic violence is an issue.

1.5–3 hours

Family-Centered Case Resolution

A discussion of best practices for using the new family law forms, implementing new case management rules, and other tips for resolving the issues presented in family law courts.

1.5 hours

Live Testimony at Hearings

Under new Family Code §217, absent a stipulation of the parties or finding of good cause, the court must receive any live, competent testimony that is relevant and within the scope of the Order to Show Cause or notice of motion hearing and the court may ask questions of the parties. This course examines how this can be done given the high volume of cases in our courts.

Use of Technology in Domestic Violence Cases

This course will focus on the use of technology as an element of abuse in family law cases when domestic violence is alleged. Topics relating to social media and others methods of electronic communication will be addressed. Faculty will also discuss the evidentiary issues raised by the use of technology, making a record in these cases, and the role of the judge when the parties are not represented by counsel.

INTERDISCIPLINARY

Cognitive Fallacies—Fundamental Errors in Decision-Making

Classical economics assumes logical, rational behavior in decision making. However over the past 30 years, a new field has developed known as behavioral economics which observes that many of our decisions are not, in fact, rational. The focus of this course is on cognitive fallacies—errors our minds make as we reach decisions. These errors are based on the brain’s structure, and generally all people (including judges) are subject to them. We tend to make up stories to explain connections among events that are unconnected (narrative fallacy). We believe more expensive goods, such as wines, taste better in blind taste tests, and often consider only evidence that supports previously made decisions (cognitive dissonance). We believe that our success is a result of our talent and our failures are explained by other reasons (attribution bias). We tend to make judgments of value (such as prices of goods or settlements) based on entirely unrelated “priming” numbers we were exposed to just before making the decision (anchoring). Experiments discussed in the course reveal that many decisions are made entirely unconsciously, and the conscious mind is often employed in creating post hoc rationalizations of these decisions.

This course is useful for judges handling settlement conferences, helping them to evaluate why parties take certain positions and helping them to modify the parties’ behavior. It is also designed for those wishing to be sensitive to their unconscious biases in their approach to people, and in decision-making generally. Participants will learn techniques to evaluate the decisions of lawyers and the testimony of witnesses, including eyewitnesses. The course includes in-class work with the participants, allowing them to observe themselves falling prey to some of these fallacies. This course is open to research attorneys and judicial officers.

Difficult Conversations

This course provides participants with problem-solving techniques for handling difficult litigants and lawyers in a variety of cases, including civil, criminal, and family, as well as in a variety of settings, both in and outside of court. Common personality disorders are discussed as well as techniques for identifying those traits and communicating with people who have them. Contempt adjudication is included but the goal of the course is to provide participants with tools for maintaining the decorum of the court (and the sanity of the judge) without contempt.

1.5 hours ■ 1 hour of Qualifying Ethics elective credit

E-business

Learn about the various successful e-business projects that are in place across California courts and become familiar with how these implementations have improved access to justice for justice partners and the public. These new electronic ways of doing business create efficiencies while providing judicial officers, justice partners and the public greater access to critical information in a timely and effective manner. In this course, the attendees will also learn about many different statutes and rules that define court electronic business such as electronic filing, servicing, and access, and find out how these rules and statutes differ from paper based court operations.

2 hours

Evidentiary Issues Involving Social Media for the Trial Court Judge

During this fast-paced, hypothetical-driven evidence course designed for both civil and criminal trial judges, faculty will delve into issues surrounding electronic evidence. Topics will include discovery issues and the admissibility and foundational issues associated with Facebook, Twitter, and other social network evidence.

Improving on Excellence: Enhancing Your Judicial Skills for the Next Decade

This highly interactive course allows judges and subordinate judicial officers to identify their skill sets as judges. The course defines ways to enhance those skills sets so that judges can effectively and efficiently use their analytical skills on the bench.

1.5 hours

Mental Health and the Science of Addiction

Substance use disorders as well as other mental health concerns are implicated in the vast majority of criminal cases, a large majority of child abuse and neglect cases, and are found in numerous other cases before the court. As a result of this course you will be better able to craft court orders to increase compliance and reduce violations. We explore a basic understanding of alcohol and other drug use as well as mental health diagnoses the court is likely to see. Understanding addiction and addressing recovery as well as medication compliance lead to more effective judging.

3.5 hours

Myers-Briggs Type Indicator for Judges, Commissioners, and Referees

What is the MBTI and what can it do for judges? Knowledge of one's own personality type and key concepts of the MBTI can be useful when they are applied to fact-finding and decision-making, communication style, leadership, and other aspects of a judge's role in the courtroom. Judges, commissioners, and referees will be able to take the MBTI and receive a detailed report and analysis. After taking the course, participants will understand why different people such as attorneys, judges, parties, and staff, interact and react differently. There is a participant cost to take the MBTI (please contact CJER to discuss the number of participants and the associated cost.)

The Pleasures of Case Flow Management

Regional California judicial workshops and site visits since 2005 have generated practical information about the principles of case flow management in criminal, family, and civil courts, and techniques for applying them. In one medium-sized county (Solano) these applications resulted in estimated local annual savings of $50,000 to $100,000.00 in family law alone, plus other clear benefits, including reduced trips to court for litigants. This course will focus on the principles of case flow management and the application of these principles to courts with an eye to cost savings. The content of this course can be tailored by the requesting court or region to include criminal, family, or civil law, or any combination of those areas.

JUDICIAL ETHICS

Qualifying Ethics Core Course

All experienced judges and subordinate judicial officers must take the three-hour Qualifying Ethics core course as part of their Qualifying Ethics training requirement. The course has a set curriculum that covers a wide range of judicial ethics issues. The QE4 cycle runs through 2012. The minimum enrollment for this class is 20 judges and subordinate judicial officers.

3 hours

Social Networking and Judicial Ethics

Online social networking is changing the way millions of people communicate with each other. This course will introduce you to the basics of social networking sites. Learn the risks, benefits and ethical issues that arise if a judge or subordinate judicial officer chooses to participate in an online social community.

JUVENILE

Dependency Jurisdiction

This course will take an in-depth look at the role current risk plays in jurisdictional analyses. Participants will discuss cases in which appellate courts have differed in their interpretations of current risk. Specifically, the class will examine situations such as: the current risk to the surviving children when the parents have caused the death of a sibling; whether boy children are at risk when a perpetrator has molested the female siblings; what current risk might look like in a contentious family court custody battle; whether medicinal marijuana use can be a basis to find current risk; and what role a parent might play in creating current risk to a teenager who is out of control. At the conclusion of the course, participants will understand how to analyze current risk as it applies to the cases that come before them.

2.5 hours

Domestic Violence Issues in Juvenile Cases

This course is designed for judges and subordinate judicial officers who hear juvenile dependency or juvenile delinquency matters. The course focuses on ways in which domestic violence arises in juvenile cases both overtly as a disclosed issue in the case and as an underlying issue that may affect the lives of the children who come before the court. Course topics include understanding domestic violence and its prevalence in families; the effects of domestic violence on children; restraining and exit orders; dispositions; the role of the juvenile court and the juvenile court judge; safe procedures, services, and orders; and crossover issues relating to the family court.

1.5 hours

In-Depth Delinquency Dispositional Hearings

This class will provide an in-depth analysis of the case law and practices related to disposition hearings as well as a discussion of frequently used placement options and the use of "evidence-based practices" in formulating disposition orders. The course is meant to assist judges and subordinate judicial officers, regardless of assignment experience or access to programs and resources, in learning legal nuances, evaluating assessment information, and formulating individualized disposition orders for offenders across the risk/need spectrum.

Issues Regarding Incarcerated Parents

This course discusses existing law concerning incarcerated parents and statewide programs available at the California Department of Corrections regarding issues of visitation, transportation, case plans, and services.

1.5 hours

Primer on Fitness Hearings

After taking this course, participants will be able to conduct a fitness hearing and render appropriate findings. Two case studies are used to examine the fitness criteria and whether the burden of proof is met or rebutted.

1.5 hours

JUVENILE, continued

Reasonable Efforts in Dependency Cases Involving Domestic Violence

This course presents a new tool for dependency court judges and others who participate in the dependency court system, to assist in identifying factors that should be considered when making reasonable efforts determinations in cases involving domestic violence. The course focuses on the importance of understanding domestic violence when handling dependency cases, the family context of these cases, how domestic violence affects parenting, the interrelationships between domestic violence and mental health and substance abuse, the legal framework for making reasonable efforts findings, the types of reasonable efforts that should be made in dependency cases involving domestic violence, and suggestions to help improve the availability and quality of services for families experiencing domestic violence.

Ruling on Welf & I C §827 Motions

This course examines how to balance the interests of the minor with those of the public, and how to promote more effective communication between juvenile courts and other interested persons and entities.

1.5 hours

Tools for Dealing With Teen Parents

Participants learn effective ways to connect and communicate with both dependent and delinquent teens, and their parents and caretakers, on issues of reproductive health, pregnancy, and parenting; what tools are available to assist dependency and delinquency judges to address these issues; and who are the stakeholders who should be included in these considerations.

1.5 hours

Understanding Education Rights in Juvenile Court

This course provides a basic overview of educational rights, including the nuts and bolts of educational representative appointment, followed by a single case study. Participants will learn what the minor's attorney, Court Appointed Special Advocate (CASA), agency, parents, and courts need to do to ensure that a minor's education rights are being met. The case study deals with transfer of rights, transfer of records (ensuring all earned school credits are recorded), and best practices for handling JV 535s.

What You Can Do to Expand Services for Minors

California Rules of Ct, Standards of J Admin 5.40 encourages juvenile court judges to be proactive in working with social service agencies, mental health agencies, justice partners, and the community to develop and coordinate services for youth. This course provides information about expanding services through grants and partnerships with community service providers. Participants will also learn about AOC resources available to find grants administered by the AOC and other state and federal agencies.

SELF-REPRESENTED LITIGANTS

Ethics and Self-Represented Litigants in Domestic Violence Cases

This course focuses on both general judicial ethics issues that arise in domestic violence cases such as disqualification, disclosure, ex parte communication and community outreach, as well as application of the canons in the context of the increasing numbers of self-represented litigants that judges and subordinate judicial officers are seeing in domestic violence cases. New commentary to Cal Rules of Ct, Code of Judicial Ethics, Canon 3B(8) provides that when a litigant is self-represented, the judge has the discretion to take reasonable steps, appropriate under the circumstances and consistent with the law and the canons, to enable the litigant to be heard.

The Judicial Council's Center for Judiciary Education and Research (CJER) is pleased to announce a new program that enables trial and appellate courts to host established CJER courses for court staff and leadership. It is hoped that this program will enable more court employees to participate in education given the convenience of having the courses being brought to their court.

Background

Over the past few years, several courts have contacted CJER and asked for existing classes to be taught in their courts or have asked us to develop and teach courses to meet a specific need. Not only has this been a much appreciated convenience (employees only miss work for the exact hours of training) it has helped courts provide needed training to their staff without incurring travel expenses. In several cases, the courts have also been able to utilize this service to address specific training issues with all staff members at once, which would not have been possible otherwise.

CJER has developed, in collaboration with court staff, a variety of administrative courses in the areas of leadership, staff development, and computer skills. Courts may host these classes by selecting the course(s) listed in the attached catalog and contacting our office with a proposed date. Local courts will typically arrange for an appropriate classroom for the course and handle the participant attendance and registration aspects for the course. The Center for Judiciary Education and Research will provide faculty and all course materials.

The attached information delineates the process for requesting a course from CJER, and describes the available courses. We are always interested in improving our services to the courts, so please do not hesitate to contact me directly if you have any suggestions for improving this local court training effort to better serve the needs of the courts.

Council Directive 88

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts to report to the council on a review of the content of training courses offered to AOC managers, supervisors, and employees, the number and location of courses offered, and the means by which courses and training are delivered. Training opportunities should include greater orientation and development of understanding of court functions.

SEC Recommendation 7-24

As to training currently required of AOC managers, supervisors, and employees, the Administrative Director should order a review of the content of training courses offered, the number and location of courses offered, and the means by which courses and training are delivered. Training opportunities should include greater orientation and development of understanding of court functions.

As reported in December 2012, CJER re-evaluated existing AOC Education courses and reduced them in order to match reduced resources and changed priorities. The review resulted in the elimination of courses that are not core to the mission of the council as well as courses that were not well-attended. In tandem, CJER increased the amount of education offerings for AOC staff that are more court focused, with the goal of increasing council staff's overall effectiveness in providing service to the courts.

Court-related class offerings in 2012 were increased by 162%. CJER has accomplished this, in part, by making available to council staff broadcast programs and online classes originally developed and produced for court personnel. This leveraging of court related education enables CJER to devote the majority of its resources to developing education for the trial and appellate courts while still providing relevant education to council staff. In addition, some council Education courses are offered jointly to both council and trial and appellate court personnel.

IMPLEMENTATION PROGRESS AS OF MARCH 2015

CJER will continue to ensure that training opportunities include greater orientation and understanding of court functions on an ongoing basis as future curricula are developed for council employees.

ASSESSMENT OF IMPLEMENTATION

Since the evaluation in 2012, CJER developed a 'Work of the Courts' online course as well as developed management training programs for council managers and supervisors leveraging other CJER management training programs (i.e. Core 40, Institute for Court Management, etc.).

Judicial Council Recommendation 88

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts to report to the council on a review of the content of training courses offered to AOC managers, supervisors, and employees, the number and location of courses offered, and the means by which courses and training are delivered. Training opportunities should include greater orientation and development of understanding of court functions.

Summary

In 2012, the Office of Education/Center for Judicial Education and Research (CJER) re-evaluated existing AOC Education courses and reduced them in order to match reduced resources and changed priorities. The review resulted in the elimination of courses that are not core to the mission of the Administrative Office of the Courts. In tandem, CJER increased the amount of education offerings for AOC staff that are more court focused, and believe this will increase the AOC's overall effectiveness in providing service to the courts. Court-related class offerings in 2012 were increased by 162%. CJER has accomplished this, in part, by making available to AOC staff broadcast programs and online classes originally developed and produced for court personnel. This leveraging of court related education enables CJER to devote the majority of its resources to developing education for the trial and appellate courts while still providing relevant education to AOC employees. In addition, some AOC Education courses are offered jointly to both AOC and trial and appellate court personnel.

Review of the Content of Current Training Offered to AOC Employees

At the end of 2011, CJER led a review of the current compliance requirements for AOC employees. As part of this review, CJER held meetings with representatives from the Human Resources Services Office, Legal Services Office, Risk Management Unit, Office of Emergency Response and Security, and the Injury and Illness Prevention Plan (IIPP) Working Group. The IIPP Working Group is responsible for identifying specific training for each job classification category of AOC staff, based upon a safety assessment conducted for each employee. The resultant changes primarily affected safety-related requirements. In 2012, the number of non-safety compliance classes offered was reduced by 12% in response to a decreased need for new employee education.

Safety Training. As part of the AOC compliance requirement changes, job specific safety-training is now identified as part of the IIPP, the majority of which is provided via online education. As a result of these changes, the number of live safety-related class offerings was reduced by 69%. Seven new safety-related online courses provided by the AOC online vendor Syntrio were added in January 2012; this represents a 116% increase in the number of online safety-related training options. The Office of Education/CJER will continue to provide compliance classes and to partner with the IIPP Working Group to provide safety-related education.

Computer Training. In addition to changes in compliance education, CJER also reduced computer class offerings by 46% from 2011. At the end of this calendar year, CJER will review computer class attendance to determine the number of computer classes to be offered to AOC employees next year. Of those classes that were offered in 2012, seven sessions were offered to a combined audience of AOC and trial and appellate court employees. Combined audience classes offer a meaningful way for AOC and court employees to interact together. Further, offering classes to a combined audience allows the Education Division to focus more of its resources on developing education for the courts.

Court-Related Education: ICM Classes. Utilizing curriculum provided by the Institute for Court Management (ICM), CJER is able to efficiently develop education for AOC employees which focuses on the work of the courts. This national curriculum is owned by CJER, which enables CJER to create multiple separate courses, using the curriculum from each of the 2.5 day classes. These separate courses are developed with AOC staff in mind as the intended audience. Another advantage of these courses is that for some classes, court staff serves as faculty. The use of the ICM curriculum for this purpose began in 2010 and resulted in several classes for AOC employees. This effort has been accelerated this year. Courses now available for AOC staff and managers include the following:

- Court Community Communications: Purpose and Communication Fundamentals (new)
- Court Community Communications: Understandable Courts (new)
- Court Community Communications: The Media and Media Relations (new)
- Leadership: Be Credible in Action (new)
- Leadership: Create Focus through Vision (new)
- Leadership: Purposeful Planning; and Manage Interdependencies - Work Beyond Boundaries (new)
- Courts-Introduction to CourTools
- Courts-Purposes and Responsibilities
- Introduction to Project Management
- Visioning and Strategic Planning: Strategic Thinking
- Visioning and Strategic Planning: Organizational Foundations
- Visioning and Strategic Planning: Change & Alignment

Court-Related Education: Online Course. In addition, working with subject matter experts from the AOC and the courts, CJER developed an online course for AOC employees called “The Work of the Courts.” This class provides a general overview of court work and processes and is currently under final review by trial court employee subject matter experts. Court-related class offerings for AOC employees increased by 162% in 2012.

Training Offered to AOC Managers and Supervisors

CJER continues to leverage existing resources to support and develop manager and supervisor education at the AOC. In addition to the training and resources already available to managers and supervisors at the Administrative Office of the Courts, there were several new initiatives during the past year.

Management Training: Achieve Global Courses. During the 2012 – 2013 education period, CJER will provide courses for managers and supervisors using curriculum purchased from Achieve Global (a world-renowned international provider of leadership training programs) in 2004. AOC Office of Education/CJER employee, Rhonda Sharbono, completed the Achieve Global faculty training to enable the AOC to utilize this previously purchased curriculum. Utilizing the Achieve Global courses will allow the AOC to provide education for up to 80 managers and supervisors with no additional financial investment, in four areas:

- Successful Delegation
- Strategies to Help You Build a Unified Team
- Tools to Lead Your Team through Change
- The Principles and Qualities of Genuine Leadership

Management Training: Leveraging Court Programs. A key area of focus for AOC management training is the development of courses that address knowledge, skills, and abilities to effectively manage staff performance through increased communication, clear performance expectations, and achievement of goals. CJER, Legal Services Office, and Human Resources Services Office began the process of identifying broad objectives and desired results for AOC management training. This involved leveraging content and objectives already developed as part of CORE 40 Supervisor Training for trial and appellate court supervisors and managers. Additionally, content from other programs including court management programs will be reviewed for inclusion in the overall course offerings. Multiple separate courses will be provided starting in January 2013 with subsequent courses being offered every other month. The initial vision is to offer these courses in a live, face-to-face environment, with videoconference capabilities for AOC staff in regional offices.

Management Training: Online Training. An online orientation course (series) for new supervisors, highlighting essential AOC policies, is being discussed as part of the training described in the previous section. Workgroups comprising AOC subject matter experts will begin the design and development of the new courses under the combined direction of CJER, HR, and the Legal Services Office, with some subject matter experts also serving as faculty.

The Means by Which Training is Delivered

CJER strives to hold AOC Education classes in the most cost-effective way. For some classes, such as AOC Preventing and Responding to Sexual Harassment for supervisors and managers, the AOC has subject matter experts in San Francisco, Sacramento and Burbank who are able to serve as faculty which minimizes travel. Videoconference technology is utilized at both the Sacramento and Burbank locations, with an emphasis on the Burbank location. This allows the relatively small number of AOC employees in Burbank to participate in classes without traveling; this also allows CJER to maximize the number of class attendees while efficiently utilizing faculty time.

Computer classes are currently offered only in San Francisco and Sacramento; however, this year CJER piloted computer training via WebEx to the trial courts. On July 23, a webinar was provided for trial court employees in Contra Costa on the topic of Word Report Features. Employees in Alpine County have also requested computer training, and a pilot webinar training for Microsoft Excel is currently being planned for early 2013.

Online education is also a significant resource for AOC employees. CJER provides online education for AOC employees through a variety of sources, including utilization of an online course vendor (Syntrio), development of online classes specifically for AOC employees (The Work of the Courts), and utilizing online classes developed by CJER for trial and appellate court employees.

Training Related to Increased Understanding of Court Functions

In addition to increased classes available to AOC staff resulting from the use of the ICM curriculum as previously described in this report, CJER began other ways to implement the recommendation that AOC staff receive greater orientation and development of understanding of court functions. Without the advantage of increased staff or resources, AOC Education staff was best able to accomplish this by leveraging existing education developed for court staff.

Court-Related Education: Leveraging Court Staff Education. In addition to live classes, this year CJER began to provide select broadcasts and online classes designed for the trial and appellate courts to AOC employees. These broadcasts and classes provide AOC employees with additional orientation to the courts. By utilizing existing education designed for court employees, CJER can devote the majority of its resources to developing education for the trial and appellate courts while still providing relevant education to AOC employees. The following broadcasts and online classes are available to AOC employees via the AOC's Human Resources Employee Management System (HREMS):

- Appeals 101
- Appellate Court Records and Files
- Domestic Violence
- Everyday Court Practices: Exhibits
- Everyday Court Practices: Felony Minute Orders
- Everyday Court Practices: File Stamping
- Exploring the Code of Ethics
- Family Adoption of Minors
- How is a California Rule of Court Created?
- ICWA 101: Fundamentals of the Indian Child Welfare Act
- Juvenile Procedures: Confidentiality and Sealed Records
- A Practical Look at Probate Court Investigator Responsibilities
- New Court Investigator Responsibilities for Conservatorships
- Probate, Conservatorship, and Guardianship Video—A Look at Elder Abuse from the Perspective of Law Enforcement
- Probate Fundamentals
- Protective Orders: The Basics
- Traffic Counter Fundamentals
- Unlawful Detainers—the Basics

In addition to broadcast programs, several online courses designed for trial court employees are also available to AOC employees:

- The Courtroom Clerk in the Felony Courtroom (2 hrs)
- Handling Fee Waiver Applications (1.5 hrs)
- Introduction to Family Procedure (4 hrs)
- Requests for Domestic Violence Restraining Orders (2.5 hrs)

This cost-effective approach allows the Education Division to significantly increase the amount of court-related education provided to AOC employees while continuing to focus resources on developing and delivering education for the trial and appellate courts.

Executive Summary

Rule 10.491 of the California Rules of Court addresses minimum education requirements for Administrative Office of the Courts (AOC) executives, managers, supervisors, and other employees. The Rules and Projects Committee (RUPRO) recommends amending rule 10.491 regarding AOC staff education to give the Administrative Director of the Courts greater discretion and flexibility in using the AOC workforce.

Recommendation

The Rules and Projects Committee recommends that the Judicial Council amend rule 10.491, effective July 1, 2013, to allow the Administrative Director of the Courts to:

1. Grant a one-year extension of time for AOC staff to complete the required education, and
2. Determine the number of hours, if any, of live, face-to-face education required to meet the continuing education requirement.

The text of the amended rule is attached at pages 6–7.

Previous Council Action

Effective January 1, 2008, the Judicial Council adopted rule 10.491 as part of a comprehensive set of rules addressing judicial branch education. Subdivision (c) of the rule was amended, effective January 1, 2012, to provide more individual choice and flexibility in what and how many hours count toward the continuing education hours requirement. The amendments provide that an individual must complete at least half of his or her education requirement as a participant in traditional (live, face-to-face) education. In addition, the amendments removed limitations on online course work, self-directed study, and faculty service by counting all education hours in the same way.

Rationale for Recommendation

On May 25, 2012, the Strategic Evaluation Committee (SEC) issued its report on the Administrative Office of the Courts. Among the recommendations to the Judicial Council was the following recommendation concerning AOC and trial court education requirements:

Recommendation No. 7-23: As to training currently required of AOC staff and court personnel, the Judicial Council should examine and consider a relaxation of current mandatory requirements to allow the Administrative Director of the AOC and/or court executive officers greater discretion and flexibility in utilizing their workforces during times of budget constraints.

The council's Executive and Planning Committee (E&P) evaluated and prioritized each recommendation in the SEC report and presented them to the council on August 31, 2012. As to recommendation No. 7-23, E&P proposed and the council adopted the following:

Directive #79: E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Rules and Projects Committee to evaluate relaxation of mandatory education requirements to allow the Administrative Director of the Courts and Court Executive Officers greater discretion and flexibility in utilizing their workforces during times of budget constraints.

In response, RUPRO considered Directive #79; recommendations from Administer Director of the Courts Steven Jahr; the rules that apply to education for AOC staff, trial court staff, appellate court staff, and clerk/administrators of the appellate courts; and the compliance periods for each category of employees. In its deliberations, RUPRO recognized the importance of judicial branch education and did not consider recommending that the education requirements be eliminated. Because of the impending end of the compliance period for AOC staff education on December 31, 2013, RUPRO decided to address immediately the rule pertaining to AOC staff education.

RUPRO recommends amending rule 10.491, effective July 1, 2013, to give the Administrative Director of the Courts greater discretion and flexibility in using the AOC workforce. Specifically, RUPRO recommends that the rule be amended to provide the Administrative Director with discretion to grant a one-year, rather than six-month, extension of time to complete required education. (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 10.491(d).) The rule would provide that the next compliance period begins after the extended compliance period ends, unless the Administrative Director determines otherwise.<sup>1</sup> This would allow the Administrative Director to grant an extension to all AOC employees and extend the compliance period one year, if deemed necessary. But it also would maintain the authority of the Administrative Director to grant individual extensions based on specific needs, such as for an employee in a unit that is particularly short-staffed or an employee who experienced a prolonged illness, without extending the compliance period.

In addition, RUPRO recommends amending subdivision (c) to allow the Administrative Director the discretion to determine the number of hours, if any, of traditional (live, face-to-face) education required to meet the continuing education requirement. Because some education requirements are mandated by statute, an advisory committee comment would be added to the rule to provide that “[t]he time frame for completion of compliance courses based on statutory or regulatory mandates is unaffected by the one-year extension in (d)(1).”

RUPRO considered the education requirements for trial court staff stated in rules 10.474 and 10.478. Because the end of the compliance period for trial court staff education is December 31, 2014—more than a year away—and to determine trial court needs for staff education, RUPRO decided to solicit information from presiding judges and court executive officers in all superior courts. RUPRO has begun to do so through a letter from Justice Harry E. Hull, Jr., chair, asking courts’ views on relaxing the mandatory education requirements for trial court staff to allow court executive officers greater discretion and flexibility in use of their workforces. In addition, Justice Hull and Justice Robert L. Dondero, chair of the Center for Judicial Education and Research (CJER) Governing Committee, will attend the statewide joint meeting of trial court presiding judges and court executive officers on August 29 to continue this dialog.

Though Directive #79 does not address appellate court staff education, RUPRO recognized that appellate courts may have the same need for a relaxation of education requirements. Because the appellate court staff education compliance period ends December 31, 2013, Justice Hull attended a recent meeting of the Administrative Presiding Justices Advisory Committee to solicit members’ views. Administrative presiding justices saw no need to amend the rules to provide an extension of time for appellate court staff or to relax the requirement for face-to-face education.

<sup>1</sup> The current rule provides that an extension of time to complete the hours-based requirement does not affect the timing of the next two-year period.

Comments, Alternatives Considered, and Policy Implications

This proposal did not circulate for public comment. Under rule 10.22, a proposal need not be circulated for public comment if it presents a nonsubstantive technical change or correction or a minor substantive change that is unlikely to create controversy, or RUPRO finds that compelling circumstances require a different procedure. The compelling circumstances exception provides as follows:

The procedures established in this rule must be followed unless the Rules and Projects Committee finds that compelling circumstances necessitate a different procedure. The committee's finding and a summary of the procedure used must be presented to the council with any recommendation to the council made under this subdivision.

(Cal. Rules of Court, rule 10.22(g).)

The existing two-year compliance period provided in rule 10.491 for AOC staff is currently nearly three-quarters completed. The number of AOC staff has been reduced since early 2012, when the current compliance period began, and the number of education courses offered has similarly been reduced. There is thus an urgent need to provide the Administrative Director with the discretion to relax the mandatory education requirements to allow staff to obtain the required education over a longer period of time (three years rather than two) and through delivery methods such as online courses that allow employees to select the course times that work best for them.

Circulating this proposal would delay the effective date beyond July 1, 2013 would reduce the number of staff benefitting from an extended compliance period. If fewer staff benefit from the extended compliance period and elimination of the rule requirement for face-to-face education, the overall benefits of increasing staff availability to provide needed services to the courts will likewise be reduced.

Though RUPRO recognizes the benefits of circulating rule proposals for comment in ordinary times, the extraordinary times and circumstances now confronting the judicial branch and the particular subject of this proposal compel adoption of the proposal without circulation for comment. If approved by the council, the proposal will be circulated for comment after adoption.

RUPRO considered alternative rule amendments that would simply state that the compliance period ending December 31, 2013, is extended one year to December 31, 2014, or that would allow the Administrative Director to grant an extension of the continuing education hours requirements, but not all education requirements. RUPRO decided not to recommend these amendments and instead grant the Administrative Director as much flexibility as possible to relax education requirements as needed.

Implementation Requirements, Costs, and Operational Impacts

If the Administrative Director exercises the discretion provided to him to extend the time by which employees must complete their education requirements, there will be some minimal requirements and costs associated with tracking employee education. Similarly, the elimination of face-to-face education requirements will result in some minimal requirements and costs associated with tracking employee education. These costs, however, are anticipated to be offset by a reduction in the need to provide face-to-face education. In addition, the proposal is expected to have positive operational impacts by allowing AOC employees additional time to complete educational requirements and flexibility with respect to alternatives to live training, thereby increasing employee availability to provide needed services to the courts.

Council Directive 89

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts to consider SEC Recommendation 7-25 and implement the necessary organizational and staffing changes, contingent upon the council's approval of an organizational structure for the AOC.

SEC Recommendation 7-25

The functions performed by the Finance Division should be placed in the Judicial and Court Administrative Services Division. The Finance Division should be renamed the Fiscal Services Office, reporting to the Chief Administrative Officer. The Fiscal Services Office Manager position should be at the Senior Manager level.

This directive is now considered complete as follows:

Effective October 1, 2012, the reporting structure of Finance was changed as part of a new organizational structure that was approved by the Judicial Council. This new structure reduced the JCC Executive Team to four positions (Administrative Director, Chief of Staff, Chief Operating Officer, and Chief Administrative Officer) and realigned and renamed existing divisions into offices housed under one of three newly created divisions (Judicial Council and Court Leadership Services Division, Judicial and Court Operations Services Division, and Judicial and Court Administrative Services Division). As part of the new structure, Finance was moved under the Administrative Division, under the leadership of the Chief Administrative Officer consistent with the directive.

Additionally, on August 21, 2015 the JCC completed its Classification and Compensation Study that resulted in the implementation of a new salary structure for the organization. The compensation phase of the project followed the classification portion of the study that began in December 2013 and ended in March of 2015, when JCC staff received their new classification specifications. All positions in the JCC were evaluated, and JCC employees were subsequently assigned a classification and provided with information as to whether their salary fell within, above, or below the new salary ranges employee classifications.

The results of the classification study validated that the duties of the Director of Finance were appropriate for the "Director" classification specification.

At the time of the initial SEC review in 2012 there were 190 managers and supervisors in the Judicial Council. As a result of reorganization and restructuring efforts, as of September 1, 2015, the number of managers and supervisors was reduced to 141, a reduction of 26%.

On August 21, 2015 the JCC completed a Classification and Compensation Study, completed by Fox Lawson, that resulted in the implementation of a new salary structure for the organization. The compensation phase of the project followed the classification portion of the study that began in December 2013 and ended in March of 2015, when JCC staff received their new classification specifications. As a result, the number of supervisory classifications were reduced from 32 to 19 and manager classifications were reduced from 16 to 11, combining similar duties into broader defined classifications.

Human Resources, is tasked with reviewing and monitoring the allocations into the supervisor and manager classification to ensure that the duties meet the criteria out lined in the new classifications. Additionally, through the personnel action request (PAR) process, Human Resources will determine the appropriate classification, which will aid in assuring employees are appropriately classified within the new structure.

Information on Judicial Council Directives

Council Directive 91

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts to ensure through the budget and fiscal management measures implemented by the AOC that the AOC's Finance Division is involved in all phases of fiscal planning and budgeting, especially with regard to large-scale or branch-wide projects or initiatives.

SEC Recommendation 7-27

The AOC must improve its fiscal decision making processes. The AOC must make a commitment to involve the Fiscal Services Office in all phases of fiscal planning and budgeting, especially with regard to large-scale or branch-wide projects or initiatives.

Directives 7-13, 21, 40, 91, and 145 have been combined as part of a broader review and policy discussion relating to the development of a cost benefit analysis proposal for the Judicial Council.

Council staff developed guidelines and a process for branchwide projects and other significant initiatives to ensure a full and comprehensive cost-benefit analysis that includes the input and collaboration of all stakeholders, a complete analysis of scope, accurate cost estimates and funding streams and associated controls, documentation of the decision-making processes, and the full transparent consideration of fiscal, operational, and other impacts to the courts and stakeholders. This was developed in August 2013.

The proposed "Guidelines for the Administration of Branchwide Projects and Initiatives" include the "Request for Approval of Project Proposal" form. These guidelines require the full documented collaboration of all stakeholders impacted by a project or initiative. The Executive Office has the sole discretion for determining when to utilize the form for branchwide projects and initiatives.

These guidelines were presented to the Judicial Council at the December 13, 2013, council meeting.

The directive implementation will remain ongoing as this tool will be used as necessary whenever there are projects or initiatives that meet the requirements for use of this cost benefit analysis form.

ASSESSMENT OF IMPLEMENTATION

After the guidelines were developed, Court Operations Services contacted Finance because there was a similar process and form for seeking grant opportunities.

It was decided that the forms and guidelines should be merged to be applicable to both cost benefit analysis for major programs and initiatives as well as grant opportunities. The forms were merged for this purpose.

Finance reports that Information Technology also has a cost benefit analysis form that they utilize and that future activities will include working with IT to determine if this form should be merged with the existing guidelines and form.

Finance indicated that this process was designed for use of all branch funds and to-date, there have been no major initiatives and so the process has not been utilized. For other minor funding needs, the council staff has utilized the budget change proposal process. Additionally, it was clarified that although the formal cost benefit analysis is not currently utilized for Court of Appeal funding decisions, it was designed for use for all judicial branch entities.

A discussion was held by E&P where they asked questions about the threshold for when this tool should be utilized. It was explained by SEC members that this grew out of concerns about CCMS and that this would be utilized in those cases where a budget change proposal is not an option and there is the potential for the use of all branch funds.

3. Impact of Outsourcing on the Global Market:

- Cost Savings: Companies can reduce operational costs by outsourcing non-core functions.
- Access to Global Talent: Outsourcing allows companies to tap into a global pool of skilled labor.
- Increased Efficiency: Outsourcing providers often have specialized expertise and resources, leading to faster and more efficient service delivery.

4. Challenges of BPO:

- Quality Control: Ensuring consistent service quality across different locations and providers.
- Communication: Language barriers and cultural differences can impact communication.
- Integration: Integrating BPO services with existing internal systems and processes.
- Security: Protecting sensitive data and intellectual property when shared with external providers.

Conclusion:

Outsourcing is a strategic decision that can significantly impact a company's bottom line and operational efficiency. By carefully selecting providers and managing the relationship, companies can realize the benefits of outsourcing while mitigating the risks.

GUIDELINES FOR THE ADMINISTRATION OF BRANCHWIDE PROJECTS AND INITIATIVES

Overview

The following guidelines have been established to assist with the preparation of formal project proposals. They seek to implement a comprehensive process of programmatic and fiscal analysis that ensures all costs and benefits are considered before a decision is made regarding whether to proceed with a proposal within the Judicial Branch.

Process

1. Identify Issue or Concept
  - Offices/divisions identify issue or concept (e.g., initiating new programs, expanding existing programs, creation of new requirements on branch entities, requesting federal or state grants, etc.)
  - Director holds preliminary discussions with Chief
  - Chief and director present the issue to the Executive Office as an informal concept
  - Executive Office determines depth of analysis required
2. Prepare Request for Approval of Project Proposal (RAPP) Form
  - Office assigned to complete proposal review form
    - a. The RAPP establishes the business case for investment of branch resources in the project by setting out the reasons for undertaking the project and analyzing its costs and benefits.
    - b. The RAPP, prepared in accordance with these guidelines, must be approved for every project prior to the encumbrance or expenditure of funds on the project, including use of staff resources.
  - Components of the RAPP Form
    - a. Requesting Office or Division
    - b. Date Prepared
    - c. Contact Information
    - d. Project Title
    - e. Summary
    - f. Summarized Estimated Costs
    - g. Proposal Review Routing
    - h. Associated JC Strategic Goal, if applicable
    - i. Project Scope

- j. Stakeholders
  - k. Impact Analysis
  - l. Documentation of Decision-Making Process
  - m. Cost Considerations
  - n. Authorization to Proceed (Director or Designee)
3. The RAPP form should be forwarded to the appropriate Chief for review and approval only after all issues raised by internal review have been resolved.
  4. Briefing of Executive Office by Chief/Director
    - a. Consider routing to appropriate JC committee or JC
    - b. Consider discussion with Chief Justice
    - c. Consider discussions with external stakeholders such as the courts or State Bar
  5. Training and Preparation
    - The Fiscal Services Office will conduct training for staff involved in the completion of the RAPP form, with an emphasis on the Cost Considerations section, upon request.
    - Participation in the web-based training titled Analytical Thinking for Analysts available through the California Department of Human Resources is encouraged: <http://www.calhr.ca.gov/Training/Pages/index-analytical-thinking-for-analysts.aspx>.

Questions

Questions regarding these guidelines or the RAPP form can be directed to Bob Fleshman at (415) 865-7531 or bob.fleshman@jud.ca.gov.

Executive Summary

The AOC's Chief Administrative Officer and director of the Fiscal Services Offices present this informational report on efforts relating to the various common aspects of Judicial Council Directives 7-13, 21, 40, 91, and 145 (directives), which were combined as part of a broader review and policy discussion pertaining to the application of a cost-benefit/business case analysis for AOC projects.

Background

The Judicial Council approved the directives as recommended by the Strategic Evaluation Committee (SEC) pertaining to the way in which the Administrative Office of the Courts (AOC) undertakes significant projects and branchwide initiatives. In their report, the SEC observed the following:

“The AOC has failed to plan, manage, and monitor programs in a manner that seeks critical collaboration and input from the courts. The AOC has undertaken significant and far-reaching programs over the past decade, including CCMS, branch-wide financial systems, court construction and facilities management, and others. The organization has failed to adequately consider fiscal, operational, and other impacts of its programs and projects on the courts. Projects have been undertaken without first conducting an appropriate business case analysis to determine whether they are prudent.”

As noted, the SEC opined that there appeared to be a lack of uniform internal processes, insufficient collaboration, and inadequate analysis associated with large scale endeavors. More specifically, nearly all of the aforementioned directives relate to observations made by the SEC relative to the California Court Case Management System initiative:

“The AOC’s process of planning and monitoring programs and projects has been lacking. These deficiencies are best exemplified by the CCMS project with its lack of budgetary planning, failure of budgetary controls, failure to identify a sustaining revenue source, lack of an initial business case analysis and feasibility study, lack of sufficient court commitment, and failure to openly disclose pertinent information about the project.”

To address these deficiencies, the SEC detailed a recommended approach:

“... The AOC Executive Leadership Team must begin to implement a formalized system of program and project planning and monitoring that includes, at a minimum: a collaborative planning process that utilizes a business case analysis and that includes an analysis of impacts on courts at the outset of all projects; use of workload analyses where appropriate; and development of general performance metrics for key AOC programs that allow expected performance levels to be set and evaluated.”

In developing a response to the directives, AOC staff consulted with other state entities—such as the Department of Finance and CalHR—on their respective processes in an effort to establish a similar approach at the AOC that incorporates an appropriate level of review and cost-benefit analysis for programs and projects initiated by the agency. As one example, staff utilized the state Department of Finance’s Budget Analyst Guide as an initial framework. Specific guide sections, such as Types of Analysis (Attachment A) and Analysis of Issues (Attachment B), were also identified as potential training tools for AOC staff to demonstrate the basic elements of how appropriate fiscal and programmatic analyses are completed. Since the material is general in nature, each office and division would, in theory, be able to use these resources to meet the individual needs of the program, whether it be completing a grant request for federal funds or a budget change proposal, to name a few.

Following the review of external and existing internal processes, AOC staff developed guidelines that seek to ensure that all elements within each of these 10 directives are adequately addressed. These guidelines include a process for the approval of branchwide projects and other significant initiatives, as well as an approach to conduct any necessary cost-benefit analysis. These elements include:

- The input and collaboration of all stakeholders;
- A complete analysis of scope;

- The development of accurate cost estimates and the identification of funding in constant collaboration with the Fiscal Services Office;
- The application of cost and contract controls including monitoring;
- Full documentation of the decision-making processes; and
- Full transparent consideration of fiscal, operational, and other impacts to the courts and stakeholders.

The "Guidelines for the Administration of Branchwide Projects and Initiatives" (Attachment C) have been reviewed and approved by the Administrative Director of the Courts and will be implemented agency-wide, effective the first quarter of 2014. Leading up to the implementation date, the Fiscal Services Office will work with staff from the AOC Center for Judiciary Education and Research to develop an appropriate training curriculum for management team members, budget liaisons, and other applicable staff.

These guidelines address the SEC's recommendation that a cost-benefit analysis should be infused into the AOC's decision-making process and to serve as a guide when considering any new project or program, large scale or otherwise.

TYPES OF ANALYSIS

BCPs or other issues involving a proposed augmentation

1. Have the department or group proposing the augmentation clarify what the problem is. All too frequently problem statements are either missing, too brief or too general to be sufficiently clear and quantifiable, discuss symptoms rather than real problems, or are stated in terms of the solution (e.g., "the problem is we don't have the 14 additional staff we need"). The analyst's role is to find out if there is a public need which is not being addressed, i.e., what is the problem outside of building? Things like crime, pollution, and poverty are possibilities; the lack of staff, microcomputers, and travel funds are not. Moreover, the problem should be quantified as much as possible so that a quantifiable solution can be arrived at. This should address:
  - a. the extent of the problem
  - b. how this varies from a "normal" or acceptable situation
  - c. how many individuals are experiencing the problem
  - d. where this problem is located geographically
  - e. need statements should answer the question "why?"
2. Consider Alternatives for Solving the Problem. Most BCPs provide two: (1) do nothing and (2) accept our proposal. Do not be deterred by the apparent lack of creativity on the part of some. There is more than one way to solve a problem, especially in an era of constantly changing technology. You might consider:
  - a. automation
  - b. program restructuring
  - c. restructuring systems and procedures
  - d. consolidation of functions
3. The Key Element in a BCP (or other Proposal) is Data to justify the resource level being proposed. Most proposals request specific amounts of staff and funds. These requests should be supported by equally specific calculations. To the extent that specificity is lacking, the analyst may be required to fill in the gaps in order to develop a recommendation. Usually, this kind of analysis starts with a zero-augmentation assumption and builds in components as they are specifically justified on an individual basis.

Attachment A

For example, a particular solution may involve several different types of staff in field offices, headquarters management, and in the Administration Division, each developed on a different basis. In summary, in this type of situation we start with zero and add in resources as they are justified by specific calculations. As a general rule, if you cannot understand where the number comes from, do not add it in.

4. If they lowballed the bill analysis, they should live with it in the BCP.

Workload Issues

In past years, departments were usually funded for agreed to workload increases. More often than not, in recent years with severe budget restraints and no or insufficient funds available to meet mandatory requirements, workload often is not funded. Departments are required to redirect resources or find other alternatives. Despite that, workload analysis is an important Finance activity.

1. The key variables in workload issues are:
  - a. the volume of work to be accomplished, generally referred to as workload
  - b. the current staffing level
  - c. the workload completed with current staff
2. The ratio of workload being currently completed to current staff will usually provide a good estimate of the productivity rate. The ratio of the workload to be accomplished to the productivity rate is the number of staff required to complete that workload. Example—CAL/OSHA elevator inspectors will inspect about 27,500 elevators this year for safety requirements. Next year the number will increase to 28,500. Currently there are 40 inspectors. How many are needed for next year?

|        |               |   |       |                           |
|--------|---------------|---|-------|---------------------------|
| Answer | 27,500 | = | 687.5 | (Number of elevators      |
|        |               |   | 40    | (1 inspector can inspect) |

$$\frac{28,500}{687.5} = 41.5 \quad \begin{array}{l} \text{(Number of} \\ \text{inspectors)} \\ \text{(needed )} \end{array}$$

Therefore, 1.5 additional inspectors would be justified on a workload basis. Further, there is one clerical staff for every 4 inspectors in the program, so the addition of 1.5 inspectors would justify  $1.5 \times .25$  or 0.4 of a clerical position, for a total of 1.9 PYs.

3. Sometimes it is necessary to pursue additional justification for the volume of workload projected, depending on historical patterns. Also there may be ways to increase current productivity rates without adding staff by changing procedures or by automating certain functions. The workload calculations should be performed only after the analyst is satisfied with the data that goes into those calculations.
4. Never accept a duty statement as workload justification. Anyone can fill up 40 hours per week with activities. This has no relationship to the external workload, how it is changing, and what staffing implications it has.
5. Workload may fluctuate throughout the year. Our policy is usually not to staff a unit for peak workload demands (with the possible exception of temporary help funds where warranted, such as the Franchise Tax Board), but rather to support staffing to process the average workload level.
6. Workload standards are useful if they have been validated and we have agreed to them. Departments should be encouraged to develop them. Even if this hasn't been done prior to writing the BCP, it may be possible to use time sheet and other activity data to put together some useful standards. But be careful, before proceeding, apply the workload standards to last year's work. Does the analysis show it would require 20 PYs to do the work that you know they did with 10 PYs?
7. Be careful of backlog statistics. There is a difference between backlog and a working inventory. A backlog measurement should exclude:
  - a. workload which is currently being processed

Attachment A

- b. workload which can be processed in a reasonable or statutorily required length of time
- c. workload which has been set aside because it is incomplete, waiting for additional information, or otherwise cannot be processed.

ANALYSIS: Principles and Practices for DOF Analysts

A. What is Analysis?

Analysis is the process by which issues are separated into their component parts and each part and the interaction among the parts are systematically investigated. Later the components of an issue are put back together in a logical way to support a conclusion and recommendation.

You can also think of analysis as the process by which we attempt to answer such questions as follows, regarding a proposal, activity, program or process.

- Who or what is affected?
- What is/are the effects?
- How and when does/will it operate?
- How much does/will it cost?
- Who is raising the issue or making the proposal, and why?
- How might the problem/issue be resolved?

And the final question upon completing an analysis should always be: "Does this make sense?"

B. Typical Types of Finance Analyses

Finance uses the analytic process to develop recommendations on budget proposals, legislation, and other initiatives and issues that may financially impact the State. Preparing solid recommendations is the foundation for our advisory role to the Governor's Office and our role in representing the Administration.

1. Fiscal - Finance's primary role is to provide analyses of fiscal issues or problems. To that end, we review budget change proposals, legislation, initiatives, regulations, and reports to analyze fiscal impacts. Fiscal analyses answer such questions as: How much will (or should) this proposal or program cost (or save) the State? How much revenue will it generate?
2. Policy – While not our main role, Finance staff may also perform policy analysis such as when reviewing legislative proposals. Policy analysis is intended to help decision-makers make choices about governmental programs and governmental regulation of individuals and organizations. Policy analysis focuses on such questions as: What is the likely impact of this policy on the public in general, and on specific groups or organizations? Policy analysis can be done from the perspective of known priorities and policies, or without such political preconditions.
3. Policy combined with fiscal—Most often Finance's analyses include a combination of fiscal and policy issues. For example, Finance analysts review a Budget Change Proposal to assess the reasonableness of the estimated fiscal impacts but also assess the proposed policy objective in relation to the Administration's priorities. The resulting recommendation thus may indicate that the proposed funding augmentation (or reduction) should be modified depending on whether the policy objective is deemed to be of high or low priority by the Administration. The recommendation may also suggest an option that provides a lower (or higher) level of attainment of the policy objective, including arguments supporting that level.

Sometimes the deadline for an analysis is so short that the analysis must be “quick and dirty” and largely based on assumptions since time is not available to gather more information. In these cases it is helpful if the assumptions can be based on historical information or on data from a similar program or activities. In other cases (such as when asked to prepare “Issue Memos”), Finance may have time to prepare a more expansive analysis.

For more details on some of the specific types of items analyzed at Finance, see Bill Analysis, and BCPs, Writing Effective.

C. Steps in Analysis

Academics identify various analytical approaches, which can generally be summarized into six basic steps. (See Analysis, Policy, and Problem Solving for a detailed summary of various analytical approaches.)

1. Define the Problem

- Clearly identify the stated issue/problem. Is there really a problem? Sift through extraneous material to identify the real, underlying problem or need (which may not be the same as the stated issue or problem).
- How big is the problem? Quantify, if possible.
- How did the problem arise? When? What perpetuates it? Outline the history of the issue/problem.
- Who and/or what does the problem impact? When? What are the current laws, regulations and/or programs addressing the problem?

2. Gather Information

- Consider: What do you need to know to define and analyze the issue/problem, and to recommend a solution? How much time do you have?
- Ask questions (repeatedly if necessary) to get the information needed. Also be conscious of and respect others' time and workload constraints, however.
- Be skeptical. Challenge the sources; don't assume the information is correct. Try to verify it or test it against other information to determine its accuracy or reasonableness.
- Think through varied viewpoints on the issue (not just the Administration's current perspective). Talk to both proponents and opponents to gain additional political and programmatic insights.
- Ask follow up questions.
- If you cannot get the information you want in the time (or from the sources) available, can you make assumptions to work around it or develop rough estimates? Document the basis for your assumptions.
- Look at other previous analyses/studies of the issue.
- Note that if the time is late (after 5 p.m.) or short (“quick and dirty” analyses) you still may be able to contact the Legislative Analysts' staff, legislative committee staff, (or for bills, the author's or sponsor's office, too) for some information, even if the department staff are not available.

3. Consider Alternatives

- What are all the feasible options? Consider for example, taking no action; altering an existing law, regulation, process, or program; creating a new law or program, etc.

- What can government do (e.g., mandate, regulate, subsidize, create incentives, tax, provide information, privatize), and what might be effective in this situation?
- What other programs (public or private) or laws (state or federal) address this problem?
- What have other states done to address this problem?
- What has Finance recommended on this type of issue in the past?
- Should the State be involved at all?

4. Determine Criteria for Evaluating Alternatives

Examples of criteria:

- Efficiency - Cost-benefit, cost effectiveness, productivity
- Equity - Is it fair? Who gains, who loses? By how much?
- Effectiveness - Will it solve the problem? How much will it solve?
- Feasibility - Legal, administrative, political (e.g., the current political environment)
- Uncertainty and risk - What could go wrong? How costly? How likely?
- Priority for funding given current state fiscal constraints and Administration policies
- Consistency with Administration goals and policies and expectations

5. Evaluate Alternatives

- Measure each alternative against the criteria.
- Weigh the trade-offs (e.g., better service vs. higher cost; lower cost vs. higher risk)

6. Make Recommendation

- Pull the information together to form conclusions, and then make recommendations.
- Be creative. Policy analysis affords opportunities to develop creative compromises and unique solutions to address problems. Although Finance is not a "think tank," we can occasionally be the source of new policy ideas.
- Anticipate the Administration. Try to recommend at least one option likely to be preferred by the Administration (based on what you know of the current policies and priorities).
- Recommend more than one feasible alternative for the decision-makers to consider (e.g., in times of limited funds recommend the preferred activity and funding level, and some feasible lower level).
- Review your analysis and ask if it all "makes sense." Can a reader follow the logic from the problem identification through the alternatives to the recommendation?
- Check to see how critical any information (both included and omitted) is to the recommendation.
- Critique and supplement (or pare down) the information as needed.

D. Communicating Your Analysis

To be effective, an analysis must be clearly communicated to the decision-makers and other interested parties.

1. Types of Presentations

- Oral presentations in meetings
- Budget change proposal (BCP) write-ups
- Bill analyses
- Legislative testimony

Attachment B

- Press packets or contacts
- Governor's Budget Summary ("A-pages") and other public reports
- Issue Memos
- One-on-one discussion/negotiation with LAO and departmental staff

2. Presentation Style

- Narrow focus. Finance does not typically produce lengthy study reports that thoroughly analyze all aspects of major policy issues. Finance's analyses tend to focus in on the fiscal impacts to state government and, in particular, to the General Fund.
- Related to specific decisions. Our analyses tend to focus on information needed to make a specific decision, and normally will recommend a specific action on an issue.
- Brief and clear. Finance does not get much time to speak its piece; often one or two lead sentences have to carry the presentation.
- Unbiased/nonpartisan, but politically informed. Although we work for the Governor and do analysis in the context of known Administration policy and perspective, Finance staff should be prepared to argue all sides of an issue (e.g., in Administration decision-making meetings). Recommendations on issues should reflect a balance between what might be acceptable to the Administration, and other considerations, including other viewpoints relevant to a decision. (Finance staff should not expect to promote personal political views, however.)
- Original and active. Use active (not passive) voice as much as possible, and state your thoughts without plagiarizing others' analyses (e.g., departments' analyses or documents).
- Professional. Both oral and written presentations should be made keeping in mind our professional staff role.

3. Traditional Biases of Finance

- Low cost/high benefit
- Proven effectiveness
- High priority
- Fundable by redirection of existing resources
- Consistent with Administration goals

4. Other Considerations

- Preparation. Finance staff are some of the main spokespersons for the Administration, and as such are expected to be able to explain and defend the Administration's position (e.g., on budget proposals) before the Legislature and in answering press calls. Be sure your analysis is adequate to support and defend the recommendations.
- Audience. Be aware of who reads and/or needs the information, and focus the presentation to address their level(s) of knowledge. Give adequate information to understand the issue and recommendation.
- Timing. Be sensitive to whether a decision maker can be receptive to a proposed policy and whether the issue's time has come. Often we are not the best organization to raise an issue; it may be better raised by agency/department staff or others with policy-making authority.

- Respect for hierarchies. Finance staff should understand and respect the hierarchy of Finance and of other departments and agencies we work with. It is important to differentiate the positions that may be taken by various levels in a department and the degree to which top management has (or has not) approved a particular position.
- Flexibility. The Administration may decide on a different option that you recommend. Be ready and willing to revise your analysis to further detail the selected option, and/or reframe the issue, if necessary.
- Disassociation. Although it can be hard to do, Finance staff should not let themselves get too personally committed to policy recommendations they make or view nonacceptance as a "personal defeat."

E. Developing Policy Analysis Skills/Knowledge

The foundation for any analysis is a thorough working knowledge of your program/subject areas; the issues; and State processes, priorities, and fiscal constraints. The following are some tips on the sources and types of information you should gather (an ongoing process), and how to manage your time to complete analyses.

1. Sources of Information.

Following are some suggested sources and methods for developing your policy understanding and analytical skills. You will be engaged in many of these activities in the course of your work, but take advantage of slow moments for further research and discussion of policy issues in your area.

- Read texts, articles, books, and analyses done by others (e.g., scholars, advocates, the Legislative Analyst, Bureau of State Audits)
- Learn the history (e.g., talk to or review written work of your predecessors on the assignment)
- Listen to others who already know the programs and issues well (e.g., talk with department staff when reviewing various documents)
- Discuss issues with advocates and constituents
- Take field trips to visit program staff and projects in the field
- Learn by doing (jump into your assignment!)

2. Areas of Knowledge

- a. Program Knowledge. The foundation for any analysis is a thorough working knowledge of the program being addressed. No analytical technique can replace basic information about how the program works. Such knowledge typically includes: the program's purpose, who and how many it serves, what it provides, how services are delivered, the current costs, criteria for expending the funds, how the program evolved (e.g., what were key decision points in program's history), and the trends in terms of revenues, expenditures, staffing, and workload data.
- b. Knowledge of the State's current fiscal situation and constitutional constraints. Less than ten percent of the budget is discretionary. Some of the key factors limiting State expenditures are: the State Appropriations Limit (SAL), Proposition 98, other Constitutional requirements, entitlement programs, statutory COLAs, and legal obligations. Other constraints not set in the Constitution or statute but which are as, or nearly as, restraining, include: General Fund revenues, General Fund reserves, federal budget actions directly affecting the State's budget, tax expenditures, public safety expenditures, revenue-producing activities, and budget agreements.

In analyzing budget issues, it is important to keep these factors in mind and know where we are relative to the major constraints. This will tell you whether we have some flexibility and can entertain discretionary proposals, or whether we're going to have to recommend reductions.

- c. Knowledge of other Administration and Department of Finance Priorities. Current State policies and priorities (such as those outlined in the Governor's Budget Summary or Budget Highlights, or the State of the State Address) need to be taken into account when analyzing an issue. Examples of recent State priorities include: (1) reducing personnel years (PYs); (2) reducing General Fund expenditures; (3) attempting to help the federal government reduce the federal deficit; (4) reforming welfare; and (5) making the State more competitive. Awareness of these policies helps analysts to frame questions and recommendations.
- d. Knowledge of the Issue. Besides general program knowledge, specific information about the issue being addressed is important to understanding proposed changes. For example, analysts may prepare by researching the history of issues in their program area, why the issues are (re)emerging, views of proponents and opponents, and what this and other states are doing to address the issues.

3. Managing Your Analytical Time and Effort

- Get started early. Size things up. Decide when you need to start each task in order to meet your deadline. Set a mental schedule (allowing for slippage).

Tell the department what information you need right away. Put requests in writing (e.g., by email) when possible to confirm conversations and avoid misunderstandings later. Set a deadline for receipt of this information which is early enough so that you can ask for clarification, or request other information if this raises additional questions.

- Follow up. Think about the information as it's being presented to you. Is it filling in the gaps? What gaps remain? Take the initiative to ask follow-up questions and probe when talking to department staff. It is relatively rare that your first set of questions will elicit all of the information necessary for an analysis. Keep thinking of what you need to resolve the issue.
- Stay on Course. Don't lose sight of your objective and deadline, or get sidetracked. Make sure you understand what's central to the issue, and that you're getting the information you need from department staff (i.e., what's relevant, not what's easy for them to give you). Periodically, review where you are relative to your objectives and schedule. Make mid-course corrections as necessary. Raise problems to a higher level in DOF or the line department, as appropriate.
- Stop when you have what you need or you have all you can get in the time available. In the latter case, qualify your analysis by indicating the conclusions are based on the limited information available and noting any assumptions made.

- Get feedback. Brainstorm ideas with your supervisor and peers. Discuss your findings and conclusions with your managers and with the department. Run drafts of your analysis and recommendations by your managers in advance of the deadline to get their input early.
- Critique your own work. Check and double check your calculations. Review your analysis to see if there are further logical gaps that need to be filled in. See if your factual information is correct, and if your argument holds up to criticism. Revise your analysis if necessary.
- Keep records. Keep your notes, supporting data obtained, and calculations made in a file for reference. (You'd be surprised how quickly people forget how they arrived at certain numbers!)
- Be sensitive to other workload demands on staff with whom you are working. You will likely need their assistance and cooperation in the future. Nevertheless, if they won't give you the information for any of the following reasons:
  - Because they've been appointed by the Governor
  - They told the last analyst they had
  - The last analyst they had didn't ask for this type of information
  - It's not Finance's role
  - They wouldn't ask for funding if they didn't need it
  - They're stalling
  - The Governor wants this done
  - You don't have the professional qualifications
  - The Director already agreed to this you'll have to recommend disapproval of their request for lack of justification. Tell your supervisor of the situation and discuss how to resolve it.

Policy Statement:

Unless contrary direction is provided by the Judicial Council, the initiation of branchwide projects and other significant initiatives shall be preceded by a full and comprehensive cost-benefit analysis that includes the input and collaboration of all stakeholders, a complete analysis of scope, accurate cost estimates and funding streams and associated controls, documentation of the decision-making processes, and the full transparent consideration of fiscal, operational, and other impacts to the courts and stakeholders.

Overview:

The following guidelines have been established to assist with the preparation of formal project proposals. They seek to implement a comprehensive process of programmatic and fiscal analysis that ensures all costs and benefits are considered before a decision is made regarding whether to proceed with a proposal within the Judicial Branch.

Process:

1. Issue or Concept Identification:
  - Offices/divisions identify issue or concept (e.g., initiating new programs, expanding existing programs, creation of new requirements on branch entities, requesting federal or state grants, etc.)
  - Office Director holds preliminary discussions with Division Chief
  - Division Chief and Office Director present the issue to the Executive Office as an informal concept
  - Executive Office determines depth of analysis required and assigns the issue or concept to the appropriate Office/Division for further evaluation.
  - Executive Office determines if consultation with Judicial Council or the Executive and Planning Committee is necessary based on factors such as funding needs, scope of effort, and policy issues.

2. Preparation of Request for Approval of Project Proposal (RAPP) Form
  - The RAPP, prepared in accordance with these guidelines, must be approved for every project prior to the encumbrance or expenditure of funds on the project, including use of staff resources on implementing the project.
  - The RAPP establishes the business case for investment of branch resources in the project by setting out the reasons for undertaking the project and analyzing its costs and benefits, absent contrary direction from the Judicial Council.

- The Fiscal Services Office will conduct training for staff involved in the completion of the RAPP form, with an emphasis on the Cost Considerations section, upon request.
  - Participation in the web-based training titled Analytical Thinking for Analysts available through the California Department of Human Resources is encouraged: <http://www.calhr.ca.gov/Training/Pages/index-analytical-thinking-for-analysts.aspx>
- Components of the RAPP Form
    - a. Requesting Office or Division
    - b. Date Prepared
    - c. Contact Information
    - d. Project Title
    - e. Summary
    - f. Summarized Estimated Costs
    - g. Proposal Review Routing
    - h. Associated JC Strategic Goal, if applicable
    - i. Project Scope
    - j. Stakeholders
    - k. Impact Analysis
    - l. Documentation of Decision-Making Process
    - m. Cost Considerations
    - n. Authorization to Proceed (Office Director or Designee)
3. The RAPP form should be forwarded to the appropriate Division Chief for review and approval only after all issues raised by internal review have been addressed.
  4. Briefing of Executive Office by Division Chief/Office Director
    - Consider routing to appropriate Judicial Council committee (such as the Executive and Planning Committee) or Judicial Council
    - Consider discussion with Chief Justice
    - Consider discussions with external stakeholders such as the courts or State Bar
  5. Executive Office Action

Information on Judicial Council Directives

Council Directive 92

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts to report back on the budget and fiscal management measures implemented by the AOC to ensure that the AOC’s fiscal and budget processes are more transparent.

SEC Recommendation 7-28

The budgeting process must become more transparent. Budget information must be readily available to the public, including online. Budget documents must provide understandable explanations and detail concerning revenue sources, fund transfers, and expenditures.

Budget information is readily available to the public via the court website which includes the link to the Department of Finance (DOF) ebudget website (www.ebudget.ca.gov/). The branch's fiscal information is displayed here as part of the Governor's budget package, including three year expenditures and position detail, fund condition statements, and fund transfer information. The Judicial Council’s mid-year forecast as well as fiscal and budget processes calendar are planned future additions to the court website. Other detailed fiscal reports, such as reports to the legislative on branch expenditures, can be accessed on the public website as well.

The Judicial Council will build upon the DOF annual budget development calendar to document the AOC fiscal and budget processes. Additionally, the Finance will confer with other state departments to obtain feedback regarding their internal fiscal and budget processes.

This issue of ensuring that budget and fiscal information displays are streamlined and simplified so they are transparent and clearly understandable was also identified in the January 2015 report of the California State Auditor who recommended that the Judicial Council should require council Finance staff to report its budget in a more understandable and transparent manner, and in a manner that readily allows stakeholders and the public to know the full amount of the council’s spending. Further, the State Auditor recommended that the council prepare and make public a high-level summary of how the judicial branch’s budget relates to the appropriations from the State's budget.

Working with the Trial Court Budget Advisory Committee, and in consultation with the Department of Finance, council staff is evaluating options to more clearly display the council's budget to stakeholders and the public. It is anticipated that activities in response to the State Auditor's recommendation will be fully implemented in the first quarter of 2016.

Information on Judicial Council Directives

Council Directive 93

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts to ensure that the budget and fiscal management measures implemented by the AOC enable the Finance Division to improve the timeliness of processing contracts to better serve courts, contractors, vendors, and others.

SEC Recommendation 7-29

This division must make a commitment to processing contracts in more timely fashion, with an eye toward better serving courts, contractors, vendors, and others.

Since the establishment of the CAT monitoring and tracking contracts has improved resulting in quicker turnaround time for contracts. |

As reported in June of 2013, Finance established a Contracts Advisory Team (CAT) comprised of members from high-volume contracting offices to identify how Finance can ensure the timely processing of contracts.

CAT meetings have resulted in the identification of business process improvements which have been implemented by the offices and Finance’s Business Services Unit (BSU). These improvements include regularly scheduled meetings between BSU and various offices to improve the communication process and the timeliness of the contract documents. The CAT meetings also focus on monitoring upcoming contract inventories in the various offices as well as tracking those that are currently being processed by the Business Services Unit. Monitoring and tracking contract inventories has resulted in more timely submittals to BSU, as well as quicker turnarounds to the requesting office.

| <input checked="" type="checkbox"/> | COMPLETED: Finance has reviewed its staffing and has aligned it staffing to better align resources with workload. Additionally, Audit Services staffing has not been reduced and has realized an increase in workload since the office was established even with some auditing functions assumed by the State Controller’s Office. |

As part of AOC downsizing efforts over the past 18 months, the Fiscal Services Office reviewed staffing needs in its Budget unit and made adjustments to better align resources with workload. This was especially necessary in light of the retirement of an Assistant Director with critical expertise and responsibility over budget activities and the loss of four budget positions through mandatory layoffs in 2012.

In regards to the workload needs of Audit Services (AS), the workload needs have increased since the office was established in 2001 focused primarily on audits of the trial courts. Audit staff performs comprehensive work at the superior courts that includes: compliance with rules of courts (submitted cases) and the Trial Court Financial Policies and Procedures Manual, financial work on the trial court financial statements under GAAP and GASB, and operational work on cashiering, information systems (including revenue distribution), exhibit rooms, security, and other operational areas. During the last 12 years, AS has utilized external audit firms under audit contracts to assist in these audits and special projects. Unfortunately, the external audit contract and funding expired in 2012.

In addition AS is responsible for the Whistleblower hotline and investigative work and reporting associated with it, and consultative work on revenue distribution, data integrity, information systems, additional staffing. In fact, in the last three years staffing in AS has decreased from 14 positions as of December 31, 2010, to 12 positions currently.

Although the workload associated with trial court audits may be impacted based on the existing statutes regarding contracts (Bureau of State Audit under Public Contracts Code Section 12210) and financial statements

(State Controller’s Office, Bureau of State Audits, or Department of Finance under Government Code Section 77206), state assumption of audit activities will not reduce the need for staffing in AS.

In fact, because of AS staffing reductions and the uncertainty involved with the external state audits, AS’s four-year cycle of auditing the trial courts has now regressed to a five/six year cycle. Resource constraints in AS have also resulted in audit activities that have been delayed, deferred or declined including assisting court executive officers (CEO’s) with high level reviews, data integrity review as continually requested by CEOs, and revenue distribution testing between SCO audits. Finally, the AS is tasked with a new workload relating to the Judicial Council directive to implement internal audits of the AOC.

For all of these reasons, the AS staffing levels will not be reduced because of the potential for audit functions being assumed by the state and AS has in fact have demonstrated a need for additional resources.

In March 2013, Audit Services was moved out of Finance and now resides in the Leadership Services Division.

Council Directive 97.2

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts to consider SEC Recommendation 7-34 and implement the necessary organizational and staffing changes, contingent upon the council's approval of an organizational structure for the AOC and taking into account the results of the classification and compensation studies to be completed.

SEC Recommendation 7-34

The current number of higher-level positions in the HR Division should be reduced, as follows:
 (c) One of the three Senior Manager positions is vacant, a vacancy that should be made permanent by reallocating managerial responsibilities to the two filled Senior Manager positions.

Information on Judicial Council Directives

Council Directive 98

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts to report back on the progress and results of staffing changes being implemented in the Human Resources unit as part of the AOC's internal restructuring process.

SEC Recommendation 7-34

The current number of higher-level positions in the HR Division should be reduced, as follows:
 (d) With the elimination of the positions discussed above, consideration should be given to redirecting the resources from those positions to support vacant HR analyst positions that can be assigned work needed to help reestablish effective HR policies and practices in the AOC.

*This survey included responses from cities (50%), counties (24%), special districts (10%), state government (9%), and federal agencies (1%). The IPMA survey does not specify the types of services provided by the HR offices contacted in the survey.

**This figure includes all state judicial branch entities, including the Supreme Court, Courts of Appeal, HCRC, the California Judicial Center Library, the Judicial Council, and the Commission on Judicial Performance [does not include agency temporary staff and contractors]. It also includes state court justices and trial court judges. Judicial Council Human Resources staffing ratios are in line with the national average, but are higher when compared to other comparable state agencies.

Note: The Judicial Council Human Resources office provides its services to trial courts upon request, but we do not include the trial court population in the table above because most courts are staffed with HR professionals that provide services for their respective courts. As such, the ratio above may be understated because JC Human Resources provides its services in a consultative manner to the courts, including labor and employee relations, classification and compensation, recruitment, workers’ compensation, and leave disability management.

The following table provides another perspective on only the Human Resources Payroll functions in comparison to other entities.

Many HR functions have been assessed over the course of several months for the purpose of ensuring that the respective roles of HR and Legal Services are properly defined. Processes for employee discipline are being modified and are now being fully documented. This ensures the appropriate parts of the agency are engaged at the appropriate time.

As a result, communication between the two offices has been significantly enhanced, leading to more distinct roles and responsibilities for each.

This directive is now considered complete as follows:

Effective October 1, 2012, the directive that Information Technology and any remaining functions of CCMS be combined as a unit, was implemented as part of a new organizational structure approved by the Judicial Council. This new structure reduced the JCC Executive Team to four positions (Administrative Director, Chief of Staff, Chief Operating Officer, and Chief Administrative Officer) and realigned and renamed existing divisions into offices housed under one of three newly created divisions (Judicial Council and Court Leadership Services Division, Judicial and Court Operations Services Division, and Judicial and Court Administrative Services Division). As part of the new structure, Information Technology, including the remaining functions of CCMS was moved under the Administrative Division, under the leadership of the Chief Administrative Officer consistent with the directive.

Additionally, on August 21, 2015 the JCC completed its Classification and Compensation Study that resulted in the implementation of a new salary structure for the organization. The compensation phase of the project followed the classification portion of the study that began in December 2013 and ended in March of 2015, when JCC staff received their new classification specifications. All positions in the JCC were evaluated, and JCC employees were subsequently assigned a classification and provided with information as to whether their salary fell within, above, or below the new salary ranges employee classifications.

The results of the compensation study validated that the pay range for the existing IS Director was within the salary range for the “Director” classification pay range.

Council Directive 101

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council support SEC Recommendation 7-44 and direct the council's Technology Committee to reexamine technology policies in the judicial branch to formulate any new branch-wide technology policies or standards, based on the input, needs, and experiences of the courts and court users, and including cost-benefit analysis.

SEC Recommendation 7-44

A reexamination of technology policies in the judicial branch must occur now that CCMS does not represent the technology vision for all courts. Formulation of any new branch-wide technology policies or standards must be based on the input, needs, and experiences of the courts, and including cost-benefit analysis.

The Technology Committee has developed a unified, long-term plan to achieve funding stability for court technology that was approved by the Judicial Council.

In 2013, the Chief Justice tasked the new Technology Planning Task Force to develop this plan. Membership included judicial officers, court executive officers, court information technology officers, and stakeholders representing the trial and appellate courts, State Bar, and the public.

Their charge was to 1) define judicial branch technology governance; 2) develop a strategic plan for technology at the trial court, appellate court, and Supreme Court level; and 3) develop recommendations for funding judicial branch technology.

To accomplish this, three tracks were launched. These included governance, led by Jake Chatters, Court Executive Officer, Placer; strategic plan, led by Brian Cotta, Chief Information Officer, Fresno; and funding, led by Judge Marsha Slough, Presiding Judge, San Bernardino. The task force approved a charter and vision statement.

The task force developed three products: 1) the Judicial Branch Technology Governance and Funding Model Proposal; 2) the Judicial Branch 4-year Technology Strategic Plan (2014-2018); and the Judicial Branch 24-month Technology Tactical Plan (2014-2016).

The draft Technology Governance and Funding Model and Technology Strategic and Tactical Plans were distributed on March 18, 2014 for judicial branch comment, with a deadline of April 7, 2014. The branch comments were incorporated into the proposals, and the updated documents sent out for public comment in April 2014. The 60-day public comment period closed on June 16, 2014. The task force reviewed the comments, and updated the documents.

On July 9, 2014, the final draft Court Technology Governance and Strategic Plan was posted, with an invitation for public comment. On July 11, 2014, the task force was asked to vote on this plan, which was approved on July 14, 2014. The plan was then forwarded to the JCTC for final review. On July 21, 2014, the JCTC approved the Court Technology Governance and Strategic Plan and approved a recommendation that the Judicial Council to approve the plan.

At the August Judicial Council meeting, the JCTC recommended that the Judicial Council approve the Court Technology Governance and Strategic Plan. With the submittal of the plan to the Council in August, the task force has sunset. The Judicial Council approved the report and plan. The JCTC worked with the Joint Working Group for California's Language Access Plan to update language around language access.

The updated plan was approved by the JCTC on October 2, 2014. The updated Court Technology Governance and Strategic Plan was approved by the Judicial Council at their October 2014 meeting.

California Courts Case Management System (CCMS) Decommission

On March 27, 2012, following a review of a report by Grant Thornton presenting three options for the future of the case management program, the Judicial Council voted to stop the deployment of CCMS V4 as a statewide initiative. The council's decision was based on the unprecedented fiscal challenges confronting California's court system and the recognition that funding to deploy the system to all 58 courts will not be available for the foreseeable future.

The council directed the CCMS Internal Committee, in partnership with the trial courts, to develop timelines and recommendations to the Judicial Council to find other ways to use the CCMS technology and the state's investment in the software system, as well as develop new strategies to assist courts with failing case management systems.

Following the March 27 decision, the AOC began activity to terminate the CCMS Project including the Project Management Office. Steps immediately following the March 27 decision by the Council included:

- Termination of non-critical contractors.
- Staff identified for reassignment or maintenance activities, depending on priority of work to shut down the CCMS program.
- The remainder of CCMS V4 staff were laid off.
- By June 30, 2012, consultants and staff had rolled off the project.
- Regarding contracts with Deloitte, the main vendor for V4, on March 28, following the Judicial Council decision, the AOC instructed Deloitte to terminate support to the V4 environments in their Spring Valley data center.
- The shared services vendor, the California Courts Technology Center (CCTC), decommissioned the CCTC environments.
- Maintenance contracts were terminated for hardware and software specific to CCMS. Application components were appropriately stored for potential future use. Examples of components include: the source code, developed forms, development tools, configuration tools and processes, and test scripts.

By July 31, 2012 all staff, contractors and temporary employees were terminated, retired or were transferred into critical vacant ISD positions.

In order to carry out the Judicial Council decision to terminate CCMS V4, AOC ISD worked with the vendor for the CCTC to process an orderly shutdown of all existing environments. Notice was provided to software and hardware vendors to discontinue support as per terms in the vendor agreements. The decommissioned hardware was inventoried and made available to meet the needs of other judicial branch initiatives.

The CCMS Program Management Office archived and organized project deliverables and documentation according to project management best practices. Final reports and updates are being completed for the Judicial Council, the California Technology Agency (CTA), the Bureau of State Audits (BSA), and the annual legislative report.

Council Directive 103

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts to consider SEC Recommendation 7-45(b) and implement the necessary organizational and staffing changes, contingent upon the council's approval of an organizational structure for the AOC and taking into account the results of the classification and compensation studies to be completed.

SEC Recommendation 7-45

Especially with CCMS not being fully deployed, staff reductions in this division are in order, including:
 (b) The total number of senior managers should be reduced.

Following the March 27 decision by the Judicial council to stop the deployment of CCMS V4 as a statewide initiative, the council began activity to terminate the CCMS Project including the Project Management Office.

By July 31, 2012 all staff, contractors and temporary employees were terminated, retired or were transferred into critical vacant Information Technology positions.

Information on Judicial Council Directives

Council Directive 104

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct that the Administrative Director of the Courts should review and reduce accordingly the use of temporary employees, consultants, and contractors.

SEC Recommendation 7-45

Especially with CCMS not being fully deployed, staff reductions in this division are in order, including:
(c) The use of temporary employees, consultants, and contractors should be reviewed and reductions made accordingly.

In 2012, the AOC Executive Office approved a program that converts full-time employees into a limited number of contractor positions in critical long-term maintenance and support roles to provide cost savings and longer term stability and support. A three-phase project was developed by Information Technology (IT) and recruitments began in April 2013 with the hiring of eight positions, followed by a second recruitment in November 2013 that resulted in the hiring of two additional positions.

The program has been a success to date with cost savings of 35% for each position hired. However, IT has met with challenges in hiring permanent staff due to a competitive IT market, the exclusion of short term programs or assignments from the program, a pay structure that is generally perceived to be non-competitive for skilled and experienced IT resources in the geographic market, and the policy that new hires may not participate in the pilot telecommunication program. For these reasons, the program appears to have plateaued with 50% of external candidates declining offers for positions. Most recently, IT has experienced hesitation on the part of potential applicants who are concerned about the job classifications, given that the council is currently undergoing its Classification and Compensation Study.

The organization will continue its efforts on a periodic basis to review opportunities for converting contractor positions to full time employees with the understanding that not all contractor positions can be converted, that there will always be a need for contractors on short term programs with specialized skill sets. One program, the V2 case management system, will terminate in May 2015 and contractors supporting this program will be terminated.

PENDING IMPLEMENTATION

The processes for this contractor conversion program have been developed and the organization will periodically review the program with the goal of hiring full time staff to provide the best services to the user community and experience cost savings for the organization.

Recently, council policies regarding the use of contractors and temporary employees were updated in response to recommendations from the January 2015 report of the California State Auditor. Specifically, the report recommended limiting the period of time the Judicial Council can employ temporary workers, and develop a similar policy to limit the use of contractors to a reasonable period of time. The Judicial Council Personnel Policy and Procedure 3.3 have been modified to encompass these new requirements.

Judicial Council Directive #104
ITSO Hiring Critical FTE Positions
Final Closing Report

Background

At the March 27, 2012 Judicial Council meeting, the council voted to terminate the California Court Case Management System (CCMS) as a statewide, enterprise case management system. The Strategic Evaluation Committee (SEC), appointed by Chief Justice Tani G. Cantil-Sakauye in March 2011, conducted an in-depth review of the AOC with a view toward promoting transparency, accountability, and efficiency. The Chief Justice received the report and recommendations on May 25, 2012. In August 2012, The Judicial Council voted unanimously to approve recommendations developed by the council's Executive and Planning Committee (E&P), based on the SEC report, to reaffirm Judicial Council authority over the Administrative Office of the Courts, restructure the AOC, and endorse a plan for monthly monitoring of the implementation of the recommendations.

The SEC report specifically directed Information Technology Services that: "Especially with CCMS not being fully deployed, staff reductions in this division are in order, including: The use of temporary employees, consultants, and contractors should be reviewed and reductions made accordingly." The related Judicial Council Directive #104 directed the Information Technology Services Office that "E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct that the Administrative Director of the Courts should review and reduce accordingly the use of temporary employees, consultants, and contractors."

Consistent with this directive, Information Technology Services Office has taken direct action to fill critical support positions held by contractors with full time employees. Hiring permanent full-time employees has resulted in cost savings and longer term stability and support. The ITSO has eliminated temporary staff, reduced consultants and contractors, and developed a program to convert a limited number of long-term contractor positions in critical long-term maintenance and support roles into full time employee positions.

Information Technology Services Office

Information Technology serves at the request of the Judicial Council to meet the branch strategic goals and objectives. ITSO provides a number of services, supporting technology infrastructure and technical expertise to enable the Judicial Branch to fulfill its responsibilities effectively and efficiently. In fulfilling this charter, ITSO's key goal is to provide full technology life cycle services, such as planning, design, development, procurement, implementation, deployment and ongoing customer service support for these applications and requisite infrastructure, while optimizing operational core services through standardization and efficiencies, protecting technology assets through timely cost-effective technological enhancements and solutions, controlling costs and increasing productivity through improvement of work processes.

Historically, Information Technology has augmented staff with contractors when there is insufficient internal staff to support projects for many reasons. These include: the hiring freeze in 2008-2012; to backfill vacancies due to retirements or staff resignations; for programs receiving special funding limited only to contractors; for programs that require specialized skills and experience; or when full time employee resources cannot be recruited due to the AOC salary structure, which is generally lower in this competitive market for IT resources.

ITSO Staff Review Program

In 2012, to achieve the goals of directive #104, Information Technology Services Office received Executive Office approval for a program to convert to full time employees a limited number of contractor positions in critical long-term maintenance and support roles. This approach is consistent with the goals of reducing dependency on temporary and contract workers, ensuring the appropriate use of temporary workers to meet short-term needs, and maintaining institutional knowledge in critical areas such as information technology. Shorter term project positions such as support for interim case management systems were not included in this program.

As a result of this program, 10 full time employees have been hired to date to replace contractors. Each full time employee hired saves approximately 35% in costs to the program.

It's important to emphasize that while this request is to formally close directive #104, this program to hire contractors into FTE positions, reduce dependency on contractors and the related review processes for obtaining staff will be ongoing on a periodic basis.

Goals

The goal of this recruiting effort was to improve services to the AOC and the courts, consistent with the direction set by the SEC and the E&P, and the Chief's new Access 3D goals for the branch; and to manage ongoing efforts at the AOC to improve the organization. This initiative has the potential to provide court programs with committed long term resources to support ITSO user communities.

This program was designed to remedy the current reliance on contracting resources in ITSO to meet program demands. The process of hiring full time staff in lieu of contractors does not increase the overall total position count within the AOC. The transition from contractor to full time employee results in a significant cost savings to the AOC. Each hiring of a full time employee saves approximately 35% in costs to the program.

Process

To meet the goals of this program, a three-phase project plan was developed by ITSO, in close coordination with Human Resources, Executive Office and Fiscal Services Office, to identify, review and prioritize long term contractor positions for conversion to FTEs. Short term positions, for example, for interim case management systems, were excluded.

Approximately 40 critical contractor positions were reviewed, prioritized, grouped, and approved for the program. A phased approach was adopted. Approximately 18 positions in ITSO were identified as performing key roles in core and essential programs. All position requests were reviewed on a case-by-case basis by the Human Resources Services Office and the Fiscal Services Office, with a recommendation to the AOC Executive Office for final approval.

The first recruitment phase began in April 2013 with the development of 10 priority job descriptions posted internally and externally. Active recruitment encompassed all three AOC geographic locations (San Francisco, Burbank and Sacramento). Eight positions were successfully filled by full time staff. These included 3 senior business systems analysts, 2 business systems analysts, 2 senior programmers and 3 senior technical analysts.

The application, interview and hiring process utilized conforms to agency policies and procedures. These positions were posted internally and on the judicial branch public careers site www.courts.ca.gov/careers, as well as other popular recruiting sites. Internal communications to all ITSO staff and contractors included a memo, a FAQ, and an informational meeting to discuss any questions about this new program.

The second recruitment phase began in November 2013 with additional contractor positions posted and two additional full time positions filled in this stage. One person has since left the AOC for a new opportunity.

This ongoing program is now part of an overall AOC and ITSO process to review critical long term contractor positions and identified which should be recruited for full time staff. As new positions are required, there is also a review to identify if this should be a full time employee or a short term contractor.

Conclusions

Although this program has been met with success with savings of 35% for each full time position hired, ITSO has also met challenges with filling these positions for a number of reasons. These include:

- Difficulty with hiring full time staff into contractor positions due to a competitive market for IT specialists. In the first phase of this program, not all position offers to existing contractors were accepted and 50% of external candidates declined offers for positions;
- Exclusion of contractors in short term programs or assignments in the program;
- Reduced salary for potential employees due to a pay structure at the AOC that is generally perceived to be non-competitive for skilled and experienced IT resources; and
- The telecommute pilot program policy which excludes new hires from participating in the program in their first year of employment.

For these reasons, the program appears to have plateaued and although ITSO will continue to review contractor positions for full time recruitments, it will do so periodically rather than as a focused effort.

It should be noted that ITSO will always have a need for contractors for reasons including: short term project needs; in those situations where the organization needs a specialized skill; when new programs are assigned; and for staff augmentation due to funding restrictions or hiring freezes. Additionally, it should be recognized that although not all contractor positions can be converted, with the termination of some interim programs, the overall numbers of contractors will be ultimately be reduced (i.e., V2).

The AOC is currently in the midst of its classification and compensation study and the results of this study may assist to attract more highly skilled and experienced IT resources as full time employees to compete with private industry. Regardless, as indicated above ITSO has implemented a structured process to conduct periodic reviews of all current and new positions to determine if a contractor or a full time staff would be the best fit for the program. ITSO will continue to work closely with HR and the Chief Administrative Officer to review the staffing requirements and determine the best path forward with the overall goal of hiring full time staff for full time programs to provide the best services to the user community.

Council Directive 105

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council support SEC Recommendation 7-46 and direct the Administrative Director of the Courts, as part of AOC long term planning, to conduct a review and audit of all technology currently used in the AOC, including an identification of efficiencies and cost savings from the use of a single platform, and return to the council with a progress report on the findings.

SEC Recommendation 7-46

Different divisions in AOC operate from different technology platforms, including SAP used for the Phoenix system, Oracle, and CCMS. As part of a long range plan for the use of technology in AOC operations, the AOC should conduct a review and audit of all technology currently used in the AOC. Efficiencies and cost savings could result from the use of a single platform.

| x | COMPLETED: Information Technology office has implemented a process of semi-annual audits to define and maintain enterprise technology standards to maximize efficiencies and cost savings. |

In August 2012, the council’s Enterprise Architecture Working Group implemented a process of semi-annual audits to define and maintain enterprise technology standards. These standards define technologies that should be leveraged and those that should be phased out in order to maximize efficiencies and cost savings, and they are updated twice each year. The standards are reviewed with the application and infrastructure teams during monthly meetings to monitor compliance and identify strategies for ensuring compliance.

Numerous efficiencies have been identified via the audit process. They include:

- Extensive use of virtualization at the data centers reduced the physical server count, reducing maintenance and costs.
- Early planning for upcoming end of support for product versions enables more efficient resource allocation.
- Data center operations have achieved resource efficiencies due to the limited number of operating systems. Historically, the enterprise standards for operating systems were Solaris and Windows, but in 2012, the AOC adopted Linux as another standard operating system due to its lower total cost of ownership .
- Monthly meetings between enterprise architects and program teams provide the opportunity to align roadmaps and do better planning. Changes to technology are communicated and shared among all groups.
- Branchwide licenses allow program teams to avoid lengthy procurement timeframes (3-6 months or more) and reduce costs. Programs can also reduce staff training requirements by leveraging tools the teams are already familiar with.

Inherent savings have also been realized by developing and implementing technology standards. The savings are derived from the efficiencies supported by the technology standards as described above. Specific examples of savings identified in this audit are:

- The Phoenix project has migrated its SAP application systems to the Linux RedHat operating system with a 63% one-time capital cost savings, and a 13% operational cost savings.
- The CAFM project saved 40% in one-time capital cost savings by migrating to Linux.
- A branchwide license agreement (BWLA) was negotiated with Oracle in 2005, and via the BWLA, the Judicial Branch receives a significant discount (up to 75%) in annual support costs. Oracle is the current agreed-upon standard database for the Judicial Branch due to its prevalent use.
- The Judicial Branch also has a BWLA for Oracle WebLogic software. This technology is widely used in the Judicial Branch and the branch receives a significant discount (up to 80%) in annual support costs.

E&P Recommendation #105 - Completed

Date: January 17, 2014

Report by: Mark Dusman, Information Technology Services Office

E&P Recommendation No. 105:

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council support SEC Recommendation 7-46 and direct the Administrative Director of the Courts, as part of AOC long-term planning, to conduct a review and audit of all technology currently used at the AOC, and to return to the Judicial Council with a progress report on the findings, including efficiencies and potential cost savings.

SEC Recommendation No. 7-46:

7-46. Different divisions in AOC operate from different technology platforms, including SAP used for the Phoenix system, Oracle, and CCMS. As part of a long range plan for the use of technology in AOC operations, the AOC should conduct a review and audit of all technology currently used in the AOC. Efficiencies and cost savings could result from the use of a single platform.

Note: A separate item, E&P Recommendation No. 133, addresses a specific category of software systems called Enterprise Resource and Planning systems which support finance, human resource and education functional areas Branchwide. The research for Recommendation No. 133 will identify costs, benefits, potential long-term savings and challenges of migrating this support to a single IT platform.

Enterprise Technology Audits – In August 2012, the AOC's Enterprise Architecture Working Group (EAWG) implemented a process of semi-annual audits to define and maintain enterprise technology standards. The standards are used when developing program roadmaps to guide technology decisions. Individual roadmaps aligned to the common standard technologies increase efficiency and reduce total cost of ownership. Monthly roadmap meetings with enterprise architects and program managers facilitate the process. Additional information about the audits, standards and roadmaps is included at the end of this form.

Detailed results from the most recent audit, completed in December 2013, are in the attached spreadsheet, Enterprise Technology Audit. Findings are summarized below:

- Prior to the introduction of the audit/roadmaps process, the AOC had agreed upon technology standards in the areas of servers, operating systems, database software, web servers, and application servers. The audit now includes a comprehensive list of technologies that should be leveraged and those that should be phased out in order to maximize efficiencies and cost savings.

- For optimal and cost effective usage of server resources, virtualization and cloud technologies were identified as the future direction. In the past few years, virtualization has been quite extensively used at both the California Courts Technology Center (CCTC) and the AOC data center. Solaris, Windows and Linux operating systems have been virtualized for optimal server utilization and significantly reduced total cost of ownership.
- In the latest audit, several versions of products (WebLogic 9g, JBoss 4.2 & 4.3, Oracle 10g, TIBCO Data Exchange Client, and Adobe LiveCycle 9.x products) were selected for retirement due to either replacement or reaching end of support. In addition, the program teams were informed of the upcoming end of regular support for versions of products up to one year in advance.
- For some products, more than one version is listed, with the latest being the preferred standard. There are a number of factors for maintaining multiple versions. For example, there may be version incompatibility with other components in the system, or the program may be resource constrained and unable to upgrade to a newer version.
- This continual process of auditing keeps the programs up to date with the latest technology and support, increasing both efficiency and effectiveness of the systems.

Implementation date: The initial enterprise technology audit was completed on August 29, 2012. The most recent semi-annual audit was completed on December 18, 2013.

Resources required: The process is implemented by existing AOC staff members of the Enterprise Architecture Working Group.

Procedures or policies updated or created: The continual process, including semi-annual audits, technology standards updates and monthly program roadmap reviews, is being documented as the Enterprise Technology Standards and Lifecycle Process. Documentation has been drafted and is being updated as the process matures.

Training developed: Specific ITOC staff has been piloting this process since August 2012, so the audit information is comprehensive and all the programs now maintain technology roadmaps that are updated monthly. When the process documentation mentioned above is completed, additional relevant ITOC staff will be trained in the process.

Efficiencies: Technology standards provide efficiency by reducing the number of products in use. This minimizes complexity, enables more efficient procurement, improves resource planning, reduces training needs, and makes better use of experienced personnel. Numerous efficiencies were identified via the audit process. They include:

- Extensive use of virtualization at the data centers reduced the physical server count, which in turn, reduced maintenance and costs.
- Informing program teams of the upcoming end of support for product versions they use enables early planning and more efficient resource allocation.
- Data center operations have achieved resource efficiencies due to the limited number of operating systems. Historically, the enterprise standards for operating systems were Solaris and Windows, but in 2012, the AOC adopted Linux as another standard operating system due to its lower total cost of ownership.
- Monthly meetings between enterprise architects and program teams provide the opportunity to align roadmaps and do better planning. Changes to technology are communicated in both directions and shared between all groups.
- Branchwide licenses allow program teams to avoid lengthy procurement timeframes (3-6 months or more) and reduce costs. Programs can also reduce staff training requirements by leveraging tools the teams are already familiar with.

Savings: Inherent savings are realized by developing and implementing technology standards. The savings are derived from the efficiencies supported by the technology standards as described above. Specific examples of savings identified in this audit are:

- The Phoenix project is already in the process of migrating its systems to the Linux operating system with a projected 63% ($239,000) one-time capital cost savings, and a 13% ($44,000) operational cost savings annually.
- The CAFM project saved 40% ($144,000) in one-time capital cost savings by migrating to Linux.
- Oracle has been the agreed upon standard database due to its prevalent use in the applications hosted at the CCTC and throughout the Judicial Branch. A Branchwide license agreement (BWLA) was negotiated with Oracle in 2005, and via the BWLA, the Judicial Branch gets a significant discount (up to 75% or $8M) in annual support costs.
- The Judicial Branch also has a BWLA for Oracle-WebLogic software. Oracle-WebLogic is one of the technology standards that are widely in use. Due to the BWLA the Judicial Branch gets significant discount (up to 80% or $5.7M) in annual support costs.

Costs: No additional costs were incurred in the implementation of the audit as it is already part of ITSO's standard operating process.

Service level impact: none

Other implementation: none

Audits, Standards, and Roadmaps

The Information Technology Services Office has implemented a process of using semi-annual audits to maintain technology standards that allow for the development of a comprehensive technology roadmap to support an enterprise goal of implementing cost effective strategies for technologies. This enterprise roadmap consists of the individual application and infrastructure roadmaps and supports efficient and effective technology decision making.

In August of 2012, an initial audit of the technologies in use at the AOC datacenters was conducted. The audit included technologies used in over 20 server-side and 6 client-side categories, including operating systems, databases, application servers, web servers, middleware, security, productivity tools, testing tools and document management systems. The AOC had maintained and promoted implicit standards for many years, leveraging enterprise licenses with IBM, Microsoft, Oracle, SAP, TIBCO, and other leading technology companies, but enterprise level standards have now been established and documented based on the results of the audit so that program teams will have guidance when developing and supporting applications.

The AOC program teams maintain roadmaps projecting activities over the coming 12 months. An example roadmap for the Computer Aided Facilities Management (CAFM) application is included below. Technology areas are kept in alignment with the enterprise roadmap via monthly meetings between the enterprise architects and the program teams. The monthly meetings provide a two-way forum to discuss upcoming major application and infrastructure upgrades and changes in technology standards that will impact the systems.

The image shows a blurred screenshot of a program roadmap for CAFM. It appears to be a table with multiple columns. The first column likely lists activities or projects. The second and third columns likely represent start and end dates or time periods. The fourth column likely indicates the status or progress of each activity. The text is too blurry to read specific details, but the structure is consistent with a project or activity roadmap.

Information on Judicial Council Directives

Council Directive 106

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts to consider SEC Recommendation 7-71 and implement the necessary organizational and staffing changes, contingent upon the council's approval of an organizational structure for the AOC.

SEC Recommendation 7-71

The Office of General Counsel should be renamed Legal Services Office, consistent with its past designation, and should be a stand-alone office reporting to the Administrative Director of the Courts. The Legal Services Office manager position should be compensated at its current level. The Legal Services Office should not be at the same divisional level as the Judicial and Court Operations Services Division or the Judicial and Court Administrative Services Division. The Chief Counsel, manager of the Legal Services Office, should not be a member of the Executive Leadership Team.

This directive is now considered complete as follows:

Effective October 1, 2012, the directive that Legal Services become a stand-alone office, was implemented as part of a new organizational structure that was approved by the Judicial Council. This new structure reduced the JCC Executive Team to four positions (Administrative Director, Chief of Staff, Chief Operating Officer, and Chief Administrative Officer) and realigned and renamed existing divisions into offices housed under one of three newly created divisions (Judicial Council and Court Leadership Services Division, Judicial and Court Operations Services Division, and Judicial and Court Administrative Services Division). As part of the new structure, Legal Services was moved under the Leadership Services Division and became a stand-alone office reporting to the Chief of Staff with a dotted line reporting relationship to the Administrative Director. In 2015, Legal Services was moved and now reports directly to the Administrative Director consistent with this recommendation.

Additionally, on August 21, 2015 the JCC completed its Classification and Compensation Study that resulted in the implementation of a new salary structure for the organization. The compensation phase of the project followed the classification portion of the study that began in December 2013 and ended in March of 2015, when JCC staff received their new classification specifications. All positions in the JCC were evaluated, and JCC employees were subsequently assigned a classification and provided with information as to whether their salary fell within, above, or below the new salary ranges employee classifications.

The results of the compensation study validated that the pay range for the existing Chief Counsel was within the salary range for the “Director, Chief Counsel” classification pay range.

Council Directive 107

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts to consider SEC Recommendation 7-72(a) and implement the necessary organizational and staffing changes, contingent upon the council's approval of an organizational structure for the AOC and taking into account the results of the classification and compensation studies to be completed.

SEC Recommendation 7-72

The Legal Services Office's current level of approximately 75 positions, including more than 50 attorney positions, should be reduced. To achieve the reduction, the following areas should be reviewed and considered, and appropriate actions taken:

(a) In addition to the General Counsel, there are nine management level attorney positions in the Legal Services Office, including the Assistant General Counsel, three Managing Attorneys, and five Supervising Attorneys. This is an excessive number of management positions, which should be reduced. The position of Assistant General Counsel position could be eliminated. One managing attorney could be assigned to manage each of the two major functional components of the division, house counsel, and Judicial Council services, with each managing attorney reporting directly to the Chief Counsel.

| XCOMPLETED: Legal Services has implemented a new management structure that includes the Chief Counsel, a Senior Managing Attorney, two Managing Attorneys, and six Supervising Attorneys over the six Legal Services Units. |

Since the release of the Strategic Evaluation Committee report in May 2012, the Legal Services workforce has been dramatically reduced from the 75 positions referenced in SEC recommendation 7-72(a) to a workforce of 44 positions as of the date of this report. Legal Services attorney staffing has been reduced from 50 attorneys to the current number of 32 attorneys, exclusive of the Chief Counsel. The Legal Services management team currently consists of 9 members, excluding the Chief Counsel.

At the February 2013 Judicial Council meeting, Judicial Council liaisons to Legal Services, Justice Douglas Miller and Ms. Edith Matthai, were asked to take the lead on reviewing the cost-effectiveness of Legal Services current use of outside counsel in response to Judicial Council directive 122. While addressing this request, the liaisons concluded that additional Legal Services-related restructuring directives were appropriate for inclusion in the liaisons' review and would enable a more comprehensive evaluation.

In addition to reviewing the cost-effectiveness of the use of outside counsel, the liaisons' review was expanded to include defining the role of the Chief Counsel; evaluating the need for use of a paralegal classification; analyzing the use of Legal Services attorney staff in AOC field offices; and analyzing the current Legal Services organizational structure, services, and attorney services provided by the AOC outside of Legal Services.

At the June 28, 2013, Judicial Council liaisons Justice Douglas Miller and Ms. Edith Matthai provided a report to council with various recommendations as it related to Legal Services restructuring directives. In regards to directive 107, the liaisons recommended that the Legal Services should be restructured to create a new executive leadership team comprising the Chief Counsel and three managing attorneys who lead three distinct areas of service.

Under the new Chief Counsel, with the support of the Administrative Director and the Chief of Staff, Legal Services has taken measures that have substantially implemented the structure proposed by the liaisons. The Legal Services attorney management team, excluding the Chief Counsel, currently consists of nine members as of January 2015. The position of Assistant Chief Counsel was eliminated after the attorney formerly holding that position retired in 2013. As recommended by the Judicial Council liaisons, instead of hiring a new Assistant Chief Counsel, a managing attorney was promoted in 2014 to the position of senior managing attorney to provide support and backup to the Chief Counsel and oversight of three units. In June, 2014, two Managing Attorneys were hired that supervise two units each.

Legal Services is currently structured to provide legal services in these areas by organizing its attorneys into six units:

- Rules and Projects Unit
- Legal Opinion Unit
- Transactions and Business Operations Unit
- Real Estate Unit
- Litigation Management Unit
- Labor and Employment Unit

Legal Services has been structured so that although attorneys are housed into one of the units above as their primary assignment, they are expected to work on any issues that may arise out of their unit based on their subject matter expertise and background.

Executive Summary

The Legal Services Office (LSO) is an office of the Administrative Office of the Courts (AOC) under the Judicial Council and Court Leadership Services Division. The mission of LSO is to provide quality, timely, and ethical legal advice and services to the Chief Justice, the Judicial Council, council advisory committees and task forces, the appellate and trial courts, and the AOC. The Judicial Council has charged the office with providing “consistent, comprehensive legal support and counsel to the courts.” (Judicial Council of Cal./Admin. Off. of Cts., Justice in Focus: The Strategic Plan for California’s Judicial Branch 2006–2012 (2006), p. 49.) In response to Judicial Council restructuring directives and the recommendations of the Judicial Council liaisons to LSO, the office has been significantly restructured. This informational report summarizes the activities undertaken in response to the June 2013 recommendations of the Judicial Council liaisons.

Previous Council Action

- In March 2011, Chief Justice Tani G. Cantil-Sakauye created the Strategic Evaluation Committee (SEC) to conduct an in-depth review of the Administrative Office of the Courts, the staff agency to the Judicial Council, with a view toward promoting transparency, accountability, and efficiency.

- On August 31, 2012, based on the SEC report and its recommendations, the Judicial Council approved AOC realignment directives and directed the Administrative Director to report on them.
- At the February 2013 council meeting, the council liaisons to LSO were asked to take the lead on reviewing the cost-effectiveness of LSO's current use of outside counsel in response to Judicial Council directive 122. While addressing this request, the liaisons concluded that additional LSO-related restructuring directives were appropriate for inclusion in the liaisons' review and would enable a more comprehensive evaluation.<sup>1</sup>
- In addition to reviewing the cost-effectiveness of the use of outside counsel, the liaisons' review was expanded to include defining the role of the Chief Counsel; evaluating the need for use of a paralegal classification; analyzing the use of LSO attorney staff in AOC field offices; and analyzing the current LSO organizational structure, LSO services, and attorney services provided by the AOC outside of LSO.
- In June 2013, the LSO liaisons recommended that the Judicial Council endorse the following recommendations to the Administrative Director:<sup>2</sup>
  1. LSO should be restructured with a management team comprising a Chief Counsel and three managing attorneys over three distinct service areas to ensure continued focus on serving the varied and diverse needs of LSO's clients, which include the appellate and trial courts, the Chief Justice, and the Judicial Council and its administrative agency, the AOC.
  2. LSO should implement a formal structure to solicit client feedback on a regular basis.
  3. The role of the Chief Counsel and the expectations for that role and areas of responsibility should be clearly defined to reflect the new organizational structure.
  4. The use of outside counsel is appropriate for specialized areas of law and litigation. The protocols for LSO's use of outside counsel should be strengthened to ensure that outside counsel is used in the most cost-effective manner.
  5. The AOC should continue to support the existing practice of permitting attorney resources to reside in AOC field offices provided there is proper oversight and accountability.

6. All staff outside of LSO providing legal advice or legal-related services that require a law degree should establish a dual reporting relationship to LSO and their current office.
  7. Given the recent retirement announcement by the current Chief Counsel, the successor Chief Counsel should be afforded the opportunity to implement the restructuring and the formation of the management team under the supervision of the Chief of Staff.
- At the June 2013 Judicial Council meeting, the council endorsed the liaisons' recommendations and agreed with the liaisons that modifications might be needed once these recommendations are implemented. It further directed the Administrative Director of the Courts to report back on implementation of the liaisons' recommendations by the end of March 2014.<sup>3</sup>

Methodology and Process

Restructuring within LSO has occurred as a result of the implementation of the liaisons' recommendations. As indicated below, six of the seven recommendations have been implemented, with one variance: (1) the LSO management structure has been modified; (2) the responsibilities of the Chief Counsel have been reviewed and clearly defined; (3) a process for periodically surveying court users of legal services is being put into place; (4) protocols have been developed for retention of outside counsel; (5) policies have been implemented to ensure appropriate oversight in the field offices for day-to-day accountability of LSO attorneys and staff in field offices; and (6) paralegals have not and are not currently employed by the LSO. Finally, although LSO works closely with other AOC offices with attorneys, the liaisons' recommendation that AOC attorneys outside of LSO who provide legal advice or legal related services that require a law degree should have a dual reporting relationship to LSO and their current office has not been implemented. As discussed below, for this recommendation, it seems appropriate to wait for the results of the pending classification and compensation study, which will expressly review the attorney classification.

Background on the Legal Services Office

The Legal Services Office provides a variety of services that historically, before state trial court funding, were provided by the counties and reflect the varying and expanded needs of judicial branch entities in today's environment.

Before trial court funding, the Legal Services Office comprised a small group of attorney staff primarily responsible for drafting council rules of court and forms and legislation, providing legal opinions to the council and the Administrative Director, and staffing council advisory committees and other similar bodies.<sup>4</sup> Following trial court funding, the role of LSO expanded to provide to the superior courts legal services that previously had been provided by county counsels' offices. LSO began providing trial courts with legal opinions on judicial administration issues. The council also approved the creation of a Litigation Management Program in 1999, adopting rules of court assigning the responsibility to LSO for the management of all claims and litigation against the courts.

After the enactment of the Trial Court Employment Protection and Governance Act of 2000, LSO began providing labor and employment legal services. LSO's areas of responsibility continued to expand—for example, with the establishment of a unit to provide transactional and business-related advice and services. After passage of the Trial Court Facilities Act of 2002, the Real Estate Unit was established to provide the facilities-related legal work resulting from this legislation. Finally, LSO attorney positions were established in the field offices to better facilitate the provision of legal services to the superior courts.

The growth of LSO and the expansion of the services it provides have significantly changed in the past few years. Based on the council directives and other developments, LSO has ceased to grow and has been notably reduced in size. This and other changes are described in detail below.

Implementing the directives

In implementing the Judicial Council directives to LSO and the council liaisons' recommendations, the Administrative Director of the Courts and the Chief of Staff worked closely with the Chief Counsel and her management team. They have also benefitted greatly from advice from the Judicial Council liaisons to LSO and other council members.

The liaison report specifically addresses implementation of the council liaisons' recommendations to the Administrative Director of the Courts, which were endorsed by the Judicial Council. The report presents each recommendation and summarizes the actions taken in response to the recommendations.

Legal Services Office restructuring

As part of their review, the liaisons considered Judicial Council restructuring directive 107 and recommended the following:

LSO should be restructured with a management team comprising a Chief Counsel and three managing attorneys over three distinct service areas to ensure continued focus on serving the varied and diverse needs of LSO's clients, which include the appellate and trial courts, the Chief Justice, and the Judicial Council and its administrative agency, the AOC.

<sup>4</sup> The office's name has changed over the years. In the 1990s, it was designated as Council and Legal Services. Subsequently, it became the Office of the General Counsel, and in 2012 the office was renamed the Legal Services Office.

Judicial Council restructuring directive 107 states:

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts to consider SEC Recommendation 7-72(a) and implement the necessary organizational and staffing changes, contingent upon the council's approval of an organizational structure for the AOC and taking into account the results of the classification and compensation studies to be completed.<sup>5</sup>

Since the release of the Strategic Evaluation Committee report in May 2012, the LSO workforce has been dramatically reduced from the 75 positions referenced in SEC recommendation 7-72(a) to a workforce of 44 positions as of the date of this report. LSO attorney staffing has been reduced from 50 attorneys to the current number of 32 attorneys, exclusive of the Chief Counsel. The LSO management team currently consists of 6 members, excluding the Chief Counsel, as compared to 9 noted in SEC recommendation 7-72(a).

The June 2013 Liaison Report states:

Given the current staffing levels of the LSO workforce and the critical nature of the legal services provided by LSO, we believe that a 10-member LSO attorney management team is appropriate for this office. However, to ensure accountability and clear lines of authority for the varied legal services provided by LSO, it is recommended that the LSO should be restructured to create a new executive leadership team comprising the Chief Counsel and three managing attorneys who lead three distinct areas of service . . . Additionally, in accordance with council directive 107, we recommend that the position of Assistant Chief Counsel be reclassified as a managing attorney position. It is also recommended that one of the managing attorney positions be classified as a senior managing attorney to provide backup and support as second in command to the Chief Counsel. It appears appropriate that the managing attorney leading Judicial Council Services and Legal Opinions would be the best position for second in command.

(a) In addition to the General Counsel, there are nine management level attorney positions in the Legal Services Office, including the Assistant General Counsel, three Managing Attorneys, and five Supervising Attorneys. This is an excessive number of management positions, which should be reduced. The position of Assistant General Counsel could be eliminated. One managing attorney could be assigned to manage each of the two major functional components of the division, house counsel, and Judicial Council services, with each managing attorney reporting directly to the Chief Counsel.

The new structure provides a three-to-one reporting structure under the Chief Counsel and shifts the responsibility for regular day-to-day management workload from the Chief Counsel to the managing attorneys. This shift of direct responsibility for LSO daily activities is an acknowledgement that the Chief Counsel should be involved in providing legal input and expertise to the most critical legal issues for the branch versus being immersed in routine LSO workload. This structure will require continuous communication between the Chief Counsel and the three managing attorneys to ensure that no silos develop in the office. Similar to partners in a law firm, the Chief Counsel and the managing attorneys should meet regularly to share information and make decisions on projects, priorities, and resources that further the goals of the office as a whole. (Judicial Council of Cal., supra, at p. 2.)

Under the new Chief Counsel, with the support of the Administrative Director of the Courts and the Chief of Staff, LSO has taken measures that have substantially implemented the structure proposed by the liaisons. The LSO attorney management team, excluding the Chief Counsel, consists of six members as of March 2014. The position of Assistant Chief Counsel was eliminated after the attorney formerly holding that position retired in 2013. As recommended by the liaisons, instead of hiring a new Assistant Chief Counsel, a managing attorney was promoted in 2014 to the position of senior managing attorney to provide support and backup to the Chief Counsel. Because of retirements, no other managing attorneys are currently employed in LSO. However, to provide the level and structure of leadership necessary to manage the office in the manner recommended by the liaisons, recruitment is under way for two additional managing attorneys. After completion of this hiring process, LSO will have an executive management structure as envisioned by the liaisons, with a Chief Counsel and three managing attorneys, one of whom is designated as a senior managing attorney.

LSO provides legal services in two primary areas: (1) services provided to the council, to the Chief Justice as chair of the council, and to the Administrative Director of the Courts and the AOC as the administrative arm of the council; and (2) services provided to the appellate and trial courts. LSO is currently structured to provide legal services in these areas by organizing its attorneys into six units:

- Rules and Projects Unit
- Legal Opinion Unit
- Transactions and Business Operations Unit
- Real Estate Unit
- Litigation Management Unit
- Labor and Employment Unit

In terms of LSO's management structure, the liaison report recommends that LSO be restructured into three areas of services: (1) Judicial Council Services and Legal Opinions (a merger of the Rules and Projects and Legal Opinion Units); (2) Transactions and Business Operations (incorporating Real Estate into the Transactions and Business Operations Unit); and (3) Litigation Management and Labor and Employment (a merger of the two formerly separate units).

The liaison report further recommends that the new units continue to serve both client groups—the appellate and trial courts along with the Judicial Council, Chief Justice as chair of the council, Administrative Director of the Courts, and AOC—with the responsibility of supervising attorneys divided between the two client groups. LSO is in the process of restructuring its activities into the three organization units described above. Once the full complement of managing attorneys is in place, each will manage one of the combined units. After careful consideration, however, the Administrative Director and Chief of Staff support a variance from the liaison recommendations with respect to the supervisory-level responsibilities. Because the quantity of legal work performed for the courts differs from that for the Judicial Council/AOC clients and because of the need to provide clients with specialized skills and knowledge in the individual subject-matter areas, LSO will continue to be structured along subject-matter groups rather than client groups. The purpose of this structure is to provide better service to clients by providing them with immediate access to supervisors and attorneys with subject-matter expertise specific to the legal issues and inquiries presented.<sup>6</sup>

The liaison report further states:

It is intended that the Chief Counsel and the three managing attorneys hold overall management responsibility, with the supervising/senior attorneys charged with carrying out senior management’s directives for the specific subject matter and client assignments. The level of experience and precise classification for these supervising/senior attorneys should be determined as a part of the internal restructuring and reviewed as a part of the classification and compensation study.

The report’s additional recommendations regarding the management structure will be implemented once the managing attorney positions are filled. As indicated in the report, the level of experience and precise classification for the supervising/senior attorney structure also partially depend on the classification and compensation study.

Role of Chief Counsel

The liaisons considered Judicial Council restructuring directive 115 and recommended that the role of the Chief Counsel and the expectations for that role, along with the areas of responsibility, should be clearly defined to reflect the new organizational structure.

Judicial Council restructuring directive 115 states:

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts, as part of the review of the AOC organizational structure, to review current responsibilities and clearly define the role of the Chief Counsel.

As part of their report to the Judicial Council, the liaisons included an attachment clearly defining the responsibilities and role of the Chief Counsel of the Administrative Office of the Courts.<sup>7</sup>

The description has been adopted and specifies that the Chief Counsel is chief legal advisor to the Judicial Council and to the AOC and office chief of the AOC Legal Services Office, which provides comprehensive legal services to the appellate and trial courts. It adds that the Legal Services Office has two major areas of service: legal advisor and counsel to the Judicial Council and legal advisor and legal services provider to the appellate and trial courts. In these capacities, the Chief Counsel has responsibilities that are enumerated in detail.

Survey of users of LSO services

The liaisons considered Judicial Council restructuring directive 120 and recommended that, to ensure that the appropriate level of client service is provided, particularly in the area of legal opinions, a formal procedure be developed and implemented in LSO to solicit client feedback.

Judicial Council restructuring directive 120 states:

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts that court users of legal services should be surveyed periodically to determine if such services are performed in a timely and satisfactory manner.

In response to this recommendation, a draft survey has been developed to ask court users for their evaluations of and suggestions for improvements to legal services provided by each of the six LSO units.<sup>8</sup> Because of workload issues and staffing concerns, it is anticipated that the survey will be distributed to the courts in late 2014 as a pilot. If the survey proves useful and courts do not find it overly burdensome, LSO will continue to survey the courts on an annual or biennial basis.

Use of outside counsel

With respect to Judicial Council directive 122 regarding the use of outside counsel, the Judicial Council endorsed the liaisons' recommendation that (1) the use of outside counsel is appropriate for specialized areas of law and litigation; and (2) protocols for LSO's use of outside counsel

should be strengthened to ensure that outside counsel is used in the most cost-effective manner. That directive states:

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts to order an independent review of the Office of the General Counsel's use, selection, and management of outside legal counsel to determine whether outside counsel is being utilized in a cost effective manner. Before initiating the independent review, the Administrative Director of the Courts must provide a proposal with options for conducting the review, including the associated costs.

The liaisons undertook the review of the use of outside counsel and reported back to the council as follows:

Based on our experience in the legal field and after conferring with colleagues, we conclude that the use of outside counsel is appropriate and in some cases mandated, providing valuable legal resources for the varying needs of LSO relating to specific subject areas or broad-based branch initiatives (i.e., courthouse transfers). Outside legal counsel provides LSO with sufficient flexibility to meet the changing needs of the branch in an efficient and cost-effective manner.

The liaison report also concluded, once it was confirmed that there was a legitimate need to use outside counsel, that a full study of past expenses would be extraordinarily time-consuming and would provide little benefit. Because the goal was to be certain that future expenditures are warranted, the liaisons recommended placing the responsibility for the retention and monitoring of outside counsel with the managing attorney in each area of practice. The liaisons added that (1) there should be written justification for the retention, and the managing attorney should be responsible for ensuring that the hourly rates and time spent are reasonable; (2) at the close of representation a short client feedback report should be obtained, and the managing attorney should evaluate the service provided from LSO's perspective; and (3) an annual report on the use of outside counsel should be provided to the Judicial Council.

Thus, the liaisons recommended that LSO develop:

- A structure in which each managing attorney is responsible for the approval of and justification for using outside counsel based on the area of expertise needed or resource requirements.
- A means for conducting an examination of the cost-effectiveness of using outside counsel versus potentially hiring attorney resources based on specific projects and the duration of legal assistance needed.
- A checklist that must be completed before initiating a contract with outside counsel to confirm that no internal LSO resources are available for the subject-matter area.

- A means of following up with the courts that receive services to gather their input on the services provided by outside counsel through an e-mail questionnaire or survey. This information would be used in tandem with input from the LSO attorneys assigned to the respective cases to identify if the outside counsel should be used for future cases.
- A means of regularly (every 12 months) surveying the market to ensure that what is being charged is appropriate and the rates are appropriate.

The liaisons also recommended that the Administrative Director provide to the Advisory Committee on Financial Accountability and Efficiency for the Judicial Branch an annual report on the use and cost of outside counsel for the committee's consideration and reporting to the council.

In response to these recommendations, the LSO protocol for the retention of outside counsel has been amended to require managing-attorney approval of the hiring of any outside counsel. Under that protocol, the managing attorney (1) reviews the recommendation to hire outside counsel and the expertise of the counsel suggested, and (2) confirms that no internal resource is available for the particular subject matter. The review and approval by the managing attorney are recorded in each file. In addition, on an annual basis, LSO will review the annual attorney fee surveys prepared by various organizations to ensure that the fees charged by outside counsel are appropriate and reasonable. LSO also will send to each court a survey after the conclusion of any significant litigation, arbitration, or proceedings before the Public Employment Relations Board, asking for the court's assessment of the specific legal representation provided by LSO and outside counsel.<sup>9</sup> The survey results will be used in an annual review of the use of outside counsel to ensure the delivery of quality and timely legal services. The LSO also will provide reports on the use and cost of outside counsel to the Advisory Committee on Financial Accountability and Efficiency at the request of the committee.

LSO attorneys located in field offices

In response to Judicial Council directive 117, the liaisons recommended that the AOC continue to support the existing practice of permitting attorney resources to reside in AOC field offices provided there is proper oversight and accountability. That Judicial Council directive states:

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts to adopt an operations model whereby attorneys generally are housed at one location with flexibility to adjust as necessary to meet court needs regionally, including regional demand for additional attorney support and smaller courts that have fewer staff for research and other legal services. The location where attorneys report to work should ensure proper supervision.

The liaison report states that, after reviewing the activities of LSO attorney staff located in the Sacramento and Burbank field offices, the liaisons believe that it is appropriate to have staff in these locations. The liaisons commented that such an arrangement is consistent with the staffing of many government agencies and private law firms.

<sup>9</sup> These surveys will be prepared for the individual case and tailored to the type and nature of the representation.

LSO has followed the recommendation of the liaisons and continues to house attorneys in field offices. Doing so allows more direct communication between LSO attorneys and the courts in their regions.<sup>10</sup> In addition, as recommended by the liaisons, to ensure oversight in the field offices for day-to-day accountability for off-site staff, LSO management requires staff in the field offices to report any absences both to their supervisors and to a designated local staff member, who would enter the appropriate information into the LSO calendar system.

Use of paralegal classifications

The LSO liaisons reviewed Judicial Council restructuring directive 112 and stated that they did not identify a specific need for a paralegal classification. That directive states:

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts to consider SEC Recommendation 7-72(f) and implement the necessary organizational and staffing changes, contingent upon the council's approval of an organizational structure for the AOC and taking into account the results of the classification and compensation studies to be completed.<sup>11</sup>

In their report, the liaisons state that paralegals in private law firms are typically used primarily for high-level administrative work and very minor legal-related work. Given that LSO already employs administrative staff to support LSO attorneys with administrative tasks, the liaisons indicate that to pursue the creation of a paralegal classification does not appear appropriate at this time.<sup>12</sup> Consistent with the LSO liaisons' recommendation, LSO does not employ paralegals.

Dual reporting

The liaison report discusses one other recommendation for LSO. That recommendation states: "All staff outside of LSO providing legal advice or legal-related services that require a law degree should establish a dual reporting relationship to LSO and their current office."<sup>13</sup> On this recommendation relating to attorneys within the AOC, it seems appropriate to wait for the results of the classification and compensation study. That study will expressly study the attorney

(f) Development and use of paralegal classifications, as found elsewhere in legal services throughout both the public and private sectors, could lead to the reduction of attorney positions in the Legal Services Office.

classifications and should provide useful information to assist in any efforts to redefine or change the relationship among the various groups and types of attorneys working for the AOC.

Policy and Cost Implications

LSO's mission continues to be to provide quality, timely, and ethical legal advice and services to the Chief Justice, the Judicial Council, council advisory committees and task forces, the appellate and trial courts, and the AOC. The restructuring of LSO will result in efficiencies and savings from, for example, the conversion of the position of assistant chief counsel into a senior managing attorney position and will continue to require a commitment of effort (for example, for staff and courts to conduct and complete user surveys).

Relevant Strategic Plan Goals and Operational Plan Objectives

Role of Chief Counsel of the Administrative Office of the Courts

The Chief Counsel of the Administrative Office of the Courts (AOC) is chief legal advisor to the Judicial Council of California and to the AOC and director of the AOC Legal Services Office, which provides comprehensive legal services to the AOC and to the appellate and trial courts. The Legal Services Office has two major areas of service: legal advisor and counsel to the Judicial Council and legal advisor and legal services provider to the appellate and trial courts.

I. Legal Advisor and Counsel to the Judicial Council

The role of legal advisor and counsel to the Judicial Council encompasses the legal services provided in support of the Chief Justice as Chair of the Judicial Council, the Judicial Council and its committees and task forces, and the AOC as staff agency to the Judicial Council.

In this capacity, the Chief Counsel is responsible for the following:

- Judicial Council Legal Support
  - Provide legal advice and briefings to the Chief Justice, the Judicial Council, and internal council committees on matters of importance to Judicial Council business.
  - Provide legal support and staffing of Judicial Council internal committees and council advisory committees.
  - Provide legal review of rules, forms, standards of judicial administration, and jury instructions for Judicial Council consideration.
  - Provide legal review of legislation and regulations for legal and programmatic impact in collaboration with the AOC Office of Governmental Affairs.
  - Provide legal support to the Chief Justice in evaluating and making recommendations on petitions for coordination of complex civil cases.
  - Facilitate filing of local court rules with the council and authorization by the Chief Justice of alternative effective dates of local rules.
  - Interact with other branches of government and external entities (e.g., Attorney General's Office, Commission on Judicial Performance, State Bar of California State Bar, Secretary of State, California Fair Political Practices Commission, etc.) on wide range of judicial administration legal issues.
  - Participate in meetings and conferences as the legal representative of the Judicial Council, AOC, and the judicial branch, as appropriate.
- AOC and Administrative Director of the Courts Legal Support
  - Provide legal advice and briefings to the Administrative Director, Division Chiefs, and Office Directors on legal issues affecting AOC programs and

- operations and on legal issues affecting planning, development, and review of AOC programs and policies.
  - Identify legal and risk management issues and collaborate on developing and implementing strategies for addressing issues.
  - Collaborate with other AOC offices on legislative, fiscal, facilities, technology, and other matters affecting the judicial branch to develop strategies for implementing new requirements and responding to emerging issues.
- Chief Counsel Administrative Activities
  - Manage the AOC Legal Services Office, including planning and directing work, providing legal policy direction, providing for internal staff development and training and succession planning, and participating in recruitment and selection of staff.
    - Provides general direction on the office’s priorities, policies, and operations.
    - Manages the Legal Services Office budget and resources; develops and implements strategies to meet increasing workload demands with limited resources.
    - Establishes and implements performance and development plans for direct reports.

II. Legal Advisor and Provider of Legal Services to the Appellate and Trial Courts and the AOC

In this capacity, the Chief Counsel provides direction and oversees the following programs and activities that provide legal services to the appellate and trial courts and to the AOC:

- Labor and Employment:
  - Responds to labor and employment issues in collaboration with the AOC Human Resources Services Office (HRSO), as appropriate.
  - Provides legal advice and guidance to minimize risk of labor disputes and employment litigation.
  - Provides legal advice in addressing sensitive personnel issues.
  - Assists HRSO in managing legal aspects of investigations of internal complaint of discrimination, harassment, retaliation, and other similar complaints, and advises about complaint resolution.
  - Drafts personnel policies to ensure compliance with applicable law and to avoid litigation.
  - Upon request, advises trial courts regarding labor relations matters (MOUs, labor relation rules, progressive discipline, personnel actions, etc.).
  - Provides ongoing support to HRSO in addressing labor relation issues for trial courts.

- Upon request, provides legal advice and representation for trial courts in labor arbitrations and complaints before the Public Employment Relations Board.
- Litigation Management:
  - Under the direction of the Administrative Director of the Courts and consistent with rules of court, manages and administers the Judicial Council's Litigation Management Program.
  - Staffs the council's Litigation Management Committee, which oversees claims and litigation against judicial branch entities in which the likely exposure is $100,000 or more or that raise issues of significance to the judicial branch.
  - Handles claims against judicial branch entities, making recommendations to the council's Litigation Management Committee for settlements at or above $100,000.
  - Manages litigation against judicial branch entities, including selecting and directing outside counsel retained to represent judicial branch entities and making recommendations to the council's Litigation Management Committee for settlements at or above $100,000.
  - Provides annual litigation reports to the Litigation Management Committee, the Judicial Council, the appellate and trial courts, and the AOC.
  - Manages affirmative litigation on behalf of the courts and AOC.
  - Provides for representation of courts and AOC at administrative law hearings and judicial proceedings.
- Legal Opinions:
  - Upon request, provides legal advice and opinions to court leaders on judicial administration issues.
  - Provides statewide legal advice and guidance to court leaders on issues of statewide importance.
  - Upon request, provides legal advice and opinions to AOC leadership on wide range of issues affecting the judicial branch and judicial branch entities.
- Real Estate and Transactions and Business Operations:
  - Provides legal services and support for court facilities-related transactions, including acquisition, construction, renovation, operation, and maintenance of court facilities.
  - Provides legal services and support for solicitation, contracting, and procurement of goods and services, including technology transactions.

- Provides legal advice on issues related to procurement, risk management, business administration, and operational initiatives.
- Provides legal advice for compliance audits under federal and state law.
- Provides legal advice on leases, contracts, and other documents requiring approval of the Administrative Director of the Courts.
- Oversees the selection, management, and evaluation of external legal resources/outside counsel retained to augment transactional services by the Legal Services Office.

Information on Judicial Council Directives

Council Directive 108

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council support SEC Recommendation 7-72(b) and direct the Administrative Director of the Courts to direct implementation of fundamental management practices to address underperformance of staff members and provide better supervision and allocation of work.

SEC Recommendation 7-72

The Legal Services Office’s current level of approximately 75 positions, including more than 50 attorney positions, should be reduced. To achieve the reduction, the following areas should be reviewed and considered, and appropriate actions taken:

(b) Despite the large number of management positions, management systems and processes are particularly lacking in the Legal Services Office. Implementing fundamental management practices to address the underperformance of staff members and provide better supervision and allocation of work should produce efficiencies that can result in reductions.

TASK

| X       | COMPLETED: Legal Services developed a matter tracking system as an efficient and effective way to track legal services office-wide and to support allocation of incoming work and supervision of open matters. |

Legal Services is improving upon past management practices and implementing new management practices for supervising staff and allocating work in light of this directive and the fact that the Legal Services staffing levels have been reduced over the past year from a total of 69 employees (including 50 attorneys) to a total of 50 employees (including 33 attorneys) through transfers, retirements, resignations, and the Voluntary Separation Initiative Program.

To address resource constraints office-wide and ensure appropriate supervision and allocation of work, Legal Services developed a matter tracking system, which was implemented on February 1, for a 90- day trial and evaluation period and then was fully implemented in April of 2013. The matter tracking system tracks matters from assignment to completion date, assigns a level of complexity for each matter, and provides a uniform tickler system for review of open matters. As part of the system, attorneys log all legal services matters (e.g., requests for legal advice and contracts) and Legal Services management receives weekly updates about open and closed matters and may review the assignment log at any time.

The matter tracking system has proven to be both an efficient and effective way to track legal services office-wide and to support appropriate allocation of incoming work and supervision of open matters.

With respect to the direction that fundamental management practices be implemented to address underperformance of staff members and provide better supervision and allocation of work, Legal Services supervisors and managers participated in the six-part management training program for council management and supervisors that was launched in January 2013. The six courses are intended to provide a framework for all council management teams to ensure consistent management practices across the organization on topics such as dealing with conflict and performance issues, providing tools to support staff, and performance management and evaluation.

Council Directive 109

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts to consider SEC Recommendation 7-72(c) and implement the necessary organizational and staffing changes, contingent upon the council's approval of an organizational structure for the AOC and taking into account the results of the classification and compensation studies to be completed.

SEC Recommendation 7-72

The Legal Services Office's current level of approximately 75 positions, including more than 50 attorney positions, should be reduced. To achieve the reduction, the following areas should be reviewed and considered, and appropriate actions taken:

(c) A large number of Legal Services Office positions are dedicated to supporting the Judicial Council and its various committees and task forces. Assigning responsibility for coordinating the AOC's Judicial Council support activities to the Executive Office under the direction of the Chief of Staff will lead to efficiencies that should result in reductions of Legal Services Office positions dedicated to these activities.

Although there is an inference that by moving this office under the Executive Office and the Chief of Staff there would be efficiencies that could result in reductions of positions, this has not been found to be true. In fact, staffing in Judicial Council Support Services has increased from 5 positions in 2012 to 7 positions in 2015 to support the Chief Justice and her renewed focus on ensuring that the Judicial Council is involved and active. |

Effective October 1, 2012, staff responsible for Judicial Council support (former Secretariats Office) were moved from the Legal Services Office into a new unit (Judicial Council Support Services) under the Leadership Services Division in accordance with the proposed organizational structure approved by the Judicial Council on August 31, 2012.

The Judicial Council Support Services Unit is now led by the Chief of Staff and is solely focused on the support of all activities of the Judicial Council. Although there is an inference that by moving this office under the Executive Office and the Chief of Staff there would be efficiencies that could result in reductions of positions, this has not been found to be true. In fact, staffing in Judicial Council Support Services has increased from 5 positions in 2012 to 7 positions in 2015 to support the Chief Justice and her renewed focus on ensuring that the Judicial Council is involved and active. This has resulted in a greater number of council meetings, increased Executive and Planning Committee meetings, and new initiatives focused on administrative director delegations and advisory committees, all resulting in a need for increased staff support.

It should be noted that this directive includes reference to AOC resources devoted to committees and task forces which is also referenced in Directive 114. As Directive 114 indicates, a determination as to the appropriate level of resources necessary for supporting council committees and task forces will be impacted by decisions made by the council as it relates to committee structure and annual agendas and the AOC classification and compensation study.

Legal Service's transactional attorneys have created a number of documents and templates for the Judicial Council and the other Judicial Branch entities that need to comply with the Judicial Branch Contracting Manual. Legal Services continues to review legislative changes that may impact Part 2.5 of the Public Contract Code (i.e., the Judicial Branch Contracting Law) and to also review changes to the State Contracting Manual to determine whether the Judicial Branch Contracting Manual needs to be modified. The reviews, documents and templates will improve and streamline the contracting process.

In addition, the Legal Services staff has been reduced to 42 regular employees and 2 temporary employees. Current Legal Services staff consists of 33 attorneys, exclusive of the Chief Counsel. The Transactions and Business Operations Unit has been reduced from 8 attorneys to 5 attorneys.

Additional organizational and staffing changes in Legal Services were reported as part of Directive 107.

At the time of the initial review in 2012 there were 77 staff members consisting of 50 attorneys in the Office of the General Counsel. Since that time the office has reorganized and is now the Legal Services office headed by a Chief Counsel. The office has been reduced to 41.7 staff members, a reduction of 45%. The number of attorneys were reduced to 33, a reduction of 34%, who work in concert with other offices to achieve a high level of efficiency and quality in all work performed. Through restructuring of the Office of General Counsel to the Legal Services Office, the Chief Counsel and the legal team serve as a collaborative resource to all Judicial Council Offices providing guidance and legal advice when requested.

As a result of the Classification and Compensation Study, completed in August 2015 by Fox Larson, it was determined that the Decision Band Method rating of the work performed by the Legal Services office was of a broader scope and criticality to the organization. Therefore, Fox Lawson developed a single level classification of attorney (Attorney II) that is applicable to the work performed by those attorneys within Legal Services and select jobs within the Center for Families, Children & the Courts. Additionally, Fox Lawson determined that the work performed by the CJER attorneys was at a lower level because the work performed was specific to the needs of CJER only and therefore, Fox Lawson developed a single level classification of attorney (Attorney I) that is only applicable to the work performed by those attorneys within CJER. Furthermore, the classification of attorney was removed from the Government Affairs as Fox Lawson determined that the work performed did not require an incumbent to be an attorney.

At the February 2013 Judicial Council meeting, Judicial Council liaisons to Legal Services, Justice Douglas Miller and Ms. Edith Matthai, were asked to take the lead on reviewing the cost-effectiveness of Legal Services current use of outside counsel in response to Judicial Council directive 122. While addressing this request, the liaisons concluded that additional Legal Services-related restructuring directives were appropriate for inclusion in the liaisons' review and would enable a more comprehensive evaluation.

In addition to reviewing the cost-effectiveness of the use of outside counsel, the liaisons' review was expanded to include defining the role of the Chief Counsel; evaluating the need for use of a paralegal classification; analyzing the use of LSO attorney staff in AOC field offices; and analyzing the current LSO organizational structure, LSO services, and attorney services provided by the AOC outside of LSO.

In June 2013, the Legal Services Judicial Council liaisons Justice Douglas Miller and Edith Matthai indicated that paralegals in private law firms are typically used primarily for high-level administrative work and very minor legal-related work. Given that Legal Services already employs administrative staff to support Legal Services attorneys with administrative tasks, the liaisons indicate that to pursue the creation of a paralegal classification does not appear appropriate at this time. Consistent with the LSO liaisons' recommendation, LSO does not employ paralegals.

Executive Summary

The Legal Services Office (LSO) is an office of the Administrative Office of the Courts (AOC) under the Judicial Council and Court Leadership Services Division. The mission of LSO is to provide quality, timely, and ethical legal advice and services to the Chief Justice, the Judicial Council, council advisory committees and task forces, the appellate and trial courts, and the AOC. The Judicial Council has charged the office with providing “consistent, comprehensive legal support and counsel to the courts.” (Judicial Council of Cal./Admin. Off. of Cts., Justice in Focus: The Strategic Plan for California’s Judicial Branch 2006–2012 (2006), p. 49.) In response to Judicial Council restructuring directives and the recommendations of the Judicial Council liaisons to LSO, the office has been significantly restructured. This informational report summarizes the activities undertaken in response to the June 2013 recommendations of the Judicial Council liaisons.

Previous Council Action

- In March 2011, Chief Justice Tani G. Cantil-Sakauye created the Strategic Evaluation Committee (SEC) to conduct an in-depth review of the Administrative Office of the Courts, the staff agency to the Judicial Council, with a view toward promoting transparency, accountability, and efficiency.

- On August 31, 2012, based on the SEC report and its recommendations, the Judicial Council approved AOC realignment directives and directed the Administrative Director to report on them.
- At the February 2013 council meeting, the council liaisons to LSO were asked to take the lead on reviewing the cost-effectiveness of LSO's current use of outside counsel in response to Judicial Council directive 122. While addressing this request, the liaisons concluded that additional LSO-related restructuring directives were appropriate for inclusion in the liaisons' review and would enable a more comprehensive evaluation.<sup>1</sup>
- In addition to reviewing the cost-effectiveness of the use of outside counsel, the liaisons' review was expanded to include defining the role of the Chief Counsel; evaluating the need for use of a paralegal classification; analyzing the use of LSO attorney staff in AOC field offices; and analyzing the current LSO organizational structure, LSO services, and attorney services provided by the AOC outside of LSO.
- In June 2013, the LSO liaisons recommended that the Judicial Council endorse the following recommendations to the Administrative Director:<sup>2</sup>
  1. LSO should be restructured with a management team comprising a Chief Counsel and three managing attorneys over three distinct service areas to ensure continued focus on serving the varied and diverse needs of LSO's clients, which include the appellate and trial courts, the Chief Justice, and the Judicial Council and its administrative agency, the AOC.
  2. LSO should implement a formal structure to solicit client feedback on a regular basis.
  3. The role of the Chief Counsel and the expectations for that role and areas of responsibility should be clearly defined to reflect the new organizational structure.
  4. The use of outside counsel is appropriate for specialized areas of law and litigation. The protocols for LSO's use of outside counsel should be strengthened to ensure that outside counsel is used in the most cost-effective manner.
  5. The AOC should continue to support the existing practice of permitting attorney resources to reside in AOC field offices provided there is proper oversight and accountability.

6. All staff outside of LSO providing legal advice or legal-related services that require a law degree should establish a dual reporting relationship to LSO and their current office.
  7. Given the recent retirement announcement by the current Chief Counsel, the successor Chief Counsel should be afforded the opportunity to implement the restructuring and the formation of the management team under the supervision of the Chief of Staff.
- At the June 2013 Judicial Council meeting, the council endorsed the liaisons' recommendations and agreed with the liaisons that modifications might be needed once these recommendations are implemented. It further directed the Administrative Director of the Courts to report back on implementation of the liaisons' recommendations by the end of March 2014.<sup>3</sup>

Methodology and Process

Restructuring within LSO has occurred as a result of the implementation of the liaisons' recommendations. As indicated below, six of the seven recommendations have been implemented, with one variance: (1) the LSO management structure has been modified; (2) the responsibilities of the Chief Counsel have been reviewed and clearly defined; (3) a process for periodically surveying court users of legal services is being put into place; (4) protocols have been developed for retention of outside counsel; (5) policies have been implemented to ensure appropriate oversight in the field offices for day-to-day accountability of LSO attorneys and staff in field offices; and (6) paralegals have not and are not currently employed by the LSO. Finally, although LSO works closely with other AOC offices with attorneys, the liaisons' recommendation that AOC attorneys outside of LSO who provide legal advice or legal related services that require a law degree should have a dual reporting relationship to LSO and their current office has not been implemented. As discussed below, for this recommendation, it seems appropriate to wait for the results of the pending classification and compensation study, which will expressly review the attorney classification.

Background on the Legal Services Office

The Legal Services Office provides a variety of services that historically, before state trial court funding, were provided by the counties and reflect the varying and expanded needs of judicial branch entities in today's environment.

Before trial court funding, the Legal Services Office comprised a small group of attorney staff primarily responsible for drafting council rules of court and forms and legislation, providing legal opinions to the council and the Administrative Director, and staffing council advisory committees and other similar bodies.<sup>4</sup> Following trial court funding, the role of LSO expanded to provide to the superior courts legal services that previously had been provided by county counsels' offices. LSO began providing trial courts with legal opinions on judicial administration issues. The council also approved the creation of a Litigation Management Program in 1999, adopting rules of court assigning the responsibility to LSO for the management of all claims and litigation against the courts.

After the enactment of the Trial Court Employment Protection and Governance Act of 2000, LSO began providing labor and employment legal services. LSO's areas of responsibility continued to expand—for example, with the establishment of a unit to provide transactional and business-related advice and services. After passage of the Trial Court Facilities Act of 2002, the Real Estate Unit was established to provide the facilities-related legal work resulting from this legislation. Finally, LSO attorney positions were established in the field offices to better facilitate the provision of legal services to the superior courts.

The growth of LSO and the expansion of the services it provides have significantly changed in the past few years. Based on the council directives and other developments, LSO has ceased to grow and has been notably reduced in size. This and other changes are described in detail below.

Implementing the directives

In implementing the Judicial Council directives to LSO and the council liaisons' recommendations, the Administrative Director of the Courts and the Chief of Staff worked closely with the Chief Counsel and her management team. They have also benefitted greatly from advice from the Judicial Council liaisons to LSO and other council members.

The liaison report specifically addresses implementation of the council liaisons' recommendations to the Administrative Director of the Courts, which were endorsed by the Judicial Council. The report presents each recommendation and summarizes the actions taken in response to the recommendations.

Legal Services Office restructuring

As part of their review, the liaisons considered Judicial Council restructuring directive 107 and recommended the following:

LSO should be restructured with a management team comprising a Chief Counsel and three managing attorneys over three distinct service areas to ensure continued focus on serving the varied and diverse needs of LSO's clients, which include the appellate and trial courts, the Chief Justice, and the Judicial Council and its administrative agency, the AOC.

<sup>4</sup> The office's name has changed over the years. In the 1990s, it was designated as Council and Legal Services. Subsequently, it became the Office of the General Counsel, and in 2012 the office was renamed the Legal Services Office.

Judicial Council restructuring directive 107 states:

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts to consider SEC Recommendation 7-72(a) and implement the necessary organizational and staffing changes, contingent upon the council's approval of an organizational structure for the AOC and taking into account the results of the classification and compensation studies to be completed.<sup>5</sup>

Since the release of the Strategic Evaluation Committee report in May 2012, the LSO workforce has been dramatically reduced from the 75 positions referenced in SEC recommendation 7-72(a) to a workforce of 44 positions as of the date of this report. LSO attorney staffing has been reduced from 50 attorneys to the current number of 32 attorneys, exclusive of the Chief Counsel. The LSO management team currently consists of 6 members, excluding the Chief Counsel, as compared to 9 noted in SEC recommendation 7-72(a).

The June 2013 Liaison Report states:

Given the current staffing levels of the LSO workforce and the critical nature of the legal services provided by LSO, we believe that a 10-member LSO attorney management team is appropriate for this office. However, to ensure accountability and clear lines of authority for the varied legal services provided by LSO, it is recommended that the LSO should be restructured to create a new executive leadership team comprising the Chief Counsel and three managing attorneys who lead three distinct areas of service . . . Additionally, in accordance with council directive 107, we recommend that the position of Assistant Chief Counsel be reclassified as a managing attorney position. It is also recommended that one of the managing attorney positions be classified as a senior managing attorney to provide backup and support as second in command to the Chief Counsel. It appears appropriate that the managing attorney leading Judicial Council Services and Legal Opinions would be the best position for second in command.

(a) In addition to the General Counsel, there are nine management level attorney positions in the Legal Services Office, including the Assistant General Counsel, three Managing Attorneys, and five Supervising Attorneys. This is an excessive number of management positions, which should be reduced. The position of Assistant General Counsel could be eliminated. One managing attorney could be assigned to manage each of the two major functional components of the division, house counsel, and Judicial Council services, with each managing attorney reporting directly to the Chief Counsel.

The new structure provides a three-to-one reporting structure under the Chief Counsel and shifts the responsibility for regular day-to-day management workload from the Chief Counsel to the managing attorneys. This shift of direct responsibility for LSO daily activities is an acknowledgement that the Chief Counsel should be involved in providing legal input and expertise to the most critical legal issues for the branch versus being immersed in routine LSO workload. This structure will require continuous communication between the Chief Counsel and the three managing attorneys to ensure that no silos develop in the office. Similar to partners in a law firm, the Chief Counsel and the managing attorneys should meet regularly to share information and make decisions on projects, priorities, and resources that further the goals of the office as a whole. (Judicial Council of Cal., supra, at p. 2.)

Under the new Chief Counsel, with the support of the Administrative Director of the Courts and the Chief of Staff, LSO has taken measures that have substantially implemented the structure proposed by the liaisons. The LSO attorney management team, excluding the Chief Counsel, consists of six members as of March 2014. The position of Assistant Chief Counsel was eliminated after the attorney formerly holding that position retired in 2013. As recommended by the liaisons, instead of hiring a new Assistant Chief Counsel, a managing attorney was promoted in 2014 to the position of senior managing attorney to provide support and backup to the Chief Counsel. Because of retirements, no other managing attorneys are currently employed in LSO. However, to provide the level and structure of leadership necessary to manage the office in the manner recommended by the liaisons, recruitment is under way for two additional managing attorneys. After completion of this hiring process, LSO will have an executive management structure as envisioned by the liaisons, with a Chief Counsel and three managing attorneys, one of whom is designated as a senior managing attorney.

LSO provides legal services in two primary areas: (1) services provided to the council, to the Chief Justice as chair of the council, and to the Administrative Director of the Courts and the AOC as the administrative arm of the council; and (2) services provided to the appellate and trial courts. LSO is currently structured to provide legal services in these areas by organizing its attorneys into six units:

- Rules and Projects Unit
- Legal Opinion Unit
- Transactions and Business Operations Unit
- Real Estate Unit
- Litigation Management Unit
- Labor and Employment Unit

In terms of LSO's management structure, the liaison report recommends that LSO be restructured into three areas of services: (1) Judicial Council Services and Legal Opinions (a merger of the Rules and Projects and Legal Opinion Units); (2) Transactions and Business Operations (incorporating Real Estate into the Transactions and Business Operations Unit); and (3) Litigation Management and Labor and Employment (a merger of the two formerly separate units).

The liaison report further recommends that the new units continue to serve both client groups—the appellate and trial courts along with the Judicial Council, Chief Justice as chair of the council, Administrative Director of the Courts, and AOC—with the responsibility of supervising attorneys divided between the two client groups. LSO is in the process of restructuring its activities into the three organization units described above. Once the full complement of managing attorneys is in place, each will manage one of the combined units. After careful consideration, however, the Administrative Director and Chief of Staff support a variance from the liaison recommendations with respect to the supervisory-level responsibilities. Because the quantity of legal work performed for the courts differs from that for the Judicial Council/AOC clients and because of the need to provide clients with specialized skills and knowledge in the individual subject-matter areas, LSO will continue to be structured along subject-matter groups rather than client groups. The purpose of this structure is to provide better service to clients by providing them with immediate access to supervisors and attorneys with subject-matter expertise specific to the legal issues and inquiries presented.<sup>6</sup>

The liaison report further states:

It is intended that the Chief Counsel and the three managing attorneys hold overall management responsibility, with the supervising/senior attorneys charged with carrying out senior management’s directives for the specific subject matter and client assignments. The level of experience and precise classification for these supervising/senior attorneys should be determined as a part of the internal restructuring and reviewed as a part of the classification and compensation study.

The report’s additional recommendations regarding the management structure will be implemented once the managing attorney positions are filled. As indicated in the report, the level of experience and precise classification for the supervising/senior attorney structure also partially depend on the classification and compensation study.

Role of Chief Counsel

The liaisons considered Judicial Council restructuring directive 115 and recommended that the role of the Chief Counsel and the expectations for that role, along with the areas of responsibility, should be clearly defined to reflect the new organizational structure.

Judicial Council restructuring directive 115 states:

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts, as part of the review of the AOC organizational structure, to review current responsibilities and clearly define the role of the Chief Counsel.

As part of their report to the Judicial Council, the liaisons included an attachment clearly defining the responsibilities and role of the Chief Counsel of the Administrative Office of the Courts.<sup>7</sup>

The description has been adopted and specifies that the Chief Counsel is chief legal advisor to the Judicial Council and to the AOC and office chief of the AOC Legal Services Office, which provides comprehensive legal services to the appellate and trial courts. It adds that the Legal Services Office has two major areas of service: legal advisor and counsel to the Judicial Council and legal advisor and legal services provider to the appellate and trial courts. In these capacities, the Chief Counsel has responsibilities that are enumerated in detail.

Survey of users of LSO services

The liaisons considered Judicial Council restructuring directive 120 and recommended that, to ensure that the appropriate level of client service is provided, particularly in the area of legal opinions, a formal procedure be developed and implemented in LSO to solicit client feedback.

Judicial Council restructuring directive 120 states:

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts that court users of legal services should be surveyed periodically to determine if such services are performed in a timely and satisfactory manner.

In response to this recommendation, a draft survey has been developed to ask court users for their evaluations of and suggestions for improvements to legal services provided by each of the six LSO units.<sup>8</sup> Because of workload issues and staffing concerns, it is anticipated that the survey will be distributed to the courts in late 2014 as a pilot. If the survey proves useful and courts do not find it overly burdensome, LSO will continue to survey the courts on an annual or biennial basis.

Use of outside counsel

With respect to Judicial Council directive 122 regarding the use of outside counsel, the Judicial Council endorsed the liaisons' recommendation that (1) the use of outside counsel is appropriate for specialized areas of law and litigation; and (2) protocols for LSO's use of outside counsel

should be strengthened to ensure that outside counsel is used in the most cost-effective manner. That directive states:

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts to order an independent review of the Office of the General Counsel's use, selection, and management of outside legal counsel to determine whether outside counsel is being utilized in a cost effective manner. Before initiating the independent review, the Administrative Director of the Courts must provide a proposal with options for conducting the review, including the associated costs.

The liaisons undertook the review of the use of outside counsel and reported back to the council as follows:

Based on our experience in the legal field and after conferring with colleagues, we conclude that the use of outside counsel is appropriate and in some cases mandated, providing valuable legal resources for the varying needs of LSO relating to specific subject areas or broad-based branch initiatives (i.e., courthouse transfers). Outside legal counsel provides LSO with sufficient flexibility to meet the changing needs of the branch in an efficient and cost-effective manner.

(Judicial Council of Cal., supra, at p. 10.)

The liaison report also concluded, once it was confirmed that there was a legitimate need to use outside counsel, that a full study of past expenses would be extraordinarily time-consuming and would provide little benefit. Because the goal was to be certain that future expenditures are warranted, the liaisons recommended placing the responsibility for the retention and monitoring of outside counsel with the managing attorney in each area of practice. The liaisons added that (1) there should be written justification for the retention, and the managing attorney should be responsible for ensuring that the hourly rates and time spent are reasonable; (2) at the close of representation a short client feedback report should be obtained, and the managing attorney should evaluate the service provided from LSO's perspective; and (3) an annual report on the use of outside counsel should be provided to the Judicial Council.

Thus, the liaisons recommended that LSO develop:

- A structure in which each managing attorney is responsible for the approval of and justification for using outside counsel based on the area of expertise needed or resource requirements.
- A means for conducting an examination of the cost-effectiveness of using outside counsel versus potentially hiring attorney resources based on specific projects and the duration of legal assistance needed.
- A checklist that must be completed before initiating a contract with outside counsel to confirm that no internal LSO resources are available for the subject-matter area.

- A means of following up with the courts that receive services to gather their input on the services provided by outside counsel through an e-mail questionnaire or survey. This information would be used in tandem with input from the LSO attorneys assigned to the respective cases to identify if the outside counsel should be used for future cases.
- A means of regularly (every 12 months) surveying the market to ensure that what is being charged is appropriate and the rates are appropriate.

The liaisons also recommended that the Administrative Director provide to the Advisory Committee on Financial Accountability and Efficiency for the Judicial Branch an annual report on the use and cost of outside counsel for the committee's consideration and reporting to the council.

In response to these recommendations, the LSO protocol for the retention of outside counsel has been amended to require managing-attorney approval of the hiring of any outside counsel. Under that protocol, the managing attorney (1) reviews the recommendation to hire outside counsel and the expertise of the counsel suggested, and (2) confirms that no internal resource is available for the particular subject matter. The review and approval by the managing attorney are recorded in each file. In addition, on an annual basis, LSO will review the annual attorney fee surveys prepared by various organizations to ensure that the fees charged by outside counsel are appropriate and reasonable. LSO also will send to each court a survey after the conclusion of any significant litigation, arbitration, or proceedings before the Public Employment Relations Board, asking for the court's assessment of the specific legal representation provided by LSO and outside counsel.<sup>9</sup> The survey results will be used in an annual review of the use of outside counsel to ensure the delivery of quality and timely legal services. The LSO also will provide reports on the use and cost of outside counsel to the Advisory Committee on Financial Accountability and Efficiency at the request of the committee.

LSO attorneys located in field offices

In response to Judicial Council directive 117, the liaisons recommended that the AOC continue to support the existing practice of permitting attorney resources to reside in AOC field offices provided there is proper oversight and accountability. That Judicial Council directive states:

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts to adopt an operations model whereby attorneys generally are housed at one location with flexibility to adjust as necessary to meet court needs regionally, including regional demand for additional attorney support and smaller courts that have fewer staff for research and other legal services. The location where attorneys report to work should ensure proper supervision.

The liaison report states that, after reviewing the activities of LSO attorney staff located in the Sacramento and Burbank field offices, the liaisons believe that it is appropriate to have staff in these locations. The liaisons commented that such an arrangement is consistent with the staffing of many government agencies and private law firms.

LSO has followed the recommendation of the liaisons and continues to house attorneys in field offices. Doing so allows more direct communication between LSO attorneys and the courts in their regions.<sup>10</sup> In addition, as recommended by the liaisons, to ensure oversight in the field offices for day-to-day accountability for off-site staff, LSO management requires staff in the field offices to report any absences both to their supervisors and to a designated local staff member, who would enter the appropriate information into the LSO calendar system.

Use of paralegal classifications

The LSO liaisons reviewed Judicial Council restructuring directive 112 and stated that they did not identify a specific need for a paralegal classification. That directive states:

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts to consider SEC Recommendation 7-72(f) and implement the necessary organizational and staffing changes, contingent upon the council's approval of an organizational structure for the AOC and taking into account the results of the classification and compensation studies to be completed.<sup>11</sup>

In their report, the liaisons state that paralegals in private law firms are typically used primarily for high-level administrative work and very minor legal-related work. Given that LSO already employs administrative staff to support LSO attorneys with administrative tasks, the liaisons indicate that to pursue the creation of a paralegal classification does not appear appropriate at this time.<sup>12</sup> Consistent with the LSO liaisons' recommendation, LSO does not employ paralegals.

Dual reporting

The liaison report discusses one other recommendation for LSO. That recommendation states: "All staff outside of LSO providing legal advice or legal-related services that require a law degree should establish a dual reporting relationship to LSO and their current office."<sup>13</sup> On this recommendation relating to attorneys within the AOC, it seems appropriate to wait for the results of the classification and compensation study. That study will expressly study the attorney

(f) Development and use of paralegal classifications, as found elsewhere in legal services throughout both the public and private sectors, could lead to the reduction of attorney positions in the Legal Services Office.

classifications and should provide useful information to assist in any efforts to redefine or change the relationship among the various groups and types of attorneys working for the AOC.

Policy and Cost Implications

LSO's mission continues to be to provide quality, timely, and ethical legal advice and services to the Chief Justice, the Judicial Council, council advisory committees and task forces, the appellate and trial courts, and the AOC. The restructuring of LSO will result in efficiencies and savings from, for example, the conversion of the position of assistant chief counsel into a senior managing attorney position and will continue to require a commitment of effort (for example, for staff and courts to conduct and complete user surveys).

Relevant Strategic Plan Goals and Operational Plan Objectives

Judicial Council strategic Goal VI.C.1 ("Provide a high-quality administrative legal infrastructure to provide consistent, comprehensive legal support and counsel to the courts").

Role of Chief Counsel of the Administrative Office of the Courts

The Chief Counsel of the Administrative Office of the Courts (AOC) is chief legal advisor to the Judicial Council of California and to the AOC and director of the AOC Legal Services Office, which provides comprehensive legal services to the AOC and to the appellate and trial courts. The Legal Services Office has two major areas of service: legal advisor and counsel to the Judicial Council and legal advisor and legal services provider to the appellate and trial courts.

I. Legal Advisor and Counsel to the Judicial Council

The role of legal advisor and counsel to the Judicial Council encompasses the legal services provided in support of the Chief Justice as Chair of the Judicial Council, the Judicial Council and its committees and task forces, and the AOC as staff agency to the Judicial Council.

In this capacity, the Chief Counsel is responsible for the following:

- Judicial Council Legal Support
  - Provide legal advice and briefings to the Chief Justice, the Judicial Council, and internal council committees on matters of importance to Judicial Council business.
  - Provide legal support and staffing of Judicial Council internal committees and council advisory committees.
  - Provide legal review of rules, forms, standards of judicial administration, and jury instructions for Judicial Council consideration.
  - Provide legal review of legislation and regulations for legal and programmatic impact in collaboration with the AOC Office of Governmental Affairs.
  - Provide legal support to the Chief Justice in evaluating and making recommendations on petitions for coordination of complex civil cases.
  - Facilitate filing of local court rules with the council and authorization by the Chief Justice of alternative effective dates of local rules.
  - Interact with other branches of government and external entities (e.g., Attorney General's Office, Commission on Judicial Performance, State Bar of California State Bar, Secretary of State, California Fair Political Practices Commission, etc.) on wide range of judicial administration legal issues.
  - Participate in meetings and conferences as the legal representative of the Judicial Council, AOC, and the judicial branch, as appropriate.
- AOC and Administrative Director of the Courts Legal Support
  - Provide legal advice and briefings to the Administrative Director, Division Chiefs, and Office Directors on legal issues affecting AOC programs and

- operations and on legal issues affecting planning, development, and review of AOC programs and policies.
- Identify legal and risk management issues and collaborate on developing and implementing strategies for addressing issues.
  - Collaborate with other AOC offices on legislative, fiscal, facilities, technology, and other matters affecting the judicial branch to develop strategies for implementing new requirements and responding to emerging issues.
  - Chief Counsel Administrative Activities
    - Manage the AOC Legal Services Office, including planning and directing work, providing legal policy direction, providing for internal staff development and training and succession planning, and participating in recruitment and selection of staff.
      - Provides general direction on the office's priorities, policies, and operations.
      - Manages the Legal Services Office budget and resources; develops and implements strategies to meet increasing workload demands with limited resources.
      - Establishes and implements performance and development plans for direct reports.

II. Legal Advisor and Provider of Legal Services to the Appellate and Trial Courts and the AOC

In this capacity, the Chief Counsel provides direction and oversees the following programs and activities that provide legal services to the appellate and trial courts and to the AOC:

- Labor and Employment:
  - Responds to labor and employment issues in collaboration with the AOC Human Resources Services Office (HRSO), as appropriate.
  - Provides legal advice and guidance to minimize risk of labor disputes and employment litigation.
  - Provides legal advice in addressing sensitive personnel issues.
  - Assists HRSO in managing legal aspects of investigations of internal complaint of discrimination, harassment, retaliation, and other similar complaints, and advises about complaint resolution.
  - Drafts personnel policies to ensure compliance with applicable law and to avoid litigation.
  - Upon request, advises trial courts regarding labor relations matters (MOUs, labor relation rules, progressive discipline, personnel actions, etc.).
  - Provides ongoing support to HRSO in addressing labor relation issues for trial courts.

- Upon request, provides legal advice and representation for trial courts in labor arbitrations and complaints before the Public Employment Relations Board.
- Litigation Management:
  - Under the direction of the Administrative Director of the Courts and consistent with rules of court, manages and administers the Judicial Council's Litigation Management Program.
  - Staffs the council's Litigation Management Committee, which oversees claims and litigation against judicial branch entities in which the likely exposure is $100,000 or more or that raise issues of significance to the judicial branch.
  - Handles claims against judicial branch entities, making recommendations to the council's Litigation Management Committee for settlements at or above $100,000.
  - Manages litigation against judicial branch entities, including selecting and directing outside counsel retained to represent judicial branch entities and making recommendations to the council's Litigation Management Committee for settlements at or above $100,000.
  - Provides annual litigation reports to the Litigation Management Committee, the Judicial Council, the appellate and trial courts, and the AOC.
  - Manages affirmative litigation on behalf of the courts and AOC.
  - Provides for representation of courts and AOC at administrative law hearings and judicial proceedings.
- Legal Opinions:
  - Upon request, provides legal advice and opinions to court leaders on judicial administration issues.
  - Provides statewide legal advice and guidance to court leaders on issues of statewide importance.
  - Upon request, provides legal advice and opinions to AOC leadership on wide range of issues affecting the judicial branch and judicial branch entities.
- Real Estate and Transactions and Business Operations:
  - Provides legal services and support for court facilities-related transactions, including acquisition, construction, renovation, operation, and maintenance of court facilities.
  - Provides legal services and support for solicitation, contracting, and procurement of goods and services, including technology transactions.

- Provides legal advice on issues related to procurement, risk management, business administration, and operational initiatives.
- Provides legal advice for compliance audits under federal and state law.
- Provides legal advice on leases, contracts, and other documents requiring approval of the Administrative Director of the Courts.
- Oversees the selection, management, and evaluation of external legal resources/outside counsel retained to augment transactional services by the Legal Services Office.

Council Directive 113

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council support SEC Recommendation 7-73 with no further action. The telecommuting status of one position has ended and, as of September 7, 2012, the telecommuting status of the second position will end.

SEC Recommendation 7-73

There currently are at least two positions in the Legal Services Office that violate the AOC's telecommuting policy. These should be terminated immediately, resulting in reductions. Nor should telecommuting be permitted for supervising attorneys in this division.

COMPLETED: As reported at the April 25, 2014 council meeting, roles and responsibilities for the Chief Counsel had been adopted specifying that the Chief Counsel is chief legal advisor to the Judicial Council and to the AOC and office chief of the council's Legal Services, providing comprehensive legal services to the appellate and trial courts.

At the February 2013 Judicial Council meeting, Judicial Council liaisons to Legal Services, Justice Douglas Miller and Ms. Edith Matthai, were asked to take the lead on reviewing the cost-effectiveness of Legal Services current use of outside counsel in response to Judicial Council directive 122. While addressing this request, the liaisons concluded that additional Legal Services-related restructuring directives were appropriate for inclusion in the liaisons' review and would enable a more comprehensive evaluation.

In addition to reviewing the cost-effectiveness of the use of outside counsel, the liaisons' review was expanded to include defining the role of the Chief Counsel; evaluating the need for use of a paralegal classification; analyzing the use of LSO attorney staff in AOC field offices; and analyzing the current Legal Services organizational structure, LSO services, and attorney services provided by the AOC outside of Legal Services.

In a report to the judicial council in June 2013, the liaisons considered recommended that the role of the Chief Counsel and the expectations for that role, along with the areas of responsibility, should be clearly defined to reflect the new organizational structure. As part of their report to the Judicial Council, the liaisons included an attachment clearly defining the responsibilities and role of the Chief Counsel of the Administrative Office of the Courts.

In a report to council at the April 25, 2014 council meeting, the Administrative Director and Chief Counsel reported that the description had been adopted and specified that the Chief Counsel is chief legal advisor to the Judicial Council and to the AOC and office chief of the council's Legal Services, which provides comprehensive legal services to the appellate and trial courts. It adds that the Legal Services has two major areas of service: legal advisor and counsel to the Judicial Council and legal advisor and legal services provider to the appellate and trial courts. In these capacities, the Chief Counsel has responsibilities that are enumerated in detail in the description included as an attachment to the April 25, 2014, report to council.

Executive Summary

The Legal Services Office (LSO) is an office of the Administrative Office of the Courts (AOC) under the Judicial Council and Court Leadership Services Division. The mission of LSO is to provide quality, timely, and ethical legal advice and services to the Chief Justice, the Judicial Council, council advisory committees and task forces, the appellate and trial courts, and the AOC. The Judicial Council has charged the office with providing “consistent, comprehensive legal support and counsel to the courts.” (Judicial Council of Cal./Admin. Off. of Cts., Justice in Focus: The Strategic Plan for California’s Judicial Branch 2006–2012 (2006), p. 49.) In response to Judicial Council restructuring directives and the recommendations of the Judicial Council liaisons to LSO, the office has been significantly restructured. This informational report summarizes the activities undertaken in response to the June 2013 recommendations of the Judicial Council liaisons.

Previous Council Action

- In March 2011, Chief Justice Tani G. Cantil-Sakauye created the Strategic Evaluation Committee (SEC) to conduct an in-depth review of the Administrative Office of the Courts, the staff agency to the Judicial Council, with a view toward promoting transparency, accountability, and efficiency.

- On August 31, 2012, based on the SEC report and its recommendations, the Judicial Council approved AOC realignment directives and directed the Administrative Director to report on them.
- At the February 2013 council meeting, the council liaisons to LSO were asked to take the lead on reviewing the cost-effectiveness of LSO's current use of outside counsel in response to Judicial Council directive 122. While addressing this request, the liaisons concluded that additional LSO-related restructuring directives were appropriate for inclusion in the liaisons' review and would enable a more comprehensive evaluation.<sup>1</sup>
- In addition to reviewing the cost-effectiveness of the use of outside counsel, the liaisons' review was expanded to include defining the role of the Chief Counsel; evaluating the need for use of a paralegal classification; analyzing the use of LSO attorney staff in AOC field offices; and analyzing the current LSO organizational structure, LSO services, and attorney services provided by the AOC outside of LSO.
- In June 2013, the LSO liaisons recommended that the Judicial Council endorse the following recommendations to the Administrative Director:<sup>2</sup>
  1. LSO should be restructured with a management team comprising a Chief Counsel and three managing attorneys over three distinct service areas to ensure continued focus on serving the varied and diverse needs of LSO's clients, which include the appellate and trial courts, the Chief Justice, and the Judicial Council and its administrative agency, the AOC.
  2. LSO should implement a formal structure to solicit client feedback on a regular basis.
  3. The role of the Chief Counsel and the expectations for that role and areas of responsibility should be clearly defined to reflect the new organizational structure.
  4. The use of outside counsel is appropriate for specialized areas of law and litigation. The protocols for LSO's use of outside counsel should be strengthened to ensure that outside counsel is used in the most cost-effective manner.
  5. The AOC should continue to support the existing practice of permitting attorney resources to reside in AOC field offices provided there is proper oversight and accountability.

6. All staff outside of LSO providing legal advice or legal-related services that require a law degree should establish a dual reporting relationship to LSO and their current office.
  7. Given the recent retirement announcement by the current Chief Counsel, the successor Chief Counsel should be afforded the opportunity to implement the restructuring and the formation of the management team under the supervision of the Chief of Staff.
- At the June 2013 Judicial Council meeting, the council endorsed the liaisons' recommendations and agreed with the liaisons that modifications might be needed once these recommendations are implemented. It further directed the Administrative Director of the Courts to report back on implementation of the liaisons' recommendations by the end of March 2014.<sup>3</sup>

Methodology and Process

Restructuring within LSO has occurred as a result of the implementation of the liaisons' recommendations. As indicated below, six of the seven recommendations have been implemented, with one variance: (1) the LSO management structure has been modified; (2) the responsibilities of the Chief Counsel have been reviewed and clearly defined; (3) a process for periodically surveying court users of legal services is being put into place; (4) protocols have been developed for retention of outside counsel; (5) policies have been implemented to ensure appropriate oversight in the field offices for day-to-day accountability of LSO attorneys and staff in field offices; and (6) paralegals have not and are not currently employed by the LSO. Finally, although LSO works closely with other AOC offices with attorneys, the liaisons' recommendation that AOC attorneys outside of LSO who provide legal advice or legal related services that require a law degree should have a dual reporting relationship to LSO and their current office has not been implemented. As discussed below, for this recommendation, it seems appropriate to wait for the results of the pending classification and compensation study, which will expressly review the attorney classification.

Background on the Legal Services Office

The Legal Services Office provides a variety of services that historically, before state trial court funding, were provided by the counties and reflect the varying and expanded needs of judicial branch entities in today's environment.

Before trial court funding, the Legal Services Office comprised a small group of attorney staff primarily responsible for drafting council rules of court and forms and legislation, providing legal opinions to the council and the Administrative Director, and staffing council advisory committees and other similar bodies.<sup>4</sup> Following trial court funding, the role of LSO expanded to provide to the superior courts legal services that previously had been provided by county counsels' offices. LSO began providing trial courts with legal opinions on judicial administration issues. The council also approved the creation of a Litigation Management Program in 1999, adopting rules of court assigning the responsibility to LSO for the management of all claims and litigation against the courts.

After the enactment of the Trial Court Employment Protection and Governance Act of 2000, LSO began providing labor and employment legal services. LSO's areas of responsibility continued to expand—for example, with the establishment of a unit to provide transactional and business-related advice and services. After passage of the Trial Court Facilities Act of 2002, the Real Estate Unit was established to provide the facilities-related legal work resulting from this legislation. Finally, LSO attorney positions were established in the field offices to better facilitate the provision of legal services to the superior courts.

The growth of LSO and the expansion of the services it provides have significantly changed in the past few years. Based on the council directives and other developments, LSO has ceased to grow and has been notably reduced in size. This and other changes are described in detail below.

Implementing the directives

In implementing the Judicial Council directives to LSO and the council liaisons' recommendations, the Administrative Director of the Courts and the Chief of Staff worked closely with the Chief Counsel and her management team. They have also benefitted greatly from advice from the Judicial Council liaisons to LSO and other council members.

The liaison report specifically addresses implementation of the council liaisons' recommendations to the Administrative Director of the Courts, which were endorsed by the Judicial Council. The report presents each recommendation and summarizes the actions taken in response to the recommendations.

Legal Services Office restructuring

As part of their review, the liaisons considered Judicial Council restructuring directive 107 and recommended the following:

LSO should be restructured with a management team comprising a Chief Counsel and three managing attorneys over three distinct service areas to ensure continued focus on serving the varied and diverse needs of LSO's clients, which include the appellate and trial courts, the Chief Justice, and the Judicial Council and its administrative agency, the AOC.

---

<sup>4</sup> The office's name has changed over the years. In the 1990s, it was designated as Council and Legal Services. Subsequently, it became the Office of the General Counsel, and in 2012 the office was renamed the Legal Services Office.

(Judicial Council of Cal., supra, at p. 2.)

Judicial Council restructuring directive 107 states:

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts to consider SEC Recommendation 7-72(a) and implement the necessary organizational and staffing changes, contingent upon the council's approval of an organizational structure for the AOC and taking into account the results of the classification and compensation studies to be completed.<sup>5</sup>

Since the release of the Strategic Evaluation Committee report in May 2012, the LSO workforce has been dramatically reduced from the 75 positions referenced in SEC recommendation 7-72(a) to a workforce of 44 positions as of the date of this report. LSO attorney staffing has been reduced from 50 attorneys to the current number of 32 attorneys, exclusive of the Chief Counsel. The LSO management team currently consists of 6 members, excluding the Chief Counsel, as compared to 9 noted in SEC recommendation 7-72(a).

The June 2013 Liaison Report states:

Given the current staffing levels of the LSO workforce and the critical nature of the legal services provided by LSO, we believe that a 10-member LSO attorney management team is appropriate for this office. However, to ensure accountability and clear lines of authority for the varied legal services provided by LSO, it is recommended that the LSO should be restructured to create a new executive leadership team comprising the Chief Counsel and three managing attorneys who lead three distinct areas of service . . . Additionally, in accordance with council directive 107, we recommend that the position of Assistant Chief Counsel be reclassified as a managing attorney position. It is also recommended that one of the managing attorney positions be classified as a senior managing attorney to provide backup and support as second in command to the Chief Counsel. It appears appropriate that the managing attorney leading Judicial Council Services and Legal Opinions would be the best position for second in command.

(a) In addition to the General Counsel, there are nine management level attorney positions in the Legal Services Office, including the Assistant General Counsel, three Managing Attorneys, and five Supervising Attorneys. This is an excessive number of management positions, which should be reduced. The position of Assistant General Counsel could be eliminated. One managing attorney could be assigned to manage each of the two major functional components of the division, house counsel, and Judicial Council services, with each managing attorney reporting directly to the Chief Counsel.

The new structure provides a three-to-one reporting structure under the Chief Counsel and shifts the responsibility for regular day-to-day management workload from the Chief Counsel to the managing attorneys. This shift of direct responsibility for LSO daily activities is an acknowledgement that the Chief Counsel should be involved in providing legal input and expertise to the most critical legal issues for the branch versus being immersed in routine LSO workload. This structure will require continuous communication between the Chief Counsel and the three managing attorneys to ensure that no silos develop in the office. Similar to partners in a law firm, the Chief Counsel and the managing attorneys should meet regularly to share information and make decisions on projects, priorities, and resources that further the goals of the office as a whole. (Judicial Council of Cal., supra, at p. 2.)

Under the new Chief Counsel, with the support of the Administrative Director of the Courts and the Chief of Staff, LSO has taken measures that have substantially implemented the structure proposed by the liaisons. The LSO attorney management team, excluding the Chief Counsel, consists of six members as of March 2014. The position of Assistant Chief Counsel was eliminated after the attorney formerly holding that position retired in 2013. As recommended by the liaisons, instead of hiring a new Assistant Chief Counsel, a managing attorney was promoted in 2014 to the position of senior managing attorney to provide support and backup to the Chief Counsel. Because of retirements, no other managing attorneys are currently employed in LSO. However, to provide the level and structure of leadership necessary to manage the office in the manner recommended by the liaisons, recruitment is under way for two additional managing attorneys. After completion of this hiring process, LSO will have an executive management structure as envisioned by the liaisons, with a Chief Counsel and three managing attorneys, one of whom is designated as a senior managing attorney.

LSO provides legal services in two primary areas: (1) services provided to the council, to the Chief Justice as chair of the council, and to the Administrative Director of the Courts and the AOC as the administrative arm of the council; and (2) services provided to the appellate and trial courts. LSO is currently structured to provide legal services in these areas by organizing its attorneys into six units:

- Rules and Projects Unit
- Legal Opinion Unit
- Transactions and Business Operations Unit
- Real Estate Unit
- Litigation Management Unit
- Labor and Employment Unit

In terms of LSO's management structure, the liaison report recommends that LSO be restructured into three areas of services: (1) Judicial Council Services and Legal Opinions (a merger of the Rules and Projects and Legal Opinion Units); (2) Transactions and Business Operations (incorporating Real Estate into the Transactions and Business Operations Unit); and (3) Litigation Management and Labor and Employment (a merger of the two formerly separate units).

The liaison report further recommends that the new units continue to serve both client groups—the appellate and trial courts along with the Judicial Council, Chief Justice as chair of the council, Administrative Director of the Courts, and AOC—with the responsibility of supervising attorneys divided between the two client groups. LSO is in the process of restructuring its activities into the three organization units described above. Once the full complement of managing attorneys is in place, each will manage one of the combined units. After careful consideration, however, the Administrative Director and Chief of Staff support a variance from the liaison recommendations with respect to the supervisory-level responsibilities. Because the quantity of legal work performed for the courts differs from that for the Judicial Council/AOC clients and because of the need to provide clients with specialized skills and knowledge in the individual subject-matter areas, LSO will continue to be structured along subject-matter groups rather than client groups. The purpose of this structure is to provide better service to clients by providing them with immediate access to supervisors and attorneys with subject-matter expertise specific to the legal issues and inquiries presented.<sup>6</sup>

The liaison report further states:

It is intended that the Chief Counsel and the three managing attorneys hold overall management responsibility, with the supervising/senior attorneys charged with carrying out senior management’s directives for the specific subject matter and client assignments. The level of experience and precise classification for these supervising/senior attorneys should be determined as a part of the internal restructuring and reviewed as a part of the classification and compensation study.

The report’s additional recommendations regarding the management structure will be implemented once the managing attorney positions are filled. As indicated in the report, the level of experience and precise classification for the supervising/senior attorney structure also partially depend on the classification and compensation study.

Role of Chief Counsel

The liaisons considered Judicial Council restructuring directive 115 and recommended that the role of the Chief Counsel and the expectations for that role, along with the areas of responsibility, should be clearly defined to reflect the new organizational structure.

Judicial Council restructuring directive 115 states:

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts, as part of the review of the AOC organizational structure, to review current responsibilities and clearly define the role of the Chief Counsel.

As part of their report to the Judicial Council, the liaisons included an attachment clearly defining the responsibilities and role of the Chief Counsel of the Administrative Office of the Courts.<sup>7</sup>

The description has been adopted and specifies that the Chief Counsel is chief legal advisor to the Judicial Council and to the AOC and office chief of the AOC Legal Services Office, which provides comprehensive legal services to the appellate and trial courts. It adds that the Legal Services Office has two major areas of service: legal advisor and counsel to the Judicial Council and legal advisor and legal services provider to the appellate and trial courts. In these capacities, the Chief Counsel has responsibilities that are enumerated in detail.

Survey of users of LSO services

The liaisons considered Judicial Council restructuring directive 120 and recommended that, to ensure that the appropriate level of client service is provided, particularly in the area of legal opinions, a formal procedure be developed and implemented in LSO to solicit client feedback.

Judicial Council restructuring directive 120 states:

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts that court users of legal services should be surveyed periodically to determine if such services are performed in a timely and satisfactory manner.

In response to this recommendation, a draft survey has been developed to ask court users for their evaluations of and suggestions for improvements to legal services provided by each of the six LSO units.<sup>8</sup> Because of workload issues and staffing concerns, it is anticipated that the survey will be distributed to the courts in late 2014 as a pilot. If the survey proves useful and courts do not find it overly burdensome, LSO will continue to survey the courts on an annual or biennial basis.

Use of outside counsel

With respect to Judicial Council directive 122 regarding the use of outside counsel, the Judicial Council endorsed the liaisons' recommendation that (1) the use of outside counsel is appropriate for specialized areas of law and litigation; and (2) protocols for LSO's use of outside counsel

should be strengthened to ensure that outside counsel is used in the most cost-effective manner. That directive states:

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts to order an independent review of the Office of the General Counsel's use, selection, and management of outside legal counsel to determine whether outside counsel is being utilized in a cost effective manner. Before initiating the independent review, the Administrative Director of the Courts must provide a proposal with options for conducting the review, including the associated costs.

The liaisons undertook the review of the use of outside counsel and reported back to the council as follows:

Based on our experience in the legal field and after conferring with colleagues, we conclude that the use of outside counsel is appropriate and in some cases mandated, providing valuable legal resources for the varying needs of LSO relating to specific subject areas or broad-based branch initiatives (i.e., courthouse transfers). Outside legal counsel provides LSO with sufficient flexibility to meet the changing needs of the branch in an efficient and cost-effective manner.

(Judicial Council of Cal., supra, at p. 10.)

The liaison report also concluded, once it was confirmed that there was a legitimate need to use outside counsel, that a full study of past expenses would be extraordinarily time-consuming and would provide little benefit. Because the goal was to be certain that future expenditures are warranted, the liaisons recommended placing the responsibility for the retention and monitoring of outside counsel with the managing attorney in each area of practice. The liaisons added that (1) there should be written justification for the retention, and the managing attorney should be responsible for ensuring that the hourly rates and time spent are reasonable; (2) at the close of representation a short client feedback report should be obtained, and the managing attorney should evaluate the service provided from LSO's perspective; and (3) an annual report on the use of outside counsel should be provided to the Judicial Council.

Thus, the liaisons recommended that LSO develop:

- A structure in which each managing attorney is responsible for the approval of and justification for using outside counsel based on the area of expertise needed or resource requirements.
- A means for conducting an examination of the cost-effectiveness of using outside counsel versus potentially hiring attorney resources based on specific projects and the duration of legal assistance needed.
- A checklist that must be completed before initiating a contract with outside counsel to confirm that no internal LSO resources are available for the subject-matter area.

- A means of following up with the courts that receive services to gather their input on the services provided by outside counsel through an e-mail questionnaire or survey. This information would be used in tandem with input from the LSO attorneys assigned to the respective cases to identify if the outside counsel should be used for future cases.
- A means of regularly (every 12 months) surveying the market to ensure that what is being charged is appropriate and the rates are appropriate.

The liaisons also recommended that the Administrative Director provide to the Advisory Committee on Financial Accountability and Efficiency for the Judicial Branch an annual report on the use and cost of outside counsel for the committee's consideration and reporting to the council.

In response to these recommendations, the LSO protocol for the retention of outside counsel has been amended to require managing-attorney approval of the hiring of any outside counsel. Under that protocol, the managing attorney (1) reviews the recommendation to hire outside counsel and the expertise of the counsel suggested, and (2) confirms that no internal resource is available for the particular subject matter. The review and approval by the managing attorney are recorded in each file. In addition, on an annual basis, LSO will review the annual attorney fee surveys prepared by various organizations to ensure that the fees charged by outside counsel are appropriate and reasonable. LSO also will send to each court a survey after the conclusion of any significant litigation, arbitration, or proceedings before the Public Employment Relations Board, asking for the court's assessment of the specific legal representation provided by LSO and outside counsel.<sup>9</sup> The survey results will be used in an annual review of the use of outside counsel to ensure the delivery of quality and timely legal services. The LSO also will provide reports on the use and cost of outside counsel to the Advisory Committee on Financial Accountability and Efficiency at the request of the committee.

LSO attorneys located in field offices

In response to Judicial Council directive 117, the liaisons recommended that the AOC continue to support the existing practice of permitting attorney resources to reside in AOC field offices provided there is proper oversight and accountability. That Judicial Council directive states:

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts to adopt an operations model whereby attorneys generally are housed at one location with flexibility to adjust as necessary to meet court needs regionally, including regional demand for additional attorney support and smaller courts that have fewer staff for research and other legal services. The location where attorneys report to work should ensure proper supervision.

The liaison report states that, after reviewing the activities of LSO attorney staff located in the Sacramento and Burbank field offices, the liaisons believe that it is appropriate to have staff in these locations. The liaisons commented that such an arrangement is consistent with the staffing of many government agencies and private law firms.

<sup>9</sup> These surveys will be prepared for the individual case and tailored to the type and nature of the representation.

LSO has followed the recommendation of the liaisons and continues to house attorneys in field offices. Doing so allows more direct communication between LSO attorneys and the courts in their regions.<sup>10</sup> In addition, as recommended by the liaisons, to ensure oversight in the field offices for day-to-day accountability for off-site staff, LSO management requires staff in the field offices to report any absences both to their supervisors and to a designated local staff member, who would enter the appropriate information into the LSO calendar system.

Use of paralegal classifications

The LSO liaisons reviewed Judicial Council restructuring directive 112 and stated that they did not identify a specific need for a paralegal classification. That directive states:

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts to consider SEC Recommendation 7-72(f) and implement the necessary organizational and staffing changes, contingent upon the council's approval of an organizational structure for the AOC and taking into account the results of the classification and compensation studies to be completed.<sup>11</sup>

In their report, the liaisons state that paralegals in private law firms are typically used primarily for high-level administrative work and very minor legal-related work. Given that LSO already employs administrative staff to support LSO attorneys with administrative tasks, the liaisons indicate that to pursue the creation of a paralegal classification does not appear appropriate at this time.<sup>12</sup> Consistent with the LSO liaisons' recommendation, LSO does not employ paralegals.

Dual reporting

The liaison report discusses one other recommendation for LSO. That recommendation states: "All staff outside of LSO providing legal advice or legal-related services that require a law degree should establish a dual reporting relationship to LSO and their current office."<sup>13</sup> On this recommendation relating to attorneys within the AOC, it seems appropriate to wait for the results of the classification and compensation study. That study will expressly study the attorney

The Legal Services Office's current level of approximately 75 positions, including more than 50 attorney positions, should be reduced. To achieve the reduction, the following areas should be reviewed and considered, and appropriate actions taken:

(f) Development and use of paralegal classifications, as found elsewhere in legal services throughout both the public and private sectors, could lead to the reduction of attorney positions in the Legal Services Office.

classifications and should provide useful information to assist in any efforts to redefine or change the relationship among the various groups and types of attorneys working for the AOC.

Policy and Cost Implications

LSO's mission continues to be to provide quality, timely, and ethical legal advice and services to the Chief Justice, the Judicial Council, council advisory committees and task forces, the appellate and trial courts, and the AOC. The restructuring of LSO will result in efficiencies and savings from, for example, the conversion of the position of assistant chief counsel into a senior managing attorney position and will continue to require a commitment of effort (for example, for staff and courts to conduct and complete user surveys).

Relevant Strategic Plan Goals and Operational Plan Objectives

Judicial Council strategic Goal VI.C.1 ("Provide a high-quality administrative legal infrastructure to provide consistent, comprehensive legal support and counsel to the courts").

Role of Chief Counsel of the Administrative Office of the Courts

The Chief Counsel of the Administrative Office of the Courts (AOC) is chief legal advisor to the Judicial Council of California and to the AOC and director of the AOC Legal Services Office, which provides comprehensive legal services to the AOC and to the appellate and trial courts. The Legal Services Office has two major areas of service: legal advisor and counsel to the Judicial Council and legal advisor and legal services provider to the appellate and trial courts.

I. Legal Advisor and Counsel to the Judicial Council

The role of legal advisor and counsel to the Judicial Council encompasses the legal services provided in support of the Chief Justice as Chair of the Judicial Council, the Judicial Council and its committees and task forces, and the AOC as staff agency to the Judicial Council.

In this capacity, the Chief Counsel is responsible for the following:

- Judicial Council Legal Support
  - Provide legal advice and briefings to the Chief Justice, the Judicial Council, and internal council committees on matters of importance to Judicial Council business.
  - Provide legal support and staffing of Judicial Council internal committees and council advisory committees.
  - Provide legal review of rules, forms, standards of judicial administration, and jury instructions for Judicial Council consideration.
  - Provide legal review of legislation and regulations for legal and programmatic impact in collaboration with the AOC Office of Governmental Affairs.
  - Provide legal support to the Chief Justice in evaluating and making recommendations on petitions for coordination of complex civil cases.
  - Facilitate filing of local court rules with the council and authorization by the Chief Justice of alternative effective dates of local rules.
  - Interact with other branches of government and external entities (e.g., Attorney General's Office, Commission on Judicial Performance, State Bar of California State Bar, Secretary of State, California Fair Political Practices Commission, etc.) on wide range of judicial administration legal issues.
  - Participate in meetings and conferences as the legal representative of the Judicial Council, AOC, and the judicial branch, as appropriate.
- AOC and Administrative Director of the Courts Legal Support
  - Provide legal advice and briefings to the Administrative Director, Division Chiefs, and Office Directors on legal issues affecting AOC programs and

- operations and on legal issues affecting planning, development, and review of AOC programs and policies.
  - Identify legal and risk management issues and collaborate on developing and implementing strategies for addressing issues.
  - Collaborate with other AOC offices on legislative, fiscal, facilities, technology, and other matters affecting the judicial branch to develop strategies for implementing new requirements and responding to emerging issues.
- Chief Counsel Administrative Activities
  - Manage the AOC Legal Services Office, including planning and directing work, providing legal policy direction, providing for internal staff development and training and succession planning, and participating in recruitment and selection of staff.
    - Provides general direction on the office’s priorities, policies, and operations.
    - Manages the Legal Services Office budget and resources; develops and implements strategies to meet increasing workload demands with limited resources.
    - Establishes and implements performance and development plans for direct reports.

II. Legal Advisor and Provider of Legal Services to the Appellate and Trial Courts and the AOC

In this capacity, the Chief Counsel provides direction and oversees the following programs and activities that provide legal services to the appellate and trial courts and to the AOC:

- Labor and Employment:
  - Responds to labor and employment issues in collaboration with the AOC Human Resources Services Office (HRSO), as appropriate.
  - Provides legal advice and guidance to minimize risk of labor disputes and employment litigation.
  - Provides legal advice in addressing sensitive personnel issues.
  - Assists HRSO in managing legal aspects of investigations of internal complaint of discrimination, harassment, retaliation, and other similar complaints, and advises about complaint resolution.
  - Drafts personnel policies to ensure compliance with applicable law and to avoid litigation.
  - Upon request, advises trial courts regarding labor relations matters (MOUs, labor relation rules, progressive discipline, personnel actions, etc.).
  - Provides ongoing support to HRSO in addressing labor relation issues for trial courts.

- Upon request, provides legal advice and representation for trial courts in labor arbitrations and complaints before the Public Employment Relations Board.
- Litigation Management:
  - Under the direction of the Administrative Director of the Courts and consistent with rules of court, manages and administers the Judicial Council's Litigation Management Program.
  - Staffs the council's Litigation Management Committee, which oversees claims and litigation against judicial branch entities in which the likely exposure is $100,000 or more or that raise issues of significance to the judicial branch.
  - Handles claims against judicial branch entities, making recommendations to the council's Litigation Management Committee for settlements at or above $100,000.
  - Manages litigation against judicial branch entities, including selecting and directing outside counsel retained to represent judicial branch entities and making recommendations to the council's Litigation Management Committee for settlements at or above $100,000.
  - Provides annual litigation reports to the Litigation Management Committee, the Judicial Council, the appellate and trial courts, and the AOC.
  - Manages affirmative litigation on behalf of the courts and AOC.
  - Provides for representation of courts and AOC at administrative law hearings and judicial proceedings.
- Legal Opinions:
  - Upon request, provides legal advice and opinions to court leaders on judicial administration issues.
  - Provides statewide legal advice and guidance to court leaders on issues of statewide importance.
  - Upon request, provides legal advice and opinions to AOC leadership on wide range of issues affecting the judicial branch and judicial branch entities.
- Real Estate and Transactions and Business Operations:
  - Provides legal services and support for court facilities-related transactions, including acquisition, construction, renovation, operation, and maintenance of court facilities.
  - Provides legal services and support for solicitation, contracting, and procurement of goods and services, including technology transactions.

- Provides legal advice on issues related to procurement, risk management, business administration, and operational initiatives.
- Provides legal advice for compliance audits under federal and state law.
- Provides legal advice on leases, contracts, and other documents requiring approval of the Administrative Director of the Courts.
- Oversees the selection, management, and evaluation of external legal resources/outside counsel retained to augment transactional services by the Legal Services Office.

Information on Judicial Council Directives

Council Directive 116

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council support SEC Recommendation 7-77(a) and (d), and direct the Administrative Director of the Courts that the Office of the General Counsel should employ and emphasize a customer service model of operation, recognizing a primary goal of providing timely service and advice to its clients, including to internal clients in the AOC and to those courts that request legal advice or services from this office.

SEC Recommendation 7-77

This office must place greater emphasis on being a service provider and in improving how it provides services, including as follows:

(a) Most fundamentally, this division should employ and emphasize a customer service model of operation — recognizing a primary goal of providing timely service and advice to its clients, including to internal clients in the AOC and to those courts that request legal advice or services from this office.

| x COMPLETED: Legal Services implemented a matter tracking system and implemented changes to practices within its Legal Opinions Unit, which is responsible for providing legal advice to the Judicial Council, council leadership and staff, and appellate and trial courts. |

To address this directive, the Legal Services has implemented a matter tracking system, described in more detail in response to JC directive 108, and implemented changes to practices within its Legal Opinions Unit (LOU), which is responsible for providing legal advice to the Judicial Council, council leadership and staff, and appellate and trial courts.

The matter tracking system tracks legal services matters assigned throughout the Legal Services, by unit; assigns a level of complexity; tracks completion time and date; and allows for a tickler system to monitor open matters.

Within the Legal Services, the LOU Supervisor closely monitors the status and response time of all LOU matters. Clients are regularly updated on the status of their opinion requests and the content and date of these follow-up client contacts are documented to ensure maximum responsiveness. As urgent client requests are received, the LOU Supervisor reprioritizes and reassigns work as necessary to ensure that urgent client needs are met. To help address the impact of reduced attorney staff in LOU and to meet client needs, attorneys in other units of the Legal Services Office are regularly assigned advice matters, thereby expediting the delivery of requested legal guidance.

To speed the review of opinions, and thereby delivery of service to clients, the task of reviewing draft opinions is now performed by both the LOU Supervisor and a Senior Attorney in LOU. Use of outside legal counsel to assist with opinions is also considered, where appropriate and cost-effective.

The Legal Services has also instituted a practice of circulating statewide legal opinions in draft form to presiding judges and court executives for feedback and comment. This client-centered approach is intended to ascertain the practical implications of legal guidance and to ensure that advice delivered is of maximum utility to trial courts. Additionally, the Legal Services plans to inform court leaders, on a quarterly or bi-annual basis, of significant Legal Services legal opinions posted to the existing central repository for legal opinions (a secure section of the Serranus website) so that court leaders are reminded of the expanding body of legal guidance available to them.

Council Directive 117

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts to adopt an operations model whereby attorneys generally are housed at one location with flexibility to adjust as necessary to meet court needs regionally, including regional demand for additional attorney support and smaller courts that have fewer staff for research and other legal services. The location where attorneys report to work should ensure proper supervision.

SEC Recommendation 7-77

This office must place greater emphasis on being a service provider and in improving how it provides services, including as follows:

(b) This office should adopt an operations model whereby its attorneys generally are housed at one location. This would eliminate non-supervision of some attorneys, promote better and more regular supervision of staff attorneys, and promote better utilization of available skills.

On April 8, 2014, the council approved a report from the Administrative Director and Legal Services that included information regarding allowing attorney staff to be housed in multiple locations.

The April 2014 report was a follow-up to a June 2013 report from Judicial Council liaisons to Legal Services, Justice Douglas Miller and Edith Matthai, who reviewed and provided recommendations and direction on various Legal Services-related directives.

The liaisons recommended that the council continue to support the existing practice of permitting attorney resources to reside in council field offices provided there is proper oversight and accountability.

The liaison report states that, after reviewing the activities of Legal Service attorney staff located in the Sacramento and Burbank field offices, the liaisons believe that it is appropriate to have staff in Legal Services has followed the recommendation of the liaisons and continues to house attorneys in field offices. Doing so allows more direct communication between Legal Services attorneys and the courts in their regions. In addition, as recommended by the liaisons, to ensure oversight in the field offices for day-to-day accountability for off-site staff, Legal Services management requires staff in the field offices to report any absences both to their supervisors and to a designated local staff member.

On an ongoing and as-needed basis, future recruitments for Legal Services attorney staffing, will include a determination that looks at both need and locale of that attorney resource in determining future hiring.

ASSESSMENT OF IMPLEMENTATION

Legal Services reported that currently 26 attorneys are housed in one location. With the remaining 8 attorneys residing in either the Sacramento or Burbank Judicial Council offices. Legal Services believes it is helpful to have attorneys in the field offices to provide regional assistance. Additionally, both Burbank and Sacramento offices employ Supervising Attorneys - one position housed full-time in Burbank and the other position whose time is divided between San Francisco and Sacramento.

Executive Summary

In response to directives of the Judicial Council arising from the Strategic Evaluation Committee's final report, as Judicial Council Liaisons for the Administrative Office of the Courts (AOC), Legal Services Office (LSO), Justice Douglas Miller and Edith Matthai are proposing recommendations relating to:

- LSO organizational structure and services;
- The role of the Chief Counsel;
- Attorney services provided by the AOC outside of LSO;
- The use of outside counsel by LSO;
- LSO attorney staff housed in AOC field offices; and
- The use of a paralegal classification in LSO.

Recommendation

At the February 2013 council meeting, the Legal Services Office (LSO) liaisons were requested by the council to take the lead on reviewing the cost-effectiveness of LSO's current use of outside counsel in response to Judicial Council directive 122.

While addressing this request, it became evident that there were additional LSO-related restructuring directives that were appropriate for inclusion in the liaisons' review and would enable a more comprehensive evaluation. Consequently, in addition to reviewing the cost-effectiveness of the use of outside counsel, the liaisons' review was expanded to include: defining the role of the Chief Counsel; evaluating the need for utilization of a paralegal classification; analyzing the use of LSO attorney staff in AOC field offices; and analyzing the current LSO organizational structure, LSO services, and attorney services provided by the AOC outside of LSO.

The LSO liaisons acknowledge that implementation of Judicial Council directives is the responsibility of the Administrative Director of the Courts. However, based on our review, we encourage the Administrative Director to implement the following recommendations with the concurrence of the council.

It is recognized that modifications may be needed once these recommendations are implemented. It is therefore recommended that the Administrative Director return to the council 12 to 18 months after implementation with a post-implementation evaluation.

The following LSO liaisons' recommendations are described more fully in the "Rationale for Recommendations" section of this report.<sup>1</sup>

We recommend that the Judicial Council endorse the following recommendations to the Administrative Director, and direct him to report back to the council on implementation by March 31, 2014.

1. LSO should be restructured with a management team comprising a Chief Counsel and three managing attorneys over three distinct service areas to ensure continued focus on serving the varied and diverse needs of LSO's clients, which include the appellate and trial courts, the Chief Justice, and the Judicial Council and its administrative agency, the AOC.
2. LSO should implement a formal structure to solicit client feedback on a regular basis.
3. The role of the Chief Counsel and its expectations and areas of responsibility should be clearly defined to reflect the new organizational structure.

4. The use of outside counsel is appropriate for specialized areas of law and litigation. The protocols for LSO's use of outside counsel should be strengthened to ensure that outside counsel is used in the most cost-effective manner.
5. The AOC should continue to support the existing practice of permitting attorney resources to reside in AOC field offices provided there is proper oversight and accountability.
6. All staff outside of LSO providing legal advice or legal-related services that require a law degree should establish a dual reporting relationship to LSO and their current office.
7. Given the recent retirement announcement by the current Chief Counsel, it is recommended that the successor Chief Counsel be afforded the opportunity to implement the restructuring and the formation of the management team under the supervision of the Chief of Staff.

Previous Council Action

In February of 2012, Chief Justice Tani G. Cantil-Sakauye created the Judicial Council Liaison Program where Judicial Council members are assigned as liaisons to each of the state's 58 trial courts as well as to each of the offices of the AOC. The Chief Justice assigned the liaisons as a means to further the council's efforts to increase communication and transparency and promote accountability. This program provides an opportunity for council members to familiarize themselves with how the AOC supports and implements council policy.

Justice Douglas Miller and Edith Matthai were assigned as liaisons to the LSO. Coupled with the liaisons' regular review responsibilities, at the February 2013 council meeting, the council requested that Justice Miller and Edith Matthai take the lead on directive 122 (review of the use of outside counsel). During this review it became evident that there were additional LSO-related directives that were appropriate for inclusion in this review and that these directives impacted LSO's current organizational structure. Consequently, in addition to reviewing the cost-effectiveness of the use of outside counsel, the liaisons broadened their review.

In conducting this review the council liaisons prepared the recommendations referenced above with the tenets of accountability, clear lines of authority, timeliness of service, and client service as underlying considerations.

Rationale for Recommendation

Legal Services Office Restructuring

Judicial Council AOC Restructuring Directive 107

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts to consider SEC Recommendation 7-72(a) and implement the necessary organizational and staffing changes, contingent upon the council's approval of an organizational structure for the AOC and taking into account the results of the classification and compensation studies to be completed.

SEC Recommendation 7-72(a)

The Legal Services Office's current level of approximately 75 positions, including more than 50 attorney positions, should be reduced. To achieve the reduction, the following areas should be reviewed and considered, and appropriate actions taken:

(a) In addition to the General Counsel, there are nine management level attorney positions in the Legal Services Office, including the Assistant General Counsel, three Managing Attorneys, and five Supervising Attorneys. This is an excessive number of management positions, which should be reduced. The position of Assistant General Counsel could be eliminated. One managing attorney could be assigned to manage each of the two major functional components of the division, house counsel, and Judicial Council services, with each managing attorney reporting directly to the Chief Counsel.

Since the report of the Strategic Evaluation Committee was released in May of 2012, the LSO workforce has been dramatically reduced. Staffing reductions attributable to retirements, the AOC's Voluntary Separation Incentive Program, attrition, and the elimination of temporary staff have reduced LSO staffing from the 75 positions referenced in the SEC recommendation 7-72(a) to a workforce of 50.1 positions as of May 31, 2013. LSO attorney staffing has been reduced from 50 attorneys to the current number of 37 attorneys exclusive of the Chief Counsel. Finally, the LSO management team currently totals eight positions from the nine noted in SEC recommendation 7-72(a).<sup>2</sup> This includes the Assistant Chief Counsel, two managing attorneys, and five supervising attorneys.

The LSO staff provides a variety of services that had historically been provided by the counties prior to state trial court funding and reflects the varying and expanded needs of judicial branch entities in today's environment. Prior to trial court funding, LSO comprised a small group of attorney staff primarily responsible for drafting council rules of court and forms and legislation, providing legal opinions to the council and the Administrative Director, and staffing council advisory committees and other similar bodies. Following trial court funding, the role of LSO expanded to provide legal services to the superior courts that had previously been provided by county counsels' offices. The council also approved the creation of a Litigation Management Program in 1999, adopting rules of court assigning the responsibility to LSO for the management of all claims and litigation against the courts. The LSO's areas of responsibility continued to expand; LSO began providing trial courts with legal opinions on judicial administration issues, and labor and employment legal services began with the enactment of the Trial Court Employment Protection and Governance Act of 2000, followed by establishment of a unit to provide transactional and business-related advice and services. After passage of the Trial Court Facilities Act of 2002, the LSO Real Estate Unit was established to provide the facilities-related legal work resulting from this legislation. Finally, LSO attorney positions were established in the field offices to better facilitate the provision of legal services to the superior courts.

<sup>2</sup> Since the SEC report was issued, the LSO management team has been reduced due to a retirement and will be further reduced with the retirement of the Assistant Chief Counsel on June 28, 2013, and the departure of two staff attorneys in the summer of 2013.

Today LSO provides legal services in two primary areas: (1) services provided to the council, to the Chief Justice as chair of the council, and to the Administrative Director and AOC as the administrative arm of the council; and (2) services provided to the appellate and trial courts.

As indicated in Figure 1 below, LSO is currently structured to provide services in these two areas. As its name implies, the Judicial Council Services group provides legal counsel and services to the council and its internal committees, advisory committees, and task forces and is led by a managing attorney who reports to the Chief Counsel. The remaining LSO organization provides legal counsel and services to the appellate and trial courts, the Judicial Council, and the AOC in a number of areas such as labor and employment, litigation management, legal opinions,<sup>3</sup> real estate, and transactions and business operations.

Given the current staffing levels of the LSO workforce and the critical nature of the legal services provided by LSO, we believe that a 10-member LSO attorney management team is appropriate for this office. However, to ensure accountability and clear lines of authority for the varied legal services provided by LSO, it is recommended that the LSO should be restructured to create a new executive leadership team comprising the Chief Counsel and three managing attorneys who lead three distinct areas of service (see Figure 2 below). Additionally, in accordance with council directive 107, we recommend that the position of Assistant Chief Counsel be reclassified as a managing attorney position. It is also recommended that one of the managing attorney positions be classified as a senior managing attorney to provide backup and support as second in command to the Chief Counsel. It appears appropriate that the managing attorney leading Judicial Council Services and Legal Opinions would be the best position for second in command.

The new structure provides a three-to-one reporting structure under the Chief Counsel and shifts the responsibility for regular day-to-day management workload from the Chief Counsel to the managing attorneys. This shift of direct responsibility for LSO daily activities is an acknowledgement that the Chief Counsel should be involved in providing legal input and expertise to the most critical legal issues for the branch versus being immersed in routine LSO workload. This structure will require continuous communication between the Chief Counsel and the three managing attorneys to ensure that no silos develop in the office. Similar to partners in a law firm, the Chief Counsel and the managing attorneys should meet regularly to share information and make decisions on projects, priorities, and resources that further the goals of the office as a whole.

The three areas of services arising from the recommended restructuring are: Judicial Council Services and Legal Opinions (a merger of two formerly separate units), Transactions and Business Operations (incorporating Real Estate into the Transactions and Business Operations Unit), and Litigation Management and Labor and Employment (a merger of two formerly separate units). It is important to note that other than Judicial Council Services, all of the LSO units currently provide legal services for two client groups—the appellate and trial courts along with the Administrative Director and the AOC. The new units would continue to serve both client groups, with the responsibility of supervising attorneys divided between these client groups. Each managing attorney would be responsible for providing satisfactory service to their clients.

The administration and monitoring of outside counsel would be the responsibility of the managing attorney for each respective area.

The designation of two positions (labeled “Supervising Attorney/Senior Attorney”) under each of the subject matter areas is to ensure that there is client accountability for each area. There will need to be regular communication among these attorneys to avoid duplication of effort and inconsistency of work product. It was our belief that by establishing a clear line of accountability, the problems identified by the trial courts in the SEC report would be avoided or, if they did reoccur, would be more easily corrected.

It is intended that the Chief Counsel and the three managing attorneys hold overall management responsibility, with the supervising/senior attorneys charged with carrying out senior management’s directives for the specific subject matter and client assignments. The level of experience and precise classification for these supervising/senior attorneys should be determined as a part of the internal restructuring and reviewed as a part of the classification and compensation study.

Role of Chief Counsel

Judicial Council Restructuring Directive 115

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts, as part of the review of the AOC organizational structure, to review current responsibilities and clearly define the role of the Chief Counsel.

By creating a team of three managing attorneys with assigned responsibilities over specific subject areas, the Chief Counsel should focus on ensuring that the structure in LSO is working well and that there is consistency and continuity among the three managing attorneys. The three managing attorneys must have the ability to work independently from and with the trust of the Chief Counsel to make decisions and manage the respective workload without direct involvement from the Chief Counsel. Again, the Chief Counsel’s role should be oversight of LSO activities to allow for hands-on involvement only for cases and issues involving large, complex, and highly sensitive issues. The Chief Counsel must be flexible in meeting the needs of the Judicial Council, the Chief Justice, and the Administrative Director with a wide variety of legal responsibilities and is expected to consistently exercise a high degree of initiative, independence, originality, and judgment in performing all duties

The Chief Counsel serves as legal counsel to the chair of the Judicial Council (currently, the Chief Justice) and advises the Chief Justice on certain statutorily mandated functions. The Chief Counsel also manages staff responsible for the provision of legal support and staffing to some of the Judicial Council’s internal committees and advisory committees and consults with, advises, and provides legal briefings and guidance for the council and its committees. The Chief Counsel supervises the review and development of legal opinions on issues of statewide importance, the review of legislation and regulations, rulemaking adoption and modification, and the facilitation of review, filing, and publication of trial court local rules and procedural requirements. All of these activities should be accomplished through and with the managing attorneys.

The Chief Counsel consults with and advises the Administrative Director, AOC division chiefs, and office directors on the interpretation and analysis of law, court decisions, and rules and regulations affecting the functions of the AOC and on legal issues as they affect the planning, development, and review of overall programs and policies of the AOC.

Finally, as legal advisor and provider of legal services to the courts, the Chief Counsel manages staff and administers the Labor and Employment, Litigation Management, Transactions and Business Operations (including Real Estate), and Legal Opinions programs and services for the appellate and trial courts. Attachment A provides detailed information about the role of the Chief Counsel and the leadership over the LSO areas of service.

It is recommended that the Chief of Staff work with the Chief Counsel to assess the current level of resources expended for specific work products. This assessment should focus on ensuring that work products are being produced in the most efficient way and prioritized based on the issue at hand. The Chief Counsel and managing attorneys should continuously work together to identify efficient and effective ways to deliver these services.

Judicial Council Restructuring Directive 120

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts that court users of legal services should be surveyed periodically to determine if such services are performed in a timely and satisfactory manner.

To ensure the appropriate level of client service is provided, particularly in the area of legal opinions, it is recommended that a formal procedure be developed and implemented in LSO to solicit client feedback. As an example, once a legal opinion is provided to a court, it is recommended that LSO send a client satisfaction survey in a self-addressed stamped envelope or electronically to the respective court's presiding judge and court executive officer requesting feedback about the services provided. The information gained from this protocol would be shared with the Chief of Staff and will allow for continuous improvement in LSO.

AOC Attorney Services Outside of LSO

In their analysis of LSO legal services, the council liaisons identified attorney classification positions in offices other than LSO in the AOC. The existence of attorney positions in other AOC offices can be attributed to historical restructuring as the organization evolved. The majority of attorney resources outside of LSO reside in two offices—the Center for Judiciary Education and Research (CJER) and the Center for Children, Families & the Courts (CFCC). Additionally, there are a few attorney classifications housed in the Criminal Justice Court Services Office and the Office of Governmental Affairs (OGA).

A review of the information about the activities of attorney classifications outside of LSO compared to information about the services provided by LSO attorneys indicates that there are similar legal services rendered in multiple offices. These services include but are not limited to: legal support and services provided to advisory committees; the drafting of rules of court and forms; input and subject matter expertise on pending legislation; technical assistance; and legal research on specific case-type information. There are also attorney classifications participating in legal-related activities that are not currently offered in LSO. These include but are not limited to: the development of curriculum for judicial education; the creation and updating of judicial publications; legislative advocacy activities; and program and grant administration activities.

The concept of having attorney classifications providing legal advice and services outside of the purview of the Chief Counsel is concerning. Not only is there the potential for providing inconsistent legal advice and services to court clients, there are also liability issues for the organization in having attorney staff provide legal advice without the oversight of the Chief Counsel.

Given the current effort to ensure accountability for the AOC and the council's advisory committees and the AOC's renewed focus on providing consistent service to its customers, it is recommended that attorneys outside of LSO who provide legal advice or other services that require a license to practice law should have a dual reporting relationship: a dotted line reporting to the Chief Counsel and direct reporting to the current office director. The dual reporting relationship will ensure consistency of legal work and appropriate oversight by the LSO.

If there are attorney classifications that participate in legal-related activities for which a license to practice law is not required, it is recommended that these positions remain in their current organizational structure but be reclassified. For example, if it is determined that attorneys in OGA do not provide legal advice or require the use of a law license for their daily activities, then the AOC might consider reclassifying these positions as legislative specialists retaining the requirement for a law degree as a qualification for the position. This recommendation is forwarded to the Administrative Director to incorporate into the classification and compensation study process.

Judicial Council Directive 122

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts to order an independent review of the Office of the General Counsel's use, selection, and management of outside legal counsel to determine whether outside counsel is being utilized in a cost effective manner. Before initiating the independent review, the Administrative Director of the Courts must provide a proposal with options for conducting the review, including the associated costs.

In response to this directive, the Administrative Director provided options for a review of the use of outside counsel by LSO in February 2013, and the council directed LSO council liaisons to review the use, selection, and management of outside legal counsel to determine whether outside counsel is being used in a cost-effective manner and to report back to the council on the results of this review for any further direction.

As background, LSO utilizes outside counsel for representing judicial branch entities and personnel under the council's Litigation Management Program, representing trial courts in labor arbitrations and complaint proceedings before the Public Employment Relations Board (PERB), providing legal services in specialized areas of practice in which LSO attorneys do not have requisite expertise, and providing court facilities-related legal services to augment LSO staff in the Real Estate Unit and in other areas requiring specialized skills and experience.

Based on our experience in the legal field and after conferring with colleagues, we conclude that the use of outside counsel is appropriate and in some cases mandated, providing valuable legal resources for the varying needs of LSO relating to specific subject areas or broad-based branch initiatives (i.e., courthouse transfers). Outside legal counsel provides LSO with sufficient flexibility to meet the changing needs of the branch in an efficient and cost-effective manner.

Once it was confirmed that there is a legitimate need to use outside counsel, it was determined that a full study of past expenses would be extraordinarily time consuming and would provide little benefit. Since the goal is to be certain that future expenditures are warranted, the recommendation is to place the responsibility for the retention and monitoring of outside counsel with the managing attorney in each area of practice. There should be written justification for the retention, and the managing attorney should be responsible for insuring that the hourly rates and time spent are reasonable. At the close of representation a short client feedback report should be obtained and the managing attorney should evaluate the service provided from LSO's perspective. An annual report on the use of outside counsel should be provided to the Judicial Council.

The following recommendations are proposed to assist LSO in reinforcing its existing protocols for utilizing outside counsel to ensure that outside counsel is monitored, supervised, and managed. These recommendations were also shared with the three members of the SEC that are currently council members for their review. We appreciate their input and specific suggestions relating to recommendations regarding the development of a means to conduct an examination of cost effectiveness of outside counsel and an annual report on outside counsel from the Administrative Director as indicated below.

It is recommended that LSO develop:

- A structure where each managing attorney is responsible for the approval and justification for utilizing outside counsel based on area of expertise needed or resource requirements.

- A means for conducting an examination of the cost-effectiveness of utilizing outside counsel versus potentially hiring attorney resources based on specific projects and the duration of legal assistance needed.
- A checklist that must be completed prior to initiating a contract with outside counsel to confirm that there are no internal LSO resources available for the subject matter area.
- A means of following up with the courts that receive services to gather their input on the services provided by outside counsel through an e-mail questionnaire or survey. This information would be used in tandem with input from the LSO attorneys assigned to the respective case to identify if the outside counsel should be used for future cases.
- A means of regularly (every 12 months) surveying the market to ensure that what is being charged is appropriate and the rates are appropriate.
- An annual report to the council from the Administrative Director on the use of all outside counsel and the monies spent to the Advisory Committee on Financial Accountability and Efficiency (A&E) for review and reporting to the council.

Judicial Council AOC Restructuring Directive 117

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts to adopt an operations model whereby attorneys generally are housed at one location with flexibility to adjust as necessary to meet court needs regionally, including regional demand for additional attorney support and smaller courts that have fewer staff for research and other legal services. The location where attorneys report to work should ensure proper supervision.

After reviewing the activities of LSO attorney staff located in the Sacramento and Burbank field offices, we believe that it is appropriate to have staff in these locations. This is consistent with many government agencies as well as private law firms. This should allow more direct communication between LSO attorneys and the courts in their region. It should be noted that LSO attorneys are not the only AOC staff that reside in field offices. For all offices in which staff is housed away from their direct supervisors, it is recommended that the AOC develop a policy that includes existing senior management-level oversight in the field offices for day-to-day accountability for off-site staff.

Use of Paralegal Classification

Judicial Council AOC Restructuring Directive 112

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts to consider SEC Recommendation 7-72(f) and implement the necessary organizational and staffing changes, contingent upon the council's approval of an organizational structure for the AOC and taking into account the results of the classification and compensation studies to be completed.

SEC Recommendation 7-72(f)

The Legal Services Office's current level of approximately 75 positions, including more than 50 attorney positions, should be reduced. To achieve the reduction, the following areas should be reviewed and considered, and appropriate actions taken:

(f) Development and use of paralegal classifications, as found elsewhere in legal services throughout both the public and private sectors, could lead to the reduction of attorney positions in the Legal Services Office.

In reviewing the activities of LSO attorneys, a specific need for a paralegal classification was not identified. Paralegals in private law firms are typically utilized primarily for high level administrative work and very minor legal-related work. Given that LSO already employs administrative staff to support LSO attorneys with administrative tasks, it does not appear appropriate to pursue the creation of a paralegal classification at this time.

Comments, Alternatives Considered and Policy Implications

In developing these recommendations, the LSO liaisons worked closely with the Chief of Staff. Additionally, these recommendations were shared with the AOC Executive Team and Chief Counsel and her management team.

Implementation Requirements, Costs, and Operational Impacts

It is anticipated that implementation of these recommendations, particularly LSO restructuring, may result in the need to recruit as needed. Additionally, LSO should realize savings by converting the Assistant General Counsel position to a Managing Attorney position.

There are several other recommendations that will impact LSO resources during implementation. These recommendations relate to the use of outside counsel where it is recommended that LSO strengthen the underlying structure for using outside counsel (i.e., developing a checklist; developing a means to follow up with courts to gain input; developing and implementing a survey on what is being charged in the market, etc.) and the recommendation to develop a client satisfaction survey.

Finally, it is recognized that delineating the attorney staff that will have a dual reporting relationship to LSO from other AOC offices will take some time to implement.

A. Role of Chief Counsel of the Administrative Office of the Courts

Role of Chief Counsel of the Administrative Office of the Courts

The Chief Counsel of the Administrative Office of the Courts (AOC) is chief legal advisor to the Judicial Council of California and to the AOC and office chief of the AOC Legal Services Office, which provides comprehensive legal services to the AOC and to the appellate and trial courts. The Legal Services Office has two major areas of service: legal advisor and counsel to the Judicial Council and legal advisor and legal services provider to the appellate and trial courts.

I. Legal Advisor and Counsel to the Judicial Council

The role of legal advisor and counsel to the Judicial Council encompasses the legal services provided in support of the Chief Justice as Chair of the Judicial Council, the Judicial Council and its committees and task forces, and the AOC as staff agency to the Judicial Council.

In this capacity, the Chief Counsel is responsible for the following:

- Judicial Council Legal Support
  - Provide legal advice and briefings to the Chief Justice, as chair of the Judicial Council, the Judicial Council, and internal council committees on matters of importance to Judicial Council business.
  - Provide legal support and staffing of Judicial Council internal committees and council advisory committees, as requested.
  - Provide legal review of rules, forms, standards of judicial administration, and jury instructions for Judicial Council consideration.
  - Provide legal review of legislation and regulations for legal and programmatic impact in collaboration with the AOC Office of Governmental Affairs.
  - Provide legal support to the Chief Justice in evaluating and making recommendations on petitions for coordination of complex civil cases.
  - Facilitate filing of local court rules with the council and authorization by the Chief Justice of alternative effective dates of local rules.
  - Interact with other branches of government and external entities (e.g., Attorney General's Office, Commission on Judicial Performance, State Bar of California State Bar, Secretary of State, California Fair Political Practices Commission, etc.) on wide range of judicial administration legal issues.
  - Participate in meetings and conferences as the legal representative of the Judicial Council, AOC, and the judicial branch, as appropriate.
- AOC and Administrative Director of the Courts Legal Support
  - Provide legal advice and briefings to the Administrative Director, Division Chiefs, and Office Directors on legal issues affecting AOC programs and operations and on legal issues affecting planning, development, and review of AOC programs and policies.

- Identify legal and risk management issues.
- Collaborate with other AOC offices on legislative, fiscal, facilities, technology, and other matters affecting the judicial branch to develop strategies for implementing new requirements and responding to emerging issues.
- Chief Counsel Administrative Activities
  - Manage the AOC Legal Services Office, including planning and directing work, providing legal policy direction, providing for internal staff development and training and succession planning, and participating in recruitment and selection of staff.
    - Provides general direction on the office's priorities, policies, and operations.
    - Manages the Legal Services Office budget and resources; develops and implements strategies to meet increasing workload demands with limited resources.
    - Establishes and implements performance and development plans for direct reports.

II. Legal Advisor and Provider of Legal Services to the Appellate and Trial Courts and the AOC

In this capacity, the Chief Counsel provides direction and oversees the following programs and activities that provide legal services to the appellate and trial courts and to the AOC:

- Labor and Employment:
  - Responds to labor and employment issues in collaboration with the AOC Human Resources Services Office (HRSO), as appropriate.
  - Provides legal advice and guidance to minimize risk of labor disputes and employment litigation.
  - Provides legal advice in addressing sensitive personnel issues.
  - Assists HRSO in managing legal aspects of investigations of internal complaints of discrimination, harassment, retaliation, and other similar complaints, and advises about complaint resolution.
  - Drafts personnel policies to ensure compliance with applicable law and to avoid litigation.
  - Upon request, advises trial courts regarding labor relations matters (MOUs, labor relation rules, progressive discipline, personnel actions, etc.).
  - Provides ongoing legal support to HRSO in addressing labor relation issues for trial courts.
  - Upon request, provides legal advice and representation for trial courts in labor arbitrations and complaints before the Public Employment Relations Board.

- Litigation Management:
  - Under the direction of the Administrative Director of the Courts and consistent with rules of court, manages and administers the Judicial Council's Litigation Management Program.
  - Staffs the council's Litigation Management Committee, which oversees claims and litigation against judicial branch entities in which the likely exposure is $100,000 or more or that raise issues of significance to the judicial branch.
  - Handles claims against judicial branch entities, making recommendations to the council's Litigation Management Committee for settlements at or above $100,000.
  - Manages litigation against judicial branch entities, including selecting and directing outside counsel retained to represent judicial branch entities and making recommendations to the council's Litigation Management Committee for settlements at or above $100,000.
  - Provides annual litigation reports to the Litigation Management Committee, the Judicial Council, the appellate and trial courts, and the AOC.
  - Manages affirmative litigation on behalf of the courts and AOC.
  - Provides for representation of courts and AOC at administrative law hearings and judicial proceedings.

- Legal Opinions:
  - Upon request, provides legal advice and opinions to court leaders on judicial administration issues.
  - Provides statewide legal advice and guidance to court leaders on issues of statewide importance.
  - Upon request, provides legal advice and opinions to AOC leadership on wide range of issues affecting the judicial branch and judicial branch entities.

- Transactions and Business Operations:
  - Provides legal services and support for court facilities-related transactions, including acquisition, construction, renovation, operation, and maintenance of court facilities.
  - Provides legal services and support for solicitation, contracting, and procurement of goods and services, including technology transactions.
  - Provides legal advice on issues related to procurement, risk management, business administration, and operational initiatives.

- Provides legal advice for compliance audits under federal and state law.
- Provides legal advice on leases, contracts, and other documents requiring approval of the Administrative Director of the Courts.
- Oversees the selection, management, and evaluation of external legal resources/outside counsel retained to augment transactional

Executive Summary

The Legal Services Office (LSO) is an office of the Administrative Office of the Courts (AOC) under the Judicial Council and Court Leadership Services Division. The mission of LSO is to provide quality, timely, and ethical legal advice and services to the Chief Justice, the Judicial Council, council advisory committees and task forces, the appellate and trial courts, and the AOC. The Judicial Council has charged the office with providing “consistent, comprehensive legal support and counsel to the courts.” (Judicial Council of Cal./Admin. Off. of Cts., Justice in Focus: The Strategic Plan for California’s Judicial Branch 2006–2012 (2006), p. 49.) In response to Judicial Council restructuring directives and the recommendations of the Judicial Council liaisons to LSO, the office has been significantly restructured. This informational report summarizes the activities undertaken in response to the June 2013 recommendations of the Judicial Council liaisons.

Previous Council Action

- In March 2011, Chief Justice Tani G. Cantil-Sakauye created the Strategic Evaluation Committee (SEC) to conduct an in-depth review of the Administrative Office of the Courts, the staff agency to the Judicial Council, with a view toward promoting transparency, accountability, and efficiency.

- On August 31, 2012, based on the SEC report and its recommendations, the Judicial Council approved AOC realignment directives and directed the Administrative Director to report on them.
- At the February 2013 council meeting, the council liaisons to LSO were asked to take the lead on reviewing the cost-effectiveness of LSO's current use of outside counsel in response to Judicial Council directive 122. While addressing this request, the liaisons concluded that additional LSO-related restructuring directives were appropriate for inclusion in the liaisons' review and would enable a more comprehensive evaluation.<sup>1</sup>
- In addition to reviewing the cost-effectiveness of the use of outside counsel, the liaisons' review was expanded to include defining the role of the Chief Counsel; evaluating the need for use of a paralegal classification; analyzing the use of LSO attorney staff in AOC field offices; and analyzing the current LSO organizational structure, LSO services, and attorney services provided by the AOC outside of LSO.
- In June 2013, the LSO liaisons recommended that the Judicial Council endorse the following recommendations to the Administrative Director:<sup>2</sup>
  1. LSO should be restructured with a management team comprising a Chief Counsel and three managing attorneys over three distinct service areas to ensure continued focus on serving the varied and diverse needs of LSO's clients, which include the appellate and trial courts, the Chief Justice, and the Judicial Council and its administrative agency, the AOC.
  2. LSO should implement a formal structure to solicit client feedback on a regular basis.
  3. The role of the Chief Counsel and the expectations for that role and areas of responsibility should be clearly defined to reflect the new organizational structure.
  4. The use of outside counsel is appropriate for specialized areas of law and litigation. The protocols for LSO's use of outside counsel should be strengthened to ensure that outside counsel is used in the most cost-effective manner.
  5. The AOC should continue to support the existing practice of permitting attorney resources to reside in AOC field offices provided there is proper oversight and accountability.

6. All staff outside of LSO providing legal advice or legal-related services that require a law degree should establish a dual reporting relationship to LSO and their current office.
  7. Given the recent retirement announcement by the current Chief Counsel, the successor Chief Counsel should be afforded the opportunity to implement the restructuring and the formation of the management team under the supervision of the Chief of Staff.
- At the June 2013 Judicial Council meeting, the council endorsed the liaisons' recommendations and agreed with the liaisons that modifications might be needed once these recommendations are implemented. It further directed the Administrative Director of the Courts to report back on implementation of the liaisons' recommendations by the end of March 2014.<sup>3</sup>

Methodology and Process

Restructuring within LSO has occurred as a result of the implementation of the liaisons' recommendations. As indicated below, six of the seven recommendations have been implemented, with one variance: (1) the LSO management structure has been modified; (2) the responsibilities of the Chief Counsel have been reviewed and clearly defined; (3) a process for periodically surveying court users of legal services is being put into place; (4) protocols have been developed for retention of outside counsel; (5) policies have been implemented to ensure appropriate oversight in the field offices for day-to-day accountability of LSO attorneys and staff in field offices; and (6) paralegals have not and are not currently employed by the LSO. Finally, although LSO works closely with other AOC offices with attorneys, the liaisons' recommendation that AOC attorneys outside of LSO who provide legal advice or legal related services that require a law degree should have a dual reporting relationship to LSO and their current office has not been implemented. As discussed below, for this recommendation, it seems appropriate to wait for the results of the pending classification and compensation study, which will expressly review the attorney classification.

Background on the Legal Services Office

The Legal Services Office provides a variety of services that historically, before state trial court funding, were provided by the counties and reflect the varying and expanded needs of judicial branch entities in today's environment.

Before trial court funding, the Legal Services Office comprised a small group of attorney staff primarily responsible for drafting council rules of court and forms and legislation, providing legal opinions to the council and the Administrative Director, and staffing council advisory committees and other similar bodies.<sup>4</sup> Following trial court funding, the role of LSO expanded to provide to the superior courts legal services that previously had been provided by county counsels' offices. LSO began providing trial courts with legal opinions on judicial administration issues. The council also approved the creation of a Litigation Management Program in 1999, adopting rules of court assigning the responsibility to LSO for the management of all claims and litigation against the courts.

After the enactment of the Trial Court Employment Protection and Governance Act of 2000, LSO began providing labor and employment legal services. LSO's areas of responsibility continued to expand—for example, with the establishment of a unit to provide transactional and business-related advice and services. After passage of the Trial Court Facilities Act of 2002, the Real Estate Unit was established to provide the facilities-related legal work resulting from this legislation. Finally, LSO attorney positions were established in the field offices to better facilitate the provision of legal services to the superior courts.

The growth of LSO and the expansion of the services it provides have significantly changed in the past few years. Based on the council directives and other developments, LSO has ceased to grow and has been notably reduced in size. This and other changes are described in detail below.

Implementing the directives

In implementing the Judicial Council directives to LSO and the council liaisons' recommendations, the Administrative Director of the Courts and the Chief of Staff worked closely with the Chief Counsel and her management team. They have also benefitted greatly from advice from the Judicial Council liaisons to LSO and other council members.

The liaison report specifically addresses implementation of the council liaisons' recommendations to the Administrative Director of the Courts, which were endorsed by the Judicial Council. The report presents each recommendation and summarizes the actions taken in response to the recommendations.

Legal Services Office restructuring

As part of their review, the liaisons considered Judicial Council restructuring directive 107 and recommended the following:

LSO should be restructured with a management team comprising a Chief Counsel and three managing attorneys over three distinct service areas to ensure continued focus on serving the varied and diverse needs of LSO's clients, which include the appellate and trial courts, the Chief Justice, and the Judicial Council and its administrative agency, the AOC.

---

<sup>4</sup> The office's name has changed over the years. In the 1990s, it was designated as Council and Legal Services. Subsequently, it became the Office of the General Counsel, and in 2012 the office was renamed the Legal Services Office.

(Judicial Council of Cal., supra, at p. 2.)

Judicial Council restructuring directive 107 states:

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts to consider SEC Recommendation 7-72(a) and implement the necessary organizational and staffing changes, contingent upon the council's approval of an organizational structure for the AOC and taking into account the results of the classification and compensation studies to be completed.<sup>5</sup>

Since the release of the Strategic Evaluation Committee report in May 2012, the LSO workforce has been dramatically reduced from the 75 positions referenced in SEC recommendation 7-72(a) to a workforce of 44 positions as of the date of this report. LSO attorney staffing has been reduced from 50 attorneys to the current number of 32 attorneys, exclusive of the Chief Counsel. The LSO management team currently consists of 6 members, excluding the Chief Counsel, as compared to 9 noted in SEC recommendation 7-72(a).

The June 2013 Liaison Report states:

Given the current staffing levels of the LSO workforce and the critical nature of the legal services provided by LSO, we believe that a 10-member LSO attorney management team is appropriate for this office. However, to ensure accountability and clear lines of authority for the varied legal services provided by LSO, it is recommended that the LSO should be restructured to create a new executive leadership team comprising the Chief Counsel and three managing attorneys who lead three distinct areas of service . . . Additionally, in accordance with council directive 107, we recommend that the position of Assistant Chief Counsel be reclassified as a managing attorney position. It is also recommended that one of the managing attorney positions be classified as a senior managing attorney to provide backup and support as second in command to the Chief Counsel. It appears appropriate that the managing attorney leading Judicial Council Services and Legal Opinions would be the best position for second in command.

(a) In addition to the General Counsel, there are nine management level attorney positions in the Legal Services Office, including the Assistant General Counsel, three Managing Attorneys, and five Supervising Attorneys. This is an excessive number of management positions, which should be reduced. The position of Assistant General Counsel could be eliminated. One managing attorney could be assigned to manage each of the two major functional components of the division, house counsel, and Judicial Council services, with each managing attorney reporting directly to the Chief Counsel.

The new structure provides a three-to-one reporting structure under the Chief Counsel and shifts the responsibility for regular day-to-day management workload from the Chief Counsel to the managing attorneys. This shift of direct responsibility for LSO daily activities is an acknowledgement that the Chief Counsel should be involved in providing legal input and expertise to the most critical legal issues for the branch versus being immersed in routine LSO workload. This structure will require continuous communication between the Chief Counsel and the three managing attorneys to ensure that no silos develop in the office. Similar to partners in a law firm, the Chief Counsel and the managing attorneys should meet regularly to share information and make decisions on projects, priorities, and resources that further the goals of the office as a whole. (Judicial Council of Cal., supra, at p. 2.)

Under the new Chief Counsel, with the support of the Administrative Director of the Courts and the Chief of Staff, LSO has taken measures that have substantially implemented the structure proposed by the liaisons. The LSO attorney management team, excluding the Chief Counsel, consists of six members as of March 2014. The position of Assistant Chief Counsel was eliminated after the attorney formerly holding that position retired in 2013. As recommended by the liaisons, instead of hiring a new Assistant Chief Counsel, a managing attorney was promoted in 2014 to the position of senior managing attorney to provide support and backup to the Chief Counsel. Because of retirements, no other managing attorneys are currently employed in LSO. However, to provide the level and structure of leadership necessary to manage the office in the manner recommended by the liaisons, recruitment is under way for two additional managing attorneys. After completion of this hiring process, LSO will have an executive management structure as envisioned by the liaisons, with a Chief Counsel and three managing attorneys, one of whom is designated as a senior managing attorney.

LSO provides legal services in two primary areas: (1) services provided to the council, to the Chief Justice as chair of the council, and to the Administrative Director of the Courts and the AOC as the administrative arm of the council; and (2) services provided to the appellate and trial courts. LSO is currently structured to provide legal services in these areas by organizing its attorneys into six units:

- Rules and Projects Unit
- Legal Opinion Unit
- Transactions and Business Operations Unit
- Real Estate Unit
- Litigation Management Unit
- Labor and Employment Unit

In terms of LSO's management structure, the liaison report recommends that LSO be restructured into three areas of services: (1) Judicial Council Services and Legal Opinions (a merger of the Rules and Projects and Legal Opinion Units); (2) Transactions and Business Operations (incorporating Real Estate into the Transactions and Business Operations Unit); and (3) Litigation Management and Labor and Employment (a merger of the two formerly separate units).

The liaison report further recommends that the new units continue to serve both client groups—the appellate and trial courts along with the Judicial Council, Chief Justice as chair of the council, Administrative Director of the Courts, and AOC—with the responsibility of supervising attorneys divided between the two client groups. LSO is in the process of restructuring its activities into the three organization units described above. Once the full complement of managing attorneys is in place, each will manage one of the combined units. After careful consideration, however, the Administrative Director and Chief of Staff support a variance from the liaison recommendations with respect to the supervisory-level responsibilities. Because the quantity of legal work performed for the courts differs from that for the Judicial Council/AOC clients and because of the need to provide clients with specialized skills and knowledge in the individual subject-matter areas, LSO will continue to be structured along subject-matter groups rather than client groups. The purpose of this structure is to provide better service to clients by providing them with immediate access to supervisors and attorneys with subject-matter expertise specific to the legal issues and inquiries presented.<sup>6</sup>

The liaison report further states:

It is intended that the Chief Counsel and the three managing attorneys hold overall management responsibility, with the supervising/senior attorneys charged with carrying out senior management’s directives for the specific subject matter and client assignments. The level of experience and precise classification for these supervising/senior attorneys should be determined as a part of the internal restructuring and reviewed as a part of the classification and compensation study.

The report’s additional recommendations regarding the management structure will be implemented once the managing attorney positions are filled. As indicated in the report, the level of experience and precise classification for the supervising/senior attorney structure also partially depend on the classification and compensation study.

Role of Chief Counsel

The liaisons considered Judicial Council restructuring directive 115 and recommended that the role of the Chief Counsel and the expectations for that role, along with the areas of responsibility, should be clearly defined to reflect the new organizational structure.

Judicial Council restructuring directive 115 states:

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts, as part of the review of the AOC organizational structure, to review current responsibilities and clearly define the role of the Chief Counsel.

As part of their report to the Judicial Council, the liaisons included an attachment clearly defining the responsibilities and role of the Chief Counsel of the Administrative Office of the Courts.<sup>7</sup>

The description has been adopted and specifies that the Chief Counsel is chief legal advisor to the Judicial Council and to the AOC and office chief of the AOC Legal Services Office, which provides comprehensive legal services to the appellate and trial courts. It adds that the Legal Services Office has two major areas of service: legal advisor and counsel to the Judicial Council and legal advisor and legal services provider to the appellate and trial courts. In these capacities, the Chief Counsel has responsibilities that are enumerated in detail.

Survey of users of LSO services

The liaisons considered Judicial Council restructuring directive 120 and recommended that, to ensure that the appropriate level of client service is provided, particularly in the area of legal opinions, a formal procedure be developed and implemented in LSO to solicit client feedback.

Judicial Council restructuring directive 120 states:

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts that court users of legal services should be surveyed periodically to determine if such services are performed in a timely and satisfactory manner.

In response to this recommendation, a draft survey has been developed to ask court users for their evaluations of and suggestions for improvements to legal services provided by each of the six LSO units.<sup>8</sup> Because of workload issues and staffing concerns, it is anticipated that the survey will be distributed to the courts in late 2014 as a pilot. If the survey proves useful and courts do not find it overly burdensome, LSO will continue to survey the courts on an annual or biennial basis.

Use of outside counsel

With respect to Judicial Council directive 122 regarding the use of outside counsel, the Judicial Council endorsed the liaisons' recommendation that (1) the use of outside counsel is appropriate for specialized areas of law and litigation; and (2) protocols for LSO's use of outside counsel

should be strengthened to ensure that outside counsel is used in the most cost-effective manner. That directive states:

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts to order an independent review of the Office of the General Counsel's use, selection, and management of outside legal counsel to determine whether outside counsel is being utilized in a cost effective manner. Before initiating the independent review, the Administrative Director of the Courts must provide a proposal with options for conducting the review, including the associated costs.

The liaisons undertook the review of the use of outside counsel and reported back to the council as follows:

Based on our experience in the legal field and after conferring with colleagues, we conclude that the use of outside counsel is appropriate and in some cases mandated, providing valuable legal resources for the varying needs of LSO relating to specific subject areas or broad-based branch initiatives (i.e., courthouse transfers). Outside legal counsel provides LSO with sufficient flexibility to meet the changing needs of the branch in an efficient and cost-effective manner.

(Judicial Council of Cal., supra, at p. 10.)

The liaison report also concluded, once it was confirmed that there was a legitimate need to use outside counsel, that a full study of past expenses would be extraordinarily time-consuming and would provide little benefit. Because the goal was to be certain that future expenditures are warranted, the liaisons recommended placing the responsibility for the retention and monitoring of outside counsel with the managing attorney in each area of practice. The liaisons added that (1) there should be written justification for the retention, and the managing attorney should be responsible for ensuring that the hourly rates and time spent are reasonable; (2) at the close of representation a short client feedback report should be obtained, and the managing attorney should evaluate the service provided from LSO's perspective; and (3) an annual report on the use of outside counsel should be provided to the Judicial Council.

Thus, the liaisons recommended that LSO develop:

- A structure in which each managing attorney is responsible for the approval of and justification for using outside counsel based on the area of expertise needed or resource requirements.
- A means for conducting an examination of the cost-effectiveness of using outside counsel versus potentially hiring attorney resources based on specific projects and the duration of legal assistance needed.
- A checklist that must be completed before initiating a contract with outside counsel to confirm that no internal LSO resources are available for the subject-matter area.

- A means of following up with the courts that receive services to gather their input on the services provided by outside counsel through an e-mail questionnaire or survey. This information would be used in tandem with input from the LSO attorneys assigned to the respective cases to identify if the outside counsel should be used for future cases.
- A means of regularly (every 12 months) surveying the market to ensure that what is being charged is appropriate and the rates are appropriate.

The liaisons also recommended that the Administrative Director provide to the Advisory Committee on Financial Accountability and Efficiency for the Judicial Branch an annual report on the use and cost of outside counsel for the committee's consideration and reporting to the council.

In response to these recommendations, the LSO protocol for the retention of outside counsel has been amended to require managing-attorney approval of the hiring of any outside counsel. Under that protocol, the managing attorney (1) reviews the recommendation to hire outside counsel and the expertise of the counsel suggested, and (2) confirms that no internal resource is available for the particular subject matter. The review and approval by the managing attorney are recorded in each file. In addition, on an annual basis, LSO will review the annual attorney fee surveys prepared by various organizations to ensure that the fees charged by outside counsel are appropriate and reasonable. LSO also will send to each court a survey after the conclusion of any significant litigation, arbitration, or proceedings before the Public Employment Relations Board, asking for the court's assessment of the specific legal representation provided by LSO and outside counsel.<sup>9</sup> The survey results will be used in an annual review of the use of outside counsel to ensure the delivery of quality and timely legal services. The LSO also will provide reports on the use and cost of outside counsel to the Advisory Committee on Financial Accountability and Efficiency at the request of the committee.

LSO attorneys located in field offices

In response to Judicial Council directive 117, the liaisons recommended that the AOC continue to support the existing practice of permitting attorney resources to reside in AOC field offices provided there is proper oversight and accountability. That Judicial Council directive states:

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts to adopt an operations model whereby attorneys generally are housed at one location with flexibility to adjust as necessary to meet court needs regionally, including regional demand for additional attorney support and smaller courts that have fewer staff for research and other legal services. The location where attorneys report to work should ensure proper supervision.

The liaison report states that, after reviewing the activities of LSO attorney staff located in the Sacramento and Burbank field offices, the liaisons believe that it is appropriate to have staff in these locations. The liaisons commented that such an arrangement is consistent with the staffing of many government agencies and private law firms.

<sup>9</sup> These surveys will be prepared for the individual case and tailored to the type and nature of the representation.

LSO has followed the recommendation of the liaisons and continues to house attorneys in field offices. Doing so allows more direct communication between LSO attorneys and the courts in their regions.<sup>10</sup> In addition, as recommended by the liaisons, to ensure oversight in the field offices for day-to-day accountability for off-site staff, LSO management requires staff in the field offices to report any absences both to their supervisors and to a designated local staff member, who would enter the appropriate information into the LSO calendar system.

Use of paralegal classifications

The LSO liaisons reviewed Judicial Council restructuring directive 112 and stated that they did not identify a specific need for a paralegal classification. That directive states:

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts to consider SEC Recommendation 7-72(f) and implement the necessary organizational and staffing changes, contingent upon the council's approval of an organizational structure for the AOC and taking into account the results of the classification and compensation studies to be completed.<sup>11</sup>

In their report, the liaisons state that paralegals in private law firms are typically used primarily for high-level administrative work and very minor legal-related work. Given that LSO already employs administrative staff to support LSO attorneys with administrative tasks, the liaisons indicate that to pursue the creation of a paralegal classification does not appear appropriate at this time.<sup>12</sup> Consistent with the LSO liaisons' recommendation, LSO does not employ paralegals.

Dual reporting

The liaison report discusses one other recommendation for LSO. That recommendation states: "All staff outside of LSO providing legal advice or legal-related services that require a law degree should establish a dual reporting relationship to LSO and their current office."<sup>13</sup> On this recommendation relating to attorneys within the AOC, it seems appropriate to wait for the results of the classification and compensation study. That study will expressly study the attorney

(f) Development and use of paralegal classifications, as found elsewhere in legal services throughout both the public and private sectors, could lead to the reduction of attorney positions in the Legal Services Office.

classifications and should provide useful information to assist in any efforts to redefine or change the relationship among the various groups and types of attorneys working for the AOC.

Policy and Cost Implications

LSO's mission continues to be to provide quality, timely, and ethical legal advice and services to the Chief Justice, the Judicial Council, council advisory committees and task forces, the appellate and trial courts, and the AOC. The restructuring of LSO will result in efficiencies and savings from, for example, the conversion of the position of assistant chief counsel into a senior managing attorney position and will continue to require a commitment of effort (for example, for staff and courts to conduct and complete user surveys).

Relevant Strategic Plan Goals and Operational Plan Objectives

Judicial Council strategic Goal VI.C.1 ("Provide a high-quality administrative legal infrastructure to provide consistent, comprehensive legal support and counsel to the courts").

Information on Judicial Council Directives

Council Directive 118

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts that the Office of the General Counsel service model should emphasize that time is of the essence when it comes to delivering advice and opinions to the courts; that recommendations and advice to courts should include a full range of options available to the courts; and that there must be a greater recognition that the AOC's interests may conflict with the specific interests of the courts. Clearer procedures should be put in place to safeguard the interests of individual courts in those instances when legitimate conflicts arise.

SEC Recommendation 7-77

This office must place greater emphasis on being a service provider and in improving how it provides services, including as follows:

(c) The service model should emphasize that time is of the essence when it comes to delivering advice and opinions to the courts; that recommendations and advice to courts should include a full range of options available to the courts; and that there must be a greater recognition that the AOC's interests may conflict with the specific interests of the courts. Clearer procedures should be put in place to safeguard the interests of individual courts in those instances when legitimate conflicts arise.

| x       | COMPLETED: Legal Services has developed and implemented a system to track legal services office-wide and to monitor and provide status and response time updates to requests for legal opinions and advice. Additionally, LSO consults with the courts and other offices when responding to requests for legal advice and utilizes a mandated process to handle potential conflicts over the handling or resolution of litigation on behalf of the courts. |

Responses to directives 108 and 116 set forth steps taken by the Legal Services to speed delivery of requested legal advice and opinions to the courts, based on the client service principle that time is of the essence. Those steps include developing and implementing a Matter Tracking System as a single method to track legal services office-wide, and closely monitoring and providing updates to clients on the status and response time of all requests for legal opinions and advice.

With respect to the direction that recommendations and advice to courts should include a full range of options available to courts, Legal Services will continue to consider, research, and provide available options to clients. When responding to requests for advice, to determine options for courts, Legal Services regularly consults with the courts and other council offices. For example, when conclusions on legal requirements will entail administrative or financial burdens for court clients, Legal Services routinely interfaces with the council's Governmental Affairs to ascertain whether legislation is possible to address court concerns. If policy issues are raised, Legal Services interfaces with other council divisions to discuss the policy and whether a change of policy might be proposed. LSO also regularly interfaces with executive branch agencies to promote its clients' interests in delivery of justice (e.g., coordinating with the Secretary of State with respect to election day issues and judicial elections) and also regularly interfaces with other governmental entities to address concerns of judicial officers (e.g., working with FPPC staff to address security concerns associated with FPPC posting of Statements of Economic Interests).

With respect to the direction that there must be a greater recognition that the AOC’s interests may conflict with the specific interests of the courts and that clearer procedures should be put in place to safeguard the interests of individual courts in those instances when legitimate conflicts arise, LSO relies upon the process set forth in rule of court to address conflicts that may arise over the handling or resolution of litigation.

By statute, the Judicial Council is required to provide for the representation, defense, and indemnification of the courts. (Gov. Code, § 811.9.) By rule of court, courts must use LSO services for claims and litigation management. (Cal. Rules of Court, Rule 10.202 (c) (requiring the trial and appellate courts to notify LSO promptly on receipt of a claim or lawsuit and to forward the claim or lawsuit to LSO for handling).) Because the use of LSO in litigation is mandatory, a process is in place to handle any potential conflicts over the handling or resolution of the litigation. Rule 10.202(d) provides for the resolution of any such dispute. Rule 10.202(d) states that if a court disagrees with a decision of LSO about major strategic decisions, the court may deliver a written objection to LSO and the same will be delivered to the Litigation Management Committee. The Committee will then resolve the dispute. This resolution process is also outlined in the Litigation Management Program Resource Manual, the internal handling guideline used by LSO attorneys, at section 4.3.1, concerning the selection of counsel, and 4.7.1 concerning settlements. The manual is intended to provide guidance and direction to LSO attorneys in achieving the program objectives. In every instance where a court has expressed concern about a proposed decision of the LSO in litigation, court leaders are reminded of the process for addressing concerns with the Litigation Management committee as provided by rule of court.

Legal Services will continue to monitor its management practices on an ongoing basis to speed delivery of requested legal advice and opinions to the courts. Legal Services will continue to consider, research, and provide available options to clients when providing legal advice. Legal Services will continue to adhere to the process mandated by California Rule of Court in those cases when a court may disagree with a major strategic decision by Legal Services it relates to litigation on behalf of the courts.

4.3.1 SELECTION

In addition, the OGC attorney also should discuss with a supervising attorney any disagreement by court defendants about the counsel proposed by OGC. If the court's objection cannot be resolved after discussions between the court and OGC, rule 6.202 [now rule 10.202] allows the Presiding Judge to present to OGC a written statement of the objection, which OGC will present to the Litigation Management Committee for resolution.<sup>1</sup>

4.7.1 GENERAL GUIDELINES

Pursuant to rule 6.202 [now rule 10.202], the OGC makes settlement decisions or recommendations after consultation with the affected court and any individual court defendant being provided representation under the program. The OGC attorney managing a case should discuss settlement alternatives with court defendants when considering a settlement recommendation. If a court defendant disagrees with a proposed settlement plan, and the disagreement cannot be resolved, the court may present a written objection to the Litigation Management Committee, through the OGC. ## Council Directive 119

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts to place emphasis on reducing bottlenecks for advice, contracts, and other projects. More effective tickler and tracking systems for opinions, contracts, and other documents should be put in place.

SEC Recommendation 7-77

This office must place greater emphasis on being a service provider and in improving how it provides services, including as follows:

(d) Emphasis must be placed on reducing bottlenecks for advice, contracts, and other projects. More effective tickler and tracking systems for opinions, contracts, and other documents should be put in place.

COMPLETED: Legal Services developed and implemented a matter tracking system to track workload of all legal services and to support allocation of incoming work and supervision of open matters. Additionally, attorneys in other units are regularly assigned advice matters to expedite the delivery of requested legal guidance.

To address resource constraints office-wide, ensure appropriate supervision and allocation of work, and provide a more effective tickler and tracking system for opinions, contracts, and other documents, the Legal Services developed a matter tracking system, which was implemented on February 1, for a 90- day trial and evaluation period and then was fully implemented in April of 2013. The matter tracking system tracks matters from assignment to completion date, assigns a level of complexity for each matter, and provides a uniform tickler system for review of open matters. As part of the system, attorneys log all legal services matters (e.g., requests for legal advice and contracts) and Legal Services management receives weekly updates about open and closed matters and may review the assignment log at any time.

The matter tracking system has proven to be both an efficient and effective way to track the workload of all legal services units, including requests for opinions, contracts, and other documents and to support appropriate allocation of incoming work and supervision of open matters.

In addition to implementation of the matter tracking system, the Legal Services has taken other actions to reduce bottlenecks for advice, contracts, and other projects. Within the Legal Opinions Unit, to help address the impact of reduced attorney staff and meet client needs, attorneys in other units are regularly assigned advice matters, thereby expediting delivery of requested legal guidance. In addition, to speed review of opinions, a senior attorney now shares with the supervising attorney the responsibility to review draft opinions. With respect to contracts and other documents, Legal Services also is working closely with the Business Services Unit of Fiscal Services, including meeting monthly with the Fiscal Services Assistant Director responsible for the Business Services Unit, to assist the Business Services Unit in timely delivery of completed contracts.

Information on Judicial Council Directives

Council Directive 120

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts that court users of legal services should be surveyed periodically to determine if such services are performed in a timely and satisfactory manner.

This office must place greater emphasis on being a service provider and in improving how it provides services, including as follows:

| x | COMPLETED: Legal Services had developed a customer service survey for issuance to its customers in 2014, but deferred the issuance in anticipation of the issuance of a organization-wide customer service survey which is currently scheduled for completion in the second quarter of 2016. |

At the February 2013 Judicial Council meeting, Judicial Council liaisons to Legal Services, Justice Douglas Miller and Ms. Edith Matthai, were asked to take the lead on reviewing the cost-effectiveness of Legal Services current use of outside counsel in response to Judicial Council directive 122. While addressing this request, the liaisons concluded that additional Legal Services-related restructuring directives were appropriate for inclusion in the liaisons' review and would enable a more comprehensive evaluation.

In addition to reviewing the cost-effectiveness of the use of outside counsel, the liaisons' review was expanded to include defining the role of the Chief Counsel; evaluating the need for use of a paralegal classification; analyzing the use of Legal Services attorney staff in council field offices; and analyzing the current Legal Services organizational structure, services, and attorney services provided by the council outside of Legal Services.

In a report to the Judicial Council in June 2013, the liaisons recommended that, to ensure that the appropriate level of client service is provided, particularly in the area of legal opinions, a formal procedure be developed and implemented in Legal Services to solicit client feedback.

In a report to council at the April 25, 2014 council meeting, the Administrative Director and Chief Counsel reported that in response to this recommendation, a draft survey had been developed to ask court users for their evaluations of and suggestions for improvements to legal services provided by each of the six Legal Services units. At the same time, the organization was in the midst of discussing the issuance of an organization-wide customer service survey. As such, Legal Services survey was deferred until a later time.

In the interim, Legal Services continues to reach out to its customers through other avenues:

- Emails are issued to courts in those cases where outside counsel was utilized to determine if they were satisfied with the service of the outside counsel and in-house services.
- Annually, Legal Services reaches out to Presiding Judges and Court Executive Officers to ask for their input on services received.

Customer services surveys for Legal Services will be an element within the organization-wide customer service survey that will be developed and issued in response to the California State Auditor’s recommendation that the council survey its branch customers to identify service needs. This first step in the organizational assessment is planned for completion by the second quarter of 2016.

Executive Summary

The Legal Services Office (LSO) is an office of the Administrative Office of the Courts (AOC) under the Judicial Council and Court Leadership Services Division. The mission of LSO is to provide quality, timely, and ethical legal advice and services to the Chief Justice, the Judicial Council, council advisory committees and task forces, the appellate and trial courts, and the AOC. The Judicial Council has charged the office with providing “consistent, comprehensive legal support and counsel to the courts.” (Judicial Council of Cal./Admin. Off. of Cts., Justice in Focus: The Strategic Plan for California’s Judicial Branch 2006–2012 (2006), p. 49.) In response to Judicial Council restructuring directives and the recommendations of the Judicial Council liaisons to LSO, the office has been significantly restructured. This informational report summarizes the activities undertaken in response to the June 2013 recommendations of the Judicial Council liaisons.

Previous Council Action

- In March 2011, Chief Justice Tani G. Cantil-Sakauye created the Strategic Evaluation Committee (SEC) to conduct an in-depth review of the Administrative Office of the Courts, the staff agency to the Judicial Council, with a view toward promoting transparency, accountability, and efficiency.

- On August 31, 2012, based on the SEC report and its recommendations, the Judicial Council approved AOC realignment directives and directed the Administrative Director to report on them.
- At the February 2013 council meeting, the council liaisons to LSO were asked to take the lead on reviewing the cost-effectiveness of LSO's current use of outside counsel in response to Judicial Council directive 122. While addressing this request, the liaisons concluded that additional LSO-related restructuring directives were appropriate for inclusion in the liaisons' review and would enable a more comprehensive evaluation.<sup>1</sup>
- In addition to reviewing the cost-effectiveness of the use of outside counsel, the liaisons' review was expanded to include defining the role of the Chief Counsel; evaluating the need for use of a paralegal classification; analyzing the use of LSO attorney staff in AOC field offices; and analyzing the current LSO organizational structure, LSO services, and attorney services provided by the AOC outside of LSO.
- In June 2013, the LSO liaisons recommended that the Judicial Council endorse the following recommendations to the Administrative Director:<sup>2</sup>
  1. LSO should be restructured with a management team comprising a Chief Counsel and three managing attorneys over three distinct service areas to ensure continued focus on serving the varied and diverse needs of LSO's clients, which include the appellate and trial courts, the Chief Justice, and the Judicial Council and its administrative agency, the AOC.
  2. LSO should implement a formal structure to solicit client feedback on a regular basis.
  3. The role of the Chief Counsel and the expectations for that role and areas of responsibility should be clearly defined to reflect the new organizational structure.
  4. The use of outside counsel is appropriate for specialized areas of law and litigation. The protocols for LSO's use of outside counsel should be strengthened to ensure that outside counsel is used in the most cost-effective manner.
  5. The AOC should continue to support the existing practice of permitting attorney resources to reside in AOC field offices provided there is proper oversight and accountability.

6. All staff outside of LSO providing legal advice or legal-related services that require a law degree should establish a dual reporting relationship to LSO and their current office.
  7. Given the recent retirement announcement by the current Chief Counsel, the successor Chief Counsel should be afforded the opportunity to implement the restructuring and the formation of the management team under the supervision of the Chief of Staff.
- At the June 2013 Judicial Council meeting, the council endorsed the liaisons' recommendations and agreed with the liaisons that modifications might be needed once these recommendations are implemented. It further directed the Administrative Director of the Courts to report back on implementation of the liaisons' recommendations by the end of March 2014.<sup>3</sup>

Methodology and Process

Restructuring within LSO has occurred as a result of the implementation of the liaisons' recommendations. As indicated below, six of the seven recommendations have been implemented, with one variance: (1) the LSO management structure has been modified; (2) the responsibilities of the Chief Counsel have been reviewed and clearly defined; (3) a process for periodically surveying court users of legal services is being put into place; (4) protocols have been developed for retention of outside counsel; (5) policies have been implemented to ensure appropriate oversight in the field offices for day-to-day accountability of LSO attorneys and staff in field offices; and (6) paralegals have not and are not currently employed by the LSO. Finally, although LSO works closely with other AOC offices with attorneys, the liaisons' recommendation that AOC attorneys outside of LSO who provide legal advice or legal related services that require a law degree should have a dual reporting relationship to LSO and their current office has not been implemented. As discussed below, for this recommendation, it seems appropriate to wait for the results of the pending classification and compensation study, which will expressly review the attorney classification.

Background on the Legal Services Office

The Legal Services Office provides a variety of services that historically, before state trial court funding, were provided by the counties and reflect the varying and expanded needs of judicial branch entities in today's environment.

Before trial court funding, the Legal Services Office comprised a small group of attorney staff primarily responsible for drafting council rules of court and forms and legislation, providing legal opinions to the council and the Administrative Director, and staffing council advisory committees and other similar bodies.<sup>4</sup> Following trial court funding, the role of LSO expanded to provide to the superior courts legal services that previously had been provided by county counsels' offices. LSO began providing trial courts with legal opinions on judicial administration issues. The council also approved the creation of a Litigation Management Program in 1999, adopting rules of court assigning the responsibility to LSO for the management of all claims and litigation against the courts.

After the enactment of the Trial Court Employment Protection and Governance Act of 2000, LSO began providing labor and employment legal services. LSO's areas of responsibility continued to expand—for example, with the establishment of a unit to provide transactional and business-related advice and services. After passage of the Trial Court Facilities Act of 2002, the Real Estate Unit was established to provide the facilities-related legal work resulting from this legislation. Finally, LSO attorney positions were established in the field offices to better facilitate the provision of legal services to the superior courts.

The growth of LSO and the expansion of the services it provides have significantly changed in the past few years. Based on the council directives and other developments, LSO has ceased to grow and has been notably reduced in size. This and other changes are described in detail below.

Implementing the directives

In implementing the Judicial Council directives to LSO and the council liaisons' recommendations, the Administrative Director of the Courts and the Chief of Staff worked closely with the Chief Counsel and her management team. They have also benefitted greatly from advice from the Judicial Council liaisons to LSO and other council members.

The liaison report specifically addresses implementation of the council liaisons' recommendations to the Administrative Director of the Courts, which were endorsed by the Judicial Council. The report presents each recommendation and summarizes the actions taken in response to the recommendations.

Legal Services Office restructuring

As part of their review, the liaisons considered Judicial Council restructuring directive 107 and recommended the following:

LSO should be restructured with a management team comprising a Chief Counsel and three managing attorneys over three distinct service areas to ensure continued focus on serving the varied and diverse needs of LSO's clients, which include the appellate and trial courts, the Chief Justice, and the Judicial Council and its administrative agency, the AOC.

---

<sup>4</sup> The office's name has changed over the years. In the 1990s, it was designated as Council and Legal Services. Subsequently, it became the Office of the General Counsel, and in 2012 the office was renamed the Legal Services Office.

(Judicial Council of Cal., supra, at p. 2.)

Judicial Council restructuring directive 107 states:

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts to consider SEC Recommendation 7-72(a) and implement the necessary organizational and staffing changes, contingent upon the council's approval of an organizational structure for the AOC and taking into account the results of the classification and compensation studies to be completed.<sup>5</sup>

Since the release of the Strategic Evaluation Committee report in May 2012, the LSO workforce has been dramatically reduced from the 75 positions referenced in SEC recommendation 7-72(a) to a workforce of 44 positions as of the date of this report. LSO attorney staffing has been reduced from 50 attorneys to the current number of 32 attorneys, exclusive of the Chief Counsel. The LSO management team currently consists of 6 members, excluding the Chief Counsel, as compared to 9 noted in SEC recommendation 7-72(a).

The June 2013 Liaison Report states:

Given the current staffing levels of the LSO workforce and the critical nature of the legal services provided by LSO, we believe that a 10-member LSO attorney management team is appropriate for this office. However, to ensure accountability and clear lines of authority for the varied legal services provided by LSO, it is recommended that the LSO should be restructured to create a new executive leadership team comprising the Chief Counsel and three managing attorneys who lead three distinct areas of service . . . Additionally, in accordance with council directive 107, we recommend that the position of Assistant Chief Counsel be reclassified as a managing attorney position. It is also recommended that one of the managing attorney positions be classified as a senior managing attorney to provide backup and support as second in command to the Chief Counsel. It appears appropriate that the managing attorney leading Judicial Council Services and Legal Opinions would be the best position for second in command.

(a) In addition to the General Counsel, there are nine management level attorney positions in the Legal Services Office, including the Assistant General Counsel, three Managing Attorneys, and five Supervising Attorneys. This is an excessive number of management positions, which should be reduced. The position of Assistant General Counsel could be eliminated. One managing attorney could be assigned to manage each of the two major functional components of the division, house counsel, and Judicial Council services, with each managing attorney reporting directly to the Chief Counsel.

The new structure provides a three-to-one reporting structure under the Chief Counsel and shifts the responsibility for regular day-to-day management workload from the Chief Counsel to the managing attorneys. This shift of direct responsibility for LSO daily activities is an acknowledgement that the Chief Counsel should be involved in providing legal input and expertise to the most critical legal issues for the branch versus being immersed in routine LSO workload. This structure will require continuous communication between the Chief Counsel and the three managing attorneys to ensure that no silos develop in the office. Similar to partners in a law firm, the Chief Counsel and the managing attorneys should meet regularly to share information and make decisions on projects, priorities, and resources that further the goals of the office as a whole. (Judicial Council of Cal., supra, at p. 2.)

Under the new Chief Counsel, with the support of the Administrative Director of the Courts and the Chief of Staff, LSO has taken measures that have substantially implemented the structure proposed by the liaisons. The LSO attorney management team, excluding the Chief Counsel, consists of six members as of March 2014. The position of Assistant Chief Counsel was eliminated after the attorney formerly holding that position retired in 2013. As recommended by the liaisons, instead of hiring a new Assistant Chief Counsel, a managing attorney was promoted in 2014 to the position of senior managing attorney to provide support and backup to the Chief Counsel. Because of retirements, no other managing attorneys are currently employed in LSO. However, to provide the level and structure of leadership necessary to manage the office in the manner recommended by the liaisons, recruitment is under way for two additional managing attorneys. After completion of this hiring process, LSO will have an executive management structure as envisioned by the liaisons, with a Chief Counsel and three managing attorneys, one of whom is designated as a senior managing attorney.

LSO provides legal services in two primary areas: (1) services provided to the council, to the Chief Justice as chair of the council, and to the Administrative Director of the Courts and the AOC as the administrative arm of the council; and (2) services provided to the appellate and trial courts. LSO is currently structured to provide legal services in these areas by organizing its attorneys into six units:

- Rules and Projects Unit
- Legal Opinion Unit
- Transactions and Business Operations Unit
- Real Estate Unit
- Litigation Management Unit
- Labor and Employment Unit

In terms of LSO's management structure, the liaison report recommends that LSO be restructured into three areas of services: (1) Judicial Council Services and Legal Opinions (a merger of the Rules and Projects and Legal Opinion Units); (2) Transactions and Business Operations (incorporating Real Estate into the Transactions and Business Operations Unit); and (3) Litigation Management and Labor and Employment (a merger of the two formerly separate units).

The liaison report further recommends that the new units continue to serve both client groups—the appellate and trial courts along with the Judicial Council, Chief Justice as chair of the council, Administrative Director of the Courts, and AOC—with the responsibility of supervising attorneys divided between the two client groups. LSO is in the process of restructuring its activities into the three organization units described above. Once the full complement of managing attorneys is in place, each will manage one of the combined units. After careful consideration, however, the Administrative Director and Chief of Staff support a variance from the liaison recommendations with respect to the supervisory-level responsibilities. Because the quantity of legal work performed for the courts differs from that for the Judicial Council/AOC clients and because of the need to provide clients with specialized skills and knowledge in the individual subject-matter areas, LSO will continue to be structured along subject-matter groups rather than client groups. The purpose of this structure is to provide better service to clients by providing them with immediate access to supervisors and attorneys with subject-matter expertise specific to the legal issues and inquiries presented.<sup>6</sup>

The liaison report further states:

It is intended that the Chief Counsel and the three managing attorneys hold overall management responsibility, with the supervising/senior attorneys charged with carrying out senior management’s directives for the specific subject matter and client assignments. The level of experience and precise classification for these supervising/senior attorneys should be determined as a part of the internal restructuring and reviewed as a part of the classification and compensation study.

The report’s additional recommendations regarding the management structure will be implemented once the managing attorney positions are filled. As indicated in the report, the level of experience and precise classification for the supervising/senior attorney structure also partially depend on the classification and compensation study.

Role of Chief Counsel

The liaisons considered Judicial Council restructuring directive 115 and recommended that the role of the Chief Counsel and the expectations for that role, along with the areas of responsibility, should be clearly defined to reflect the new organizational structure.

Judicial Council restructuring directive 115 states:

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts, as part of the review of the AOC organizational structure, to review current responsibilities and clearly define the role of the Chief Counsel.

As part of their report to the Judicial Council, the liaisons included an attachment clearly defining the responsibilities and role of the Chief Counsel of the Administrative Office of the Courts.<sup>7</sup>

The description has been adopted and specifies that the Chief Counsel is chief legal advisor to the Judicial Council and to the AOC and office chief of the AOC Legal Services Office, which provides comprehensive legal services to the appellate and trial courts. It adds that the Legal Services Office has two major areas of service: legal advisor and counsel to the Judicial Council and legal advisor and legal services provider to the appellate and trial courts. In these capacities, the Chief Counsel has responsibilities that are enumerated in detail.

Survey of users of LSO services

The liaisons considered Judicial Council restructuring directive 120 and recommended that, to ensure that the appropriate level of client service is provided, particularly in the area of legal opinions, a formal procedure be developed and implemented in LSO to solicit client feedback.

Judicial Council restructuring directive 120 states:

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts that court users of legal services should be surveyed periodically to determine if such services are performed in a timely and satisfactory manner.

In response to this recommendation, a draft survey has been developed to ask court users for their evaluations of and suggestions for improvements to legal services provided by each of the six LSO units.<sup>8</sup> Because of workload issues and staffing concerns, it is anticipated that the survey will be distributed to the courts in late 2014 as a pilot. If the survey proves useful and courts do not find it overly burdensome, LSO will continue to survey the courts on an annual or biennial basis.

Use of outside counsel

With respect to Judicial Council directive 122 regarding the use of outside counsel, the Judicial Council endorsed the liaisons' recommendation that (1) the use of outside counsel is appropriate for specialized areas of law and litigation; and (2) protocols for LSO's use of outside counsel

should be strengthened to ensure that outside counsel is used in the most cost-effective manner. That directive states:

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts to order an independent review of the Office of the General Counsel's use, selection, and management of outside legal counsel to determine whether outside counsel is being utilized in a cost effective manner. Before initiating the independent review, the Administrative Director of the Courts must provide a proposal with options for conducting the review, including the associated costs.

The liaisons undertook the review of the use of outside counsel and reported back to the council as follows:

Based on our experience in the legal field and after conferring with colleagues, we conclude that the use of outside counsel is appropriate and in some cases mandated, providing valuable legal resources for the varying needs of LSO relating to specific subject areas or broad-based branch initiatives (i.e., courthouse transfers). Outside legal counsel provides LSO with sufficient flexibility to meet the changing needs of the branch in an efficient and cost-effective manner.

(Judicial Council of Cal., supra, at p. 10.)

The liaison report also concluded, once it was confirmed that there was a legitimate need to use outside counsel, that a full study of past expenses would be extraordinarily time-consuming and would provide little benefit. Because the goal was to be certain that future expenditures are warranted, the liaisons recommended placing the responsibility for the retention and monitoring of outside counsel with the managing attorney in each area of practice. The liaisons added that (1) there should be written justification for the retention, and the managing attorney should be responsible for ensuring that the hourly rates and time spent are reasonable; (2) at the close of representation a short client feedback report should be obtained, and the managing attorney should evaluate the service provided from LSO's perspective; and (3) an annual report on the use of outside counsel should be provided to the Judicial Council.

Thus, the liaisons recommended that LSO develop:

- A structure in which each managing attorney is responsible for the approval of and justification for using outside counsel based on the area of expertise needed or resource requirements.
- A means for conducting an examination of the cost-effectiveness of using outside counsel versus potentially hiring attorney resources based on specific projects and the duration of legal assistance needed.
- A checklist that must be completed before initiating a contract with outside counsel to confirm that no internal LSO resources are available for the subject-matter area.

- A means of following up with the courts that receive services to gather their input on the services provided by outside counsel through an e-mail questionnaire or survey. This information would be used in tandem with input from the LSO attorneys assigned to the respective cases to identify if the outside counsel should be used for future cases.
- A means of regularly (every 12 months) surveying the market to ensure that what is being charged is appropriate and the rates are appropriate.

The liaisons also recommended that the Administrative Director provide to the Advisory Committee on Financial Accountability and Efficiency for the Judicial Branch an annual report on the use and cost of outside counsel for the committee's consideration and reporting to the council.

In response to these recommendations, the LSO protocol for the retention of outside counsel has been amended to require managing-attorney approval of the hiring of any outside counsel. Under that protocol, the managing attorney (1) reviews the recommendation to hire outside counsel and the expertise of the counsel suggested, and (2) confirms that no internal resource is available for the particular subject matter. The review and approval by the managing attorney are recorded in each file. In addition, on an annual basis, LSO will review the annual attorney fee surveys prepared by various organizations to ensure that the fees charged by outside counsel are appropriate and reasonable. LSO also will send to each court a survey after the conclusion of any significant litigation, arbitration, or proceedings before the Public Employment Relations Board, asking for the court's assessment of the specific legal representation provided by LSO and outside counsel.<sup>9</sup> The survey results will be used in an annual review of the use of outside counsel to ensure the delivery of quality and timely legal services. The LSO also will provide reports on the use and cost of outside counsel to the Advisory Committee on Financial Accountability and Efficiency at the request of the committee.

LSO attorneys located in field offices

In response to Judicial Council directive 117, the liaisons recommended that the AOC continue to support the existing practice of permitting attorney resources to reside in AOC field offices provided there is proper oversight and accountability. That Judicial Council directive states:

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts to adopt an operations model whereby attorneys generally are housed at one location with flexibility to adjust as necessary to meet court needs regionally, including regional demand for additional attorney support and smaller courts that have fewer staff for research and other legal services. The location where attorneys report to work should ensure proper supervision.

The liaison report states that, after reviewing the activities of LSO attorney staff located in the Sacramento and Burbank field offices, the liaisons believe that it is appropriate to have staff in these locations. The liaisons commented that such an arrangement is consistent with the staffing of many government agencies and private law firms.

<sup>9</sup> These surveys will be prepared for the individual case and tailored to the type and nature of the representation.

LSO has followed the recommendation of the liaisons and continues to house attorneys in field offices. Doing so allows more direct communication between LSO attorneys and the courts in their regions.<sup>10</sup> In addition, as recommended by the liaisons, to ensure oversight in the field offices for day-to-day accountability for off-site staff, LSO management requires staff in the field offices to report any absences both to their supervisors and to a designated local staff member, who would enter the appropriate information into the LSO calendar system.

Use of paralegal classifications

The LSO liaisons reviewed Judicial Council restructuring directive 112 and stated that they did not identify a specific need for a paralegal classification. That directive states:

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts to consider SEC Recommendation 7-72(f) and implement the necessary organizational and staffing changes, contingent upon the council's approval of an organizational structure for the AOC and taking into account the results of the classification and compensation studies to be completed.<sup>11</sup>

In their report, the liaisons state that paralegals in private law firms are typically used primarily for high-level administrative work and very minor legal-related work. Given that LSO already employs administrative staff to support LSO attorneys with administrative tasks, the liaisons indicate that to pursue the creation of a paralegal classification does not appear appropriate at this time.<sup>12</sup> Consistent with the LSO liaisons' recommendation, LSO does not employ paralegals.

Dual reporting

The liaison report discusses one other recommendation for LSO. That recommendation states: "All staff outside of LSO providing legal advice or legal-related services that require a law degree should establish a dual reporting relationship to LSO and their current office."<sup>13</sup> On this recommendation relating to attorneys within the AOC, it seems appropriate to wait for the results of the classification and compensation study. That study will expressly study the attorney

(f) Development and use of paralegal classifications, as found elsewhere in legal services throughout both the public and private sectors, could lead to the reduction of attorney positions in the Legal Services Office.

classifications and should provide useful information to assist in any efforts to redefine or change the relationship among the various groups and types of attorneys working for the AOC.

Policy and Cost Implications

LSO's mission continues to be to provide quality, timely, and ethical legal advice and services to the Chief Justice, the Judicial Council, council advisory committees and task forces, the appellate and trial courts, and the AOC. The restructuring of LSO will result in efficiencies and savings from, for example, the conversion of the position of assistant chief counsel into a senior managing attorney position and will continue to require a commitment of effort (for example, for staff and courts to conduct and complete user surveys).

Relevant Strategic Plan Goals and Operational Plan Objectives

Judicial Council strategic Goal VI.C.1 ("Provide a high-quality administrative legal infrastructure to provide consistent, comprehensive legal support and counsel to the courts").

Legal Services Office

Attachment B
Role of Chief Counsel of the Administrative Office of the Courts

The Chief Counsel of the Administrative Office of the Courts (AOC) is chief legal advisor to the Judicial Council of California and to the AOC and director of the AOC Legal Services Office, which provides comprehensive legal services to the AOC and to the appellate and trial courts. The Legal Services Office has two major areas of service: legal advisor and counsel to the Judicial Council and legal advisor and legal services provider to the appellate and trial courts.

I. Legal Advisor and Counsel to the Judicial Council

The role of legal advisor and counsel to the Judicial Council encompasses the legal services provided in support of the Chief Justice as Chair of the Judicial Council, the Judicial Council and its committees and task forces, and the AOC as staff agency to the Judicial Council.

In this capacity, the Chief Counsel is responsible for the following:

- Judicial Council Legal Support
  - Provide legal advice and briefings to the Chief Justice, the Judicial Council, and internal council committees on matters of importance to Judicial Council business.
  - Provide legal support and staffing of Judicial Council internal committees and council advisory committees.
  - Provide legal review of rules, forms, standards of judicial administration, and jury instructions for Judicial Council consideration.
  - Provide legal review of legislation and regulations for legal and programmatic impact in collaboration with the AOC Office of Governmental Affairs.
  - Provide legal support to the Chief Justice in evaluating and making recommendations on petitions for coordination of complex civil cases.
  - Facilitate filing of local court rules with the council and authorization by the Chief Justice of alternative effective dates of local rules.
  - Interact with other branches of government and external entities (e.g., Attorney General's Office, Commission on Judicial Performance, State Bar of California State Bar, Secretary of State, California Fair Political Practices Commission, etc.) on wide range of judicial administration legal issues.
  - Participate in meetings and conferences as the legal representative of the Judicial Council, AOC, and the judicial branch, as appropriate.
- AOC and Administrative Director of the Courts Legal Support
  - Provide legal advice and briefings to the Administrative Director, Division Chiefs, and Office Directors on legal issues affecting AOC programs and

- operations and on legal issues affecting planning, development, and review of AOC programs and policies.
- Identify legal and risk management issues and collaborate on developing and implementing strategies for addressing issues.
  - Collaborate with other AOC offices on legislative, fiscal, facilities, technology, and other matters affecting the judicial branch to develop strategies for implementing new requirements and responding to emerging issues.
  - Chief Counsel Administrative Activities
    - Manage the AOC Legal Services Office, including planning and directing work, providing legal policy direction, providing for internal staff development and training and succession planning, and participating in recruitment and selection of staff.
      - Provides general direction on the office's priorities, policies, and operations.
      - Manages the Legal Services Office budget and resources; develops and implements strategies to meet increasing workload demands with limited resources.
      - Establishes and implements performance and development plans for direct reports.

II. Legal Advisor and Provider of Legal Services to the Appellate and Trial Courts and the AOC

In this capacity, the Chief Counsel provides direction and oversees the following programs and activities that provide legal services to the appellate and trial courts and to the AOC:

- Labor and Employment:
  - Responds to labor and employment issues in collaboration with the AOC Human Resources Services Office (HRSO), as appropriate.
  - Provides legal advice and guidance to minimize risk of labor disputes and employment litigation.
  - Provides legal advice in addressing sensitive personnel issues.
  - Assists HRSO in managing legal aspects of investigations of internal complaint of discrimination, harassment, retaliation, and other similar complaints, and advises about complaint resolution.
  - Drafts personnel policies to ensure compliance with applicable law and to avoid litigation.
  - Upon request, advises trial courts regarding labor relations matters (MOUs, labor relation rules, progressive discipline, personnel actions, etc.).
  - Provides ongoing support to HRSO in addressing labor relation issues for trial courts.

- Upon request, provides legal advice and representation for trial courts in labor arbitrations and complaints before the Public Employment Relations Board.
- Litigation Management:
  - Under the direction of the Administrative Director of the Courts and consistent with rules of court, manages and administers the Judicial Council's Litigation Management Program.
  - Staffs the council's Litigation Management Committee, which oversees claims and litigation against judicial branch entities in which the likely exposure is $100,000 or more or that raise issues of significance to the judicial branch.
  - Handles claims against judicial branch entities, making recommendations to the council's Litigation Management Committee for settlements at or above $100,000.
  - Manages litigation against judicial branch entities, including selecting and directing outside counsel retained to represent judicial branch entities and making recommendations to the council's Litigation Management Committee for settlements at or above $100,000.
  - Provides annual litigation reports to the Litigation Management Committee, the Judicial Council, the appellate and trial courts, and the AOC.
  - Manages affirmative litigation on behalf of the courts and AOC.
  - Provides for representation of courts and AOC at administrative law hearings and judicial proceedings.
- Legal Opinions:
  - Upon request, provides legal advice and opinions to court leaders on judicial administration issues.
  - Provides statewide legal advice and guidance to court leaders on issues of statewide importance.
  - Upon request, provides legal advice and opinions to AOC leadership on wide range of issues affecting the judicial branch and judicial branch entities.
- Real Estate and Transactions and Business Operations:
  - Provides legal services and support for court facilities-related transactions, including acquisition, construction, renovation, operation, and maintenance of court facilities.
  - Provides legal services and support for solicitation, contracting, and procurement of goods and services, including technology transactions.

- Provides legal advice on issues related to procurement, risk management, business administration, and operational initiatives.
- Provides legal advice for compliance audits under federal and state law.
- Provides legal advice on leases, contracts, and other documents requiring approval of the Administrative Director of the Courts.
- Oversees the selection, management, and evaluation of external legal resources/outside counsel retained to augment transactional services by the Legal Services Office.

Many HR functions have been assessed over the course of several months for the purpose of ensuring that the respective roles of HR and Legal Services are properly defined. Processes for employee discipline are being modified and are now being fully documented. This ensures the appropriate parts of the agency are engaged at the appropriate time.

As a result, communication between the two offices has been significantly enhanced, leading to more distinct roles and responsibilities for each.

At the June 28, 2013, Judicial Council meeting, the council approved recommendations contained in a report from the council Liaisons to Legal Services relating to the use of outside counsel by Legal Services. The council liaisons concluded that the use of outside counsel is appropriate and in some cases mandated providing valuable legal resources for the varying needs of Legal Services. The council approved various recommendations proposed by the council liaisons designed to assist LSO in reinforcing its existing protocols for utilizing outside counsel to ensure that outside counsel is monitored, supervised, and managed.

At the April 8, 2014 Judicial Council meeting, the Administrative Director and Chief Counsel reported that in response to these recommendations, the Legal Services protocol for the retention of outside counsel had been amended to require managing-attorney approval of the hiring of any outside counsel. Under that protocol, the managing attorney (1) reviews the recommendation to hire outside counsel and the expertise of the counsel suggested, and (2) confirms that no internal resource is available for the particular subject matter. The review and approval by the managing attorney are recorded in each file. In addition, on an annual basis, Legal Services reviews the annual attorney fee surveys prepared by various organizations to ensure that the fees charged by outside counsel are appropriate and reasonable. Legal Services also sends to each court a survey after the conclusion of any significant litigation, arbitration, or proceedings before the Public Employment Relations Board, asking for the court's assessment of the specific legal representation provided by Legal Services and outside counsel. The survey results are used in an annual review of the use of outside counsel to ensure the delivery of quality and timely legal services. Legal Services also provides reports on the use and cost of outside counsel to the Advisory Committee on Financial Accountability and Efficiency at the request of the committee.

ASSESSMENT OF IMPLEMENTATION

Legal Services continues to assess the use of outside counsel and will be posting a Request for Information to obtain information on attorney fees, second quarter 2015, so that it can ensure that the use of outside counsel is cost effective and useful to the courts.

Executive Summary

In response to directives of the Judicial Council arising from the Strategic Evaluation Committee's final report, as Judicial Council Liaisons for the Administrative Office of the Courts (AOC), Legal Services Office (LSO), Justice Douglas Miller and Edith Matthai are proposing recommendations relating to:

- LSO organizational structure and services;
- The role of the Chief Counsel;
- Attorney services provided by the AOC outside of LSO;
- The use of outside counsel by LSO;
- LSO attorney staff housed in AOC field offices; and
- The use of a paralegal classification in LSO.

Recommendation

At the February 2013 council meeting, the Legal Services Office (LSO) liaisons were requested by the council to take the lead on reviewing the cost-effectiveness of LSO's current use of outside counsel in response to Judicial Council directive 122.

While addressing this request, it became evident that there were additional LSO-related restructuring directives that were appropriate for inclusion in the liaisons' review and would enable a more comprehensive evaluation. Consequently, in addition to reviewing the cost-effectiveness of the use of outside counsel, the liaisons' review was expanded to include: defining the role of the Chief Counsel; evaluating the need for utilization of a paralegal classification; analyzing the use of LSO attorney staff in AOC field offices; and analyzing the current LSO organizational structure, LSO services, and attorney services provided by the AOC outside of LSO.

The LSO liaisons acknowledge that implementation of Judicial Council directives is the responsibility of the Administrative Director of the Courts. However, based on our review, we encourage the Administrative Director to implement the following recommendations with the concurrence of the council.

It is recognized that modifications may be needed once these recommendations are implemented. It is therefore recommended that the Administrative Director return to the council 12 to 18 months after implementation with a post-implementation evaluation.

The following LSO liaisons' recommendations are described more fully in the "Rationale for Recommendations" section of this report.<sup>1</sup>

We recommend that the Judicial Council endorse the following recommendations to the Administrative Director, and direct him to report back to the council on implementation by March 31, 2014.

1. LSO should be restructured with a management team comprising a Chief Counsel and three managing attorneys over three distinct service areas to ensure continued focus on serving the varied and diverse needs of LSO's clients, which include the appellate and trial courts, the Chief Justice, and the Judicial Council and its administrative agency, the AOC.
2. LSO should implement a formal structure to solicit client feedback on a regular basis.
3. The role of the Chief Counsel and its expectations and areas of responsibility should be clearly defined to reflect the new organizational structure.

4. The use of outside counsel is appropriate for specialized areas of law and litigation. The protocols for LSO's use of outside counsel should be strengthened to ensure that outside counsel is used in the most cost-effective manner.
5. The AOC should continue to support the existing practice of permitting attorney resources to reside in AOC field offices provided there is proper oversight and accountability.
6. All staff outside of LSO providing legal advice or legal-related services that require a law degree should establish a dual reporting relationship to LSO and their current office.
7. Given the recent retirement announcement by the current Chief Counsel, it is recommended that the successor Chief Counsel be afforded the opportunity to implement the restructuring and the formation of the management team under the supervision of the Chief of Staff.

Previous Council Action

In February of 2012, Chief Justice Tani G. Cantil-Sakauye created the Judicial Council Liaison Program where Judicial Council members are assigned as liaisons to each of the state's 58 trial courts as well as to each of the offices of the AOC. The Chief Justice assigned the liaisons as a means to further the council's efforts to increase communication and transparency and promote accountability. This program provides an opportunity for council members to familiarize themselves with how the AOC supports and implements council policy.

Justice Douglas Miller and Edith Matthai were assigned as liaisons to the LSO. Coupled with the liaisons' regular review responsibilities, at the February 2013 council meeting, the council requested that Justice Miller and Edith Matthai take the lead on directive 122 (review of the use of outside counsel). During this review it became evident that there were additional LSO-related directives that were appropriate for inclusion in this review and that these directives impacted LSO's current organizational structure. Consequently, in addition to reviewing the cost-effectiveness of the use of outside counsel, the liaisons broadened their review.

In conducting this review the council liaisons prepared the recommendations referenced above with the tenets of accountability, clear lines of authority, timeliness of service, and client service as underlying considerations.

Rationale for Recommendation

Legal Services Office Restructuring

Judicial Council AOC Restructuring Directive 107

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts to consider SEC Recommendation 7-72(a) and implement the necessary organizational and staffing changes, contingent upon the council's approval of an organizational structure for the AOC and taking into account the results of the classification and compensation studies to be completed.

SEC Recommendation 7-72(a)

The Legal Services Office's current level of approximately 75 positions, including more than 50 attorney positions, should be reduced. To achieve the reduction, the following areas should be reviewed and considered, and appropriate actions taken:

(a) In addition to the General Counsel, there are nine management level attorney positions in the Legal Services Office, including the Assistant General Counsel, three Managing Attorneys, and five Supervising Attorneys. This is an excessive number of management positions, which should be reduced. The position of Assistant General Counsel could be eliminated. One managing attorney could be assigned to manage each of the two major functional components of the division, house counsel, and Judicial Council services, with each managing attorney reporting directly to the Chief Counsel.

Since the report of the Strategic Evaluation Committee was released in May of 2012, the LSO workforce has been dramatically reduced. Staffing reductions attributable to retirements, the AOC's Voluntary Separation Incentive Program, attrition, and the elimination of temporary staff have reduced LSO staffing from the 75 positions referenced in the SEC recommendation 7-72(a) to a workforce of 50.1 positions as of May 31, 2013. LSO attorney staffing has been reduced from 50 attorneys to the current number of 37 attorneys exclusive of the Chief Counsel. Finally, the LSO management team currently totals eight positions from the nine noted in SEC recommendation 7-72(a).<sup>2</sup> This includes the Assistant Chief Counsel, two managing attorneys, and five supervising attorneys.

The LSO staff provides a variety of services that had historically been provided by the counties prior to state trial court funding and reflects the varying and expanded needs of judicial branch entities in today's environment. Prior to trial court funding, LSO comprised a small group of attorney staff primarily responsible for drafting council rules of court and forms and legislation, providing legal opinions to the council and the Administrative Director, and staffing council advisory committees and other similar bodies. Following trial court funding, the role of LSO expanded to provide legal services to the superior courts that had previously been provided by county counsels' offices. The council also approved the creation of a Litigation Management Program in 1999, adopting rules of court assigning the responsibility to LSO for the management of all claims and litigation against the courts. The LSO's areas of responsibility continued to expand; LSO began providing trial courts with legal opinions on judicial administration issues, and labor and employment legal services began with the enactment of the Trial Court Employment Protection and Governance Act of 2000, followed by establishment of a unit to provide transactional and business-related advice and services. After passage of the Trial Court Facilities Act of 2002, the LSO Real Estate Unit was established to provide the facilities-related legal work resulting from this legislation. Finally, LSO attorney positions were established in the field offices to better facilitate the provision of legal services to the superior courts.

<sup>2</sup> Since the SEC report was issued, the LSO management team has been reduced due to a retirement and will be further reduced with the retirement of the Assistant Chief Counsel on June 28, 2013, and the departure of two staff attorneys in the summer of 2013.

Today LSO provides legal services in two primary areas: (1) services provided to the council, to the Chief Justice as chair of the council, and to the Administrative Director and AOC as the administrative arm of the council; and (2) services provided to the appellate and trial courts.

As indicated in Figure 1 below, LSO is currently structured to provide services in these two areas. As its name implies, the Judicial Council Services group provides legal counsel and services to the council and its internal committees, advisory committees, and task forces and is led by a managing attorney who reports to the Chief Counsel. The remaining LSO organization provides legal counsel and services to the appellate and trial courts, the Judicial Council, and the AOC in a number of areas such as labor and employment, litigation management, legal opinions,<sup>3</sup> real estate, and transactions and business operations.

Given the current staffing levels of the LSO workforce and the critical nature of the legal services provided by LSO, we believe that a 10-member LSO attorney management team is appropriate for this office. However, to ensure accountability and clear lines of authority for the varied legal services provided by LSO, it is recommended that the LSO should be restructured to create a new executive leadership team comprising the Chief Counsel and three managing attorneys who lead three distinct areas of service (see Figure 2 below). Additionally, in accordance with council directive 107, we recommend that the position of Assistant Chief Counsel be reclassified as a managing attorney position. It is also recommended that one of the managing attorney positions be classified as a senior managing attorney to provide backup and support as second in command to the Chief Counsel. It appears appropriate that the managing attorney leading Judicial Council Services and Legal Opinions would be the best position for second in command.

The new structure provides a three-to-one reporting structure under the Chief Counsel and shifts the responsibility for regular day-to-day management workload from the Chief Counsel to the managing attorneys. This shift of direct responsibility for LSO daily activities is an acknowledgement that the Chief Counsel should be involved in providing legal input and expertise to the most critical legal issues for the branch versus being immersed in routine LSO workload. This structure will require continuous communication between the Chief Counsel and the three managing attorneys to ensure that no silos develop in the office. Similar to partners in a law firm, the Chief Counsel and the managing attorneys should meet regularly to share information and make decisions on projects, priorities, and resources that further the goals of the office as a whole.

The three areas of services arising from the recommended restructuring are: Judicial Council Services and Legal Opinions (a merger of two formerly separate units), Transactions and Business Operations (incorporating Real Estate into the Transactions and Business Operations Unit), and Litigation Management and Labor and Employment (a merger of two formerly separate units). It is important to note that other than Judicial Council Services, all of the LSO units currently provide legal services for two client groups—the appellate and trial courts along with the Administrative Director and the AOC. The new units would continue to serve both client groups, with the responsibility of supervising attorneys divided between these client groups. Each managing attorney would be responsible for providing satisfactory service to their clients.

The administration and monitoring of outside counsel would be the responsibility of the managing attorney for each respective area.

The designation of two positions (labeled “Supervising Attorney/Senior Attorney”) under each of the subject matter areas is to ensure that there is client accountability for each area. There will need to be regular communication among these attorneys to avoid duplication of effort and inconsistency of work product. It was our belief that by establishing a clear line of accountability, the problems identified by the trial courts in the SEC report would be avoided or, if they did reoccur, would be more easily corrected.

It is intended that the Chief Counsel and the three managing attorneys hold overall management responsibility, with the supervising/senior attorneys charged with carrying out senior management’s directives for the specific subject matter and client assignments. The level of experience and precise classification for these supervising/senior attorneys should be determined as a part of the internal restructuring and reviewed as a part of the classification and compensation study.

Role of Chief Counsel

Judicial Council Restructuring Directive 115

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts, as part of the review of the AOC organizational structure, to review current responsibilities and clearly define the role of the Chief Counsel.

By creating a team of three managing attorneys with assigned responsibilities over specific subject areas, the Chief Counsel should focus on ensuring that the structure in LSO is working well and that there is consistency and continuity among the three managing attorneys. The three managing attorneys must have the ability to work independently from and with the trust of the Chief Counsel to make decisions and manage the respective workload without direct involvement from the Chief Counsel. Again, the Chief Counsel’s role should be oversight of LSO activities to allow for hands-on involvement only for cases and issues involving large, complex, and highly sensitive issues. The Chief Counsel must be flexible in meeting the needs of the Judicial Council, the Chief Justice, and the Administrative Director with a wide variety of legal responsibilities and is expected to consistently exercise a high degree of initiative, independence, originality, and judgment in performing all duties

The Chief Counsel serves as legal counsel to the chair of the Judicial Council (currently, the Chief Justice) and advises the Chief Justice on certain statutorily mandated functions. The Chief Counsel also manages staff responsible for the provision of legal support and staffing to some of the Judicial Council’s internal committees and advisory committees and consults with, advises, and provides legal briefings and guidance for the council and its committees. The Chief Counsel supervises the review and development of legal opinions on issues of statewide importance, the review of legislation and regulations, rulemaking adoption and modification, and the facilitation of review, filing, and publication of trial court local rules and procedural requirements. All of these activities should be accomplished through and with the managing attorneys.

The Chief Counsel consults with and advises the Administrative Director, AOC division chiefs, and office directors on the interpretation and analysis of law, court decisions, and rules and regulations affecting the functions of the AOC and on legal issues as they affect the planning, development, and review of overall programs and policies of the AOC.

Finally, as legal advisor and provider of legal services to the courts, the Chief Counsel manages staff and administers the Labor and Employment, Litigation Management, Transactions and Business Operations (including Real Estate), and Legal Opinions programs and services for the appellate and trial courts. Attachment A provides detailed information about the role of the Chief Counsel and the leadership over the LSO areas of service.

It is recommended that the Chief of Staff work with the Chief Counsel to assess the current level of resources expended for specific work products. This assessment should focus on ensuring that work products are being produced in the most efficient way and prioritized based on the issue at hand. The Chief Counsel and managing attorneys should continuously work together to identify efficient and effective ways to deliver these services.

Judicial Council Restructuring Directive 120

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts that court users of legal services should be surveyed periodically to determine if such services are performed in a timely and satisfactory manner.

To ensure the appropriate level of client service is provided, particularly in the area of legal opinions, it is recommended that a formal procedure be developed and implemented in LSO to solicit client feedback. As an example, once a legal opinion is provided to a court, it is recommended that LSO send a client satisfaction survey in a self-addressed stamped envelope or electronically to the respective court's presiding judge and court executive officer requesting feedback about the services provided. The information gained from this protocol would be shared with the Chief of Staff and will allow for continuous improvement in LSO.

AOC Attorney Services Outside of LSO

In their analysis of LSO legal services, the council liaisons identified attorney classification positions in offices other than LSO in the AOC. The existence of attorney positions in other AOC offices can be attributed to historical restructuring as the organization evolved. The majority of attorney resources outside of LSO reside in two offices—the Center for Judiciary Education and Research (CJER) and the Center for Children, Families & the Courts (CFCC). Additionally, there are a few attorney classifications housed in the Criminal Justice Court Services Office and the Office of Governmental Affairs (OGA).

A review of the information about the activities of attorney classifications outside of LSO compared to information about the services provided by LSO attorneys indicates that there are similar legal services rendered in multiple offices. These services include but are not limited to: legal support and services provided to advisory committees; the drafting of rules of court and forms; input and subject matter expertise on pending legislation; technical assistance; and legal research on specific case-type information. There are also attorney classifications participating in legal-related activities that are not currently offered in LSO. These include but are not limited to: the development of curriculum for judicial education; the creation and updating of judicial publications; legislative advocacy activities; and program and grant administration activities.

The concept of having attorney classifications providing legal advice and services outside of the purview of the Chief Counsel is concerning. Not only is there the potential for providing inconsistent legal advice and services to court clients, there are also liability issues for the organization in having attorney staff provide legal advice without the oversight of the Chief Counsel.

Given the current effort to ensure accountability for the AOC and the council's advisory committees and the AOC's renewed focus on providing consistent service to its customers, it is recommended that attorneys outside of LSO who provide legal advice or other services that require a license to practice law should have a dual reporting relationship: a dotted line reporting to the Chief Counsel and direct reporting to the current office director. The dual reporting relationship will ensure consistency of legal work and appropriate oversight by the LSO.

If there are attorney classifications that participate in legal-related activities for which a license to practice law is not required, it is recommended that these positions remain in their current organizational structure but be reclassified. For example, if it is determined that attorneys in OGA do not provide legal advice or require the use of a law license for their daily activities, then the AOC might consider reclassifying these positions as legislative specialists retaining the requirement for a law degree as a qualification for the position. This recommendation is forwarded to the Administrative Director to incorporate into the classification and compensation study process.

Judicial Council Directive 122

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts to order an independent review of the Office of the General Counsel's use, selection, and management of outside legal counsel to determine whether outside counsel is being utilized in a cost effective manner. Before initiating the independent review, the Administrative Director of the Courts must provide a proposal with options for conducting the review, including the associated costs.

In response to this directive, the Administrative Director provided options for a review of the use of outside counsel by LSO in February 2013, and the council directed LSO council liaisons to review the use, selection, and management of outside legal counsel to determine whether outside counsel is being used in a cost-effective manner and to report back to the council on the results of this review for any further direction.

As background, LSO utilizes outside counsel for representing judicial branch entities and personnel under the council's Litigation Management Program, representing trial courts in labor arbitrations and complaint proceedings before the Public Employment Relations Board (PERB), providing legal services in specialized areas of practice in which LSO attorneys do not have requisite expertise, and providing court facilities-related legal services to augment LSO staff in the Real Estate Unit and in other areas requiring specialized skills and experience.

Based on our experience in the legal field and after conferring with colleagues, we conclude that the use of outside counsel is appropriate and in some cases mandated, providing valuable legal resources for the varying needs of LSO relating to specific subject areas or broad-based branch initiatives (i.e., courthouse transfers). Outside legal counsel provides LSO with sufficient flexibility to meet the changing needs of the branch in an efficient and cost-effective manner.

Once it was confirmed that there is a legitimate need to use outside counsel, it was determined that a full study of past expenses would be extraordinarily time consuming and would provide little benefit. Since the goal is to be certain that future expenditures are warranted, the recommendation is to place the responsibility for the retention and monitoring of outside counsel with the managing attorney in each area of practice. There should be written justification for the retention, and the managing attorney should be responsible for insuring that the hourly rates and time spent are reasonable. At the close of representation a short client feedback report should be obtained and the managing attorney should evaluate the service provided from LSO's perspective. An annual report on the use of outside counsel should be provided to the Judicial Council.

The following recommendations are proposed to assist LSO in reinforcing its existing protocols for utilizing outside counsel to ensure that outside counsel is monitored, supervised, and managed. These recommendations were also shared with the three members of the SEC that are currently council members for their review. We appreciate their input and specific suggestions relating to recommendations regarding the development of a means to conduct an examination of cost effectiveness of outside counsel and an annual report on outside counsel from the Administrative Director as indicated below.

It is recommended that LSO develop:

- A structure where each managing attorney is responsible for the approval and justification for utilizing outside counsel based on area of expertise needed or resource requirements.

- A means for conducting an examination of the cost-effectiveness of utilizing outside counsel versus potentially hiring attorney resources based on specific projects and the duration of legal assistance needed.
- A checklist that must be completed prior to initiating a contract with outside counsel to confirm that there are no internal LSO resources available for the subject matter area.
- A means of following up with the courts that receive services to gather their input on the services provided by outside counsel through an e-mail questionnaire or survey. This information would be used in tandem with input from the LSO attorneys assigned to the respective case to identify if the outside counsel should be used for future cases.
- A means of regularly (every 12 months) surveying the market to ensure that what is being charged is appropriate and the rates are appropriate.
- An annual report to the council from the Administrative Director on the use of all outside counsel and the monies spent to the Advisory Committee on Financial Accountability and Efficiency (A&E) for review and reporting to the council.

Judicial Council AOC Restructuring Directive 117

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts to adopt an operations model whereby attorneys generally are housed at one location with flexibility to adjust as necessary to meet court needs regionally, including regional demand for additional attorney support and smaller courts that have fewer staff for research and other legal services. The location where attorneys report to work should ensure proper supervision.

After reviewing the activities of LSO attorney staff located in the Sacramento and Burbank field offices, we believe that it is appropriate to have staff in these locations. This is consistent with many government agencies as well as private law firms. This should allow more direct communication between LSO attorneys and the courts in their region. It should be noted that LSO attorneys are not the only AOC staff that reside in field offices. For all offices in which staff is housed away from their direct supervisors, it is recommended that the AOC develop a policy that includes existing senior management-level oversight in the field offices for day-to-day accountability for off-site staff.

Judicial Council AOC Restructuring Directive 112

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts to consider SEC Recommendation 7-72(f) and implement the necessary organizational and staffing changes, contingent upon the council's approval of an organizational structure for the AOC and taking into account the results of the classification and compensation studies to be completed.

SEC Recommendation 7-72(f)

The Legal Services Office's current level of approximately 75 positions, including more than 50 attorney positions, should be reduced. To achieve the reduction, the following areas should be reviewed and considered, and appropriate actions taken:

(f) Development and use of paralegal classifications, as found elsewhere in legal services throughout both the public and private sectors, could lead to the reduction of attorney positions in the Legal Services Office.

In reviewing the activities of LSO attorneys, a specific need for a paralegal classification was not identified. Paralegals in private law firms are typically utilized primarily for high level administrative work and very minor legal-related work. Given that LSO already employs administrative staff to support LSO attorneys with administrative tasks, it does not appear appropriate to pursue the creation of a paralegal classification at this time.

Comments, Alternatives Considered and Policy Implications

In developing these recommendations, the LSO liaisons worked closely with the Chief of Staff. Additionally, these recommendations were shared with the AOC Executive Team and Chief Counsel and her management team.

Implementation Requirements, Costs, and Operational Impacts

It is anticipated that implementation of these recommendations, particularly LSO restructuring, may result in the need to recruit as needed. Additionally, LSO should realize savings by converting the Assistant General Counsel position to a Managing Attorney position.

There are several other recommendations that will impact LSO resources during implementation. These recommendations relate to the use of outside counsel where it is recommended that LSO strengthen the underlying structure for using outside counsel (i.e., developing a checklist; developing a means to follow up with courts to gain input; developing and implementing a survey on what is being charged in the market, etc.) and the recommendation to develop a client satisfaction survey.

Finally, it is recognized that delineating the attorney staff that will have a dual reporting relationship to LSO from other AOC offices will take some time to implement.

A. Role of Chief Counsel of the Administrative Office of the Courts

Role of Chief Counsel of the Administrative Office of the Courts

The Chief Counsel of the Administrative Office of the Courts (AOC) is chief legal advisor to the Judicial Council of California and to the AOC and office chief of the AOC Legal Services Office, which provides comprehensive legal services to the AOC and to the appellate and trial courts. The Legal Services Office has two major areas of service: legal advisor and counsel to the Judicial Council and legal advisor and legal services provider to the appellate and trial courts.

I. Legal Advisor and Counsel to the Judicial Council

The role of legal advisor and counsel to the Judicial Council encompasses the legal services provided in support of the Chief Justice as Chair of the Judicial Council, the Judicial Council and its committees and task forces, and the AOC as staff agency to the Judicial Council.

In this capacity, the Chief Counsel is responsible for the following:

- Judicial Council Legal Support
  - Provide legal advice and briefings to the Chief Justice, as chair of the Judicial Council, the Judicial Council, and internal council committees on matters of importance to Judicial Council business.
  - Provide legal support and staffing of Judicial Council internal committees and council advisory committees, as requested.
  - Provide legal review of rules, forms, standards of judicial administration, and jury instructions for Judicial Council consideration.
  - Provide legal review of legislation and regulations for legal and programmatic impact in collaboration with the AOC Office of Governmental Affairs.
  - Provide legal support to the Chief Justice in evaluating and making recommendations on petitions for coordination of complex civil cases.
  - Facilitate filing of local court rules with the council and authorization by the Chief Justice of alternative effective dates of local rules.
  - Interact with other branches of government and external entities (e.g., Attorney General's Office, Commission on Judicial Performance, State Bar of California State Bar, Secretary of State, California Fair Political Practices Commission, etc.) on wide range of judicial administration legal issues.
  - Participate in meetings and conferences as the legal representative of the Judicial Council, AOC, and the judicial branch, as appropriate.
- AOC and Administrative Director of the Courts Legal Support
  - Provide legal advice and briefings to the Administrative Director, Division Chiefs, and Office Directors on legal issues affecting AOC programs and operations and on legal issues affecting planning, development, and review of AOC programs and policies.

- Identify legal and risk management issues.
- Collaborate with other AOC offices on legislative, fiscal, facilities, technology, and other matters affecting the judicial branch to develop strategies for implementing new requirements and responding to emerging issues.
- Chief Counsel Administrative Activities
  - Manage the AOC Legal Services Office, including planning and directing work, providing legal policy direction, providing for internal staff development and training and succession planning, and participating in recruitment and selection of staff.
    - Provides general direction on the office's priorities, policies, and operations.
    - Manages the Legal Services Office budget and resources; develops and implements strategies to meet increasing workload demands with limited resources.
    - Establishes and implements performance and development plans for direct reports.

II. Legal Advisor and Provider of Legal Services to the Appellate and Trial Courts and the AOC

In this capacity, the Chief Counsel provides direction and oversees the following programs and activities that provide legal services to the appellate and trial courts and to the AOC:

- Labor and Employment:
  - Responds to labor and employment issues in collaboration with the AOC Human Resources Services Office (HRSO), as appropriate.
  - Provides legal advice and guidance to minimize risk of labor disputes and employment litigation.
  - Provides legal advice in addressing sensitive personnel issues.
  - Assists HRSO in managing legal aspects of investigations of internal complaints of discrimination, harassment, retaliation, and other similar complaints, and advises about complaint resolution.
  - Drafts personnel policies to ensure compliance with applicable law and to avoid litigation.
  - Upon request, advises trial courts regarding labor relations matters (MOUs, labor relation rules, progressive discipline, personnel actions, etc.).
  - Provides ongoing legal support to HRSO in addressing labor relation issues for trial courts.
  - Upon request, provides legal advice and representation for trial courts in labor arbitrations and complaints before the Public Employment Relations Board.

- Litigation Management:
  - Under the direction of the Administrative Director of the Courts and consistent with rules of court, manages and administers the Judicial Council's Litigation Management Program.
  - Staffs the council's Litigation Management Committee, which oversees claims and litigation against judicial branch entities in which the likely exposure is $100,000 or more or that raise issues of significance to the judicial branch.

Executive Summary

The Legal Services Office (LSO) is an office of the Administrative Office of the Courts (AOC) under the Judicial Council and Court Leadership Services Division. The mission of LSO is to provide quality, timely, and ethical legal advice and services to the Chief Justice, the Judicial Council, council advisory committees and task forces, the appellate and trial courts, and the AOC. The Judicial Council has charged the office with providing “consistent, comprehensive legal support and counsel to the courts.” (Judicial Council of Cal./Admin. Off. of Cts., Justice in Focus: The Strategic Plan for California’s Judicial Branch 2006–2012 (2006), p. 49.) In response to Judicial Council restructuring directives and the recommendations of the Judicial Council liaisons to LSO, the office has been significantly restructured. This informational report summarizes the activities undertaken in response to the June 2013 recommendations of the Judicial Council liaisons.

Previous Council Action

- In March 2011, Chief Justice Tani G. Cantil-Sakauye created the Strategic Evaluation Committee (SEC) to conduct an in-depth review of the Administrative Office of the Courts, the staff agency to the Judicial Council, with a view toward promoting transparency, accountability, and efficiency.

- On August 31, 2012, based on the SEC report and its recommendations, the Judicial Council approved AOC realignment directives and directed the Administrative Director to report on them.
- At the February 2013 council meeting, the council liaisons to LSO were asked to take the lead on reviewing the cost-effectiveness of LSO's current use of outside counsel in response to Judicial Council directive 122. While addressing this request, the liaisons concluded that additional LSO-related restructuring directives were appropriate for inclusion in the liaisons' review and would enable a more comprehensive evaluation.<sup>1</sup>
- In addition to reviewing the cost-effectiveness of the use of outside counsel, the liaisons' review was expanded to include defining the role of the Chief Counsel; evaluating the need for use of a paralegal classification; analyzing the use of LSO attorney staff in AOC field offices; and analyzing the current LSO organizational structure, LSO services, and attorney services provided by the AOC outside of LSO.
- In June 2013, the LSO liaisons recommended that the Judicial Council endorse the following recommendations to the Administrative Director:<sup>2</sup>
  1. LSO should be restructured with a management team comprising a Chief Counsel and three managing attorneys over three distinct service areas to ensure continued focus on serving the varied and diverse needs of LSO's clients, which include the appellate and trial courts, the Chief Justice, and the Judicial Council and its administrative agency, the AOC.
  2. LSO should implement a formal structure to solicit client feedback on a regular basis.
  3. The role of the Chief Counsel and the expectations for that role and areas of responsibility should be clearly defined to reflect the new organizational structure.
  4. The use of outside counsel is appropriate for specialized areas of law and litigation. The protocols for LSO's use of outside counsel should be strengthened to ensure that outside counsel is used in the most cost-effective manner.
  5. The AOC should continue to support the existing practice of permitting attorney resources to reside in AOC field offices provided there is proper oversight and accountability.

6. All staff outside of LSO providing legal advice or legal-related services that require a law degree should establish a dual reporting relationship to LSO and their current office.
  7. Given the recent retirement announcement by the current Chief Counsel, the successor Chief Counsel should be afforded the opportunity to implement the restructuring and the formation of the management team under the supervision of the Chief of Staff.
- At the June 2013 Judicial Council meeting, the council endorsed the liaisons' recommendations and agreed with the liaisons that modifications might be needed once these recommendations are implemented. It further directed the Administrative Director of the Courts to report back on implementation of the liaisons' recommendations by the end of March 2014.<sup>3</sup>

Methodology and Process

Restructuring within LSO has occurred as a result of the implementation of the liaisons' recommendations. As indicated below, six of the seven recommendations have been implemented, with one variance: (1) the LSO management structure has been modified; (2) the responsibilities of the Chief Counsel have been reviewed and clearly defined; (3) a process for periodically surveying court users of legal services is being put into place; (4) protocols have been developed for retention of outside counsel; (5) policies have been implemented to ensure appropriate oversight in the field offices for day-to-day accountability of LSO attorneys and staff in field offices; and (6) paralegals have not and are not currently employed by the LSO. Finally, although LSO works closely with other AOC offices with attorneys, the liaisons' recommendation that AOC attorneys outside of LSO who provide legal advice or legal related services that require a law degree should have a dual reporting relationship to LSO and their current office has not been implemented. As discussed below, for this recommendation, it seems appropriate to wait for the results of the pending classification and compensation study, which will expressly review the attorney classification.

Background on the Legal Services Office

The Legal Services Office provides a variety of services that historically, before state trial court funding, were provided by the counties and reflect the varying and expanded needs of judicial branch entities in today's environment.

Before trial court funding, the Legal Services Office comprised a small group of attorney staff primarily responsible for drafting council rules of court and forms and legislation, providing legal opinions to the council and the Administrative Director, and staffing council advisory committees and other similar bodies.<sup>4</sup> Following trial court funding, the role of LSO expanded to provide to the superior courts legal services that previously had been provided by county counsels' offices. LSO began providing trial courts with legal opinions on judicial administration issues. The council also approved the creation of a Litigation Management Program in 1999, adopting rules of court assigning the responsibility to LSO for the management of all claims and litigation against the courts.

After the enactment of the Trial Court Employment Protection and Governance Act of 2000, LSO began providing labor and employment legal services. LSO's areas of responsibility continued to expand—for example, with the establishment of a unit to provide transactional and business-related advice and services. After passage of the Trial Court Facilities Act of 2002, the Real Estate Unit was established to provide the facilities-related legal work resulting from this legislation. Finally, LSO attorney positions were established in the field offices to better facilitate the provision of legal services to the superior courts.

The growth of LSO and the expansion of the services it provides have significantly changed in the past few years. Based on the council directives and other developments, LSO has ceased to grow and has been notably reduced in size. This and other changes are described in detail below.

Implementing the directives

In implementing the Judicial Council directives to LSO and the council liaisons' recommendations, the Administrative Director of the Courts and the Chief of Staff worked closely with the Chief Counsel and her management team. They have also benefitted greatly from advice from the Judicial Council liaisons to LSO and other council members.

The liaison report specifically addresses implementation of the council liaisons' recommendations to the Administrative Director of the Courts, which were endorsed by the Judicial Council. The report presents each recommendation and summarizes the actions taken in response to the recommendations.

Legal Services Office restructuring

As part of their review, the liaisons considered Judicial Council restructuring directive 107 and recommended the following:

LSO should be restructured with a management team comprising a Chief Counsel and three managing attorneys over three distinct service areas to ensure continued focus on serving the varied and diverse needs of LSO's clients, which include the appellate and trial courts, the Chief Justice, and the Judicial Council and its administrative agency, the AOC.

---

<sup>4</sup> The office's name has changed over the years. In the 1990s, it was designated as Council and Legal Services. Subsequently, it became the Office of the General Counsel, and in 2012 the office was renamed the Legal Services Office.

(Judicial Council of Cal., supra, at p. 2.)

Judicial Council restructuring directive 107 states:

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts to consider SEC Recommendation 7-72(a) and implement the necessary organizational and staffing changes, contingent upon the council's approval of an organizational structure for the AOC and taking into account the results of the classification and compensation studies to be completed.<sup>5</sup>

Since the release of the Strategic Evaluation Committee report in May 2012, the LSO workforce has been dramatically reduced from the 75 positions referenced in SEC recommendation 7-72(a) to a workforce of 44 positions as of the date of this report. LSO attorney staffing has been reduced from 50 attorneys to the current number of 32 attorneys, exclusive of the Chief Counsel. The LSO management team currently consists of 6 members, excluding the Chief Counsel, as compared to 9 noted in SEC recommendation 7-72(a).

The June 2013 Liaison Report states:

Given the current staffing levels of the LSO workforce and the critical nature of the legal services provided by LSO, we believe that a 10-member LSO attorney management team is appropriate for this office. However, to ensure accountability and clear lines of authority for the varied legal services provided by LSO, it is recommended that the LSO should be restructured to create a new executive leadership team comprising the Chief Counsel and three managing attorneys who lead three distinct areas of service . . . Additionally, in accordance with council directive 107, we recommend that the position of Assistant Chief Counsel be reclassified as a managing attorney position. It is also recommended that one of the managing attorney positions be classified as a senior managing attorney to provide backup and support as second in command to the Chief Counsel. It appears appropriate that the managing attorney leading Judicial Council Services and Legal Opinions would be the best position for second in command.

The Legal Services Office's current level of approximately 75 positions, including more than 50 attorney positions, should be reduced. To achieve the reduction, the following areas should be reviewed and considered, and appropriate actions taken:

(a) In addition to the General Counsel, there are nine management level attorney positions in the Legal Services Office, including the Assistant General Counsel, three Managing Attorneys, and five Supervising Attorneys. This is an excessive number of management positions, which should be reduced. The position of Assistant General Counsel could be eliminated. One managing attorney could be assigned to manage each of the two major functional components of the division, house counsel, and Judicial Council services, with each managing attorney reporting directly to the Chief Counsel.

The new structure provides a three-to-one reporting structure under the Chief Counsel and shifts the responsibility for regular day-to-day management workload from the Chief Counsel to the managing attorneys. This shift of direct responsibility for LSO daily activities is an acknowledgement that the Chief Counsel should be involved in providing legal input and expertise to the most critical legal issues for the branch versus being immersed in routine LSO workload. This structure will require continuous communication between the Chief Counsel and the three managing attorneys to ensure that no silos develop in the office. Similar to partners in a law firm, the Chief Counsel and the managing attorneys should meet regularly to share information and make decisions on projects, priorities, and resources that further the goals of the office as a whole. (Judicial Council of Cal., supra, at p. 2.)

Under the new Chief Counsel, with the support of the Administrative Director of the Courts and the Chief of Staff, LSO has taken measures that have substantially implemented the structure proposed by the liaisons. The LSO attorney management team, excluding the Chief Counsel, consists of six members as of March 2014. The position of Assistant Chief Counsel was eliminated after the attorney formerly holding that position retired in 2013. As recommended by the liaisons, instead of hiring a new Assistant Chief Counsel, a managing attorney was promoted in 2014 to the position of senior managing attorney to provide support and backup to the Chief Counsel. Because of retirements, no other managing attorneys are currently employed in LSO. However, to provide the level and structure of leadership necessary to manage the office in the manner recommended by the liaisons, recruitment is under way for two additional managing attorneys. After completion of this hiring process, LSO will have an executive management structure as envisioned by the liaisons, with a Chief Counsel and three managing attorneys, one of whom is designated as a senior managing attorney.

LSO provides legal services in two primary areas: (1) services provided to the council, to the Chief Justice as chair of the council, and to the Administrative Director of the Courts and the AOC as the administrative arm of the council; and (2) services provided to the appellate and trial courts. LSO is currently structured to provide legal services in these areas by organizing its attorneys into six units:

- Rules and Projects Unit
- Legal Opinion Unit
- Transactions and Business Operations Unit
- Real Estate Unit
- Litigation Management Unit
- Labor and Employment Unit

In terms of LSO's management structure, the liaison report recommends that LSO be restructured into three areas of services: (1) Judicial Council Services and Legal Opinions (a merger of the Rules and Projects and Legal Opinion Units); (2) Transactions and Business Operations (incorporating Real Estate into the Transactions and Business Operations Unit); and (3) Litigation Management and Labor and Employment (a merger of the two formerly separate units).

The liaison report further recommends that the new units continue to serve both client groups—the appellate and trial courts along with the Judicial Council, Chief Justice as chair of the council, Administrative Director of the Courts, and AOC—with the responsibility of supervising attorneys divided between the two client groups. LSO is in the process of restructuring its activities into the three organization units described above. Once the full complement of managing attorneys is in place, each will manage one of the combined units. After careful consideration, however, the Administrative Director and Chief of Staff support a variance from the liaison recommendations with respect to the supervisory-level responsibilities. Because the quantity of legal work performed for the courts differs from that for the Judicial Council/AOC clients and because of the need to provide clients with specialized skills and knowledge in the individual subject-matter areas, LSO will continue to be structured along subject-matter groups rather than client groups. The purpose of this structure is to provide better service to clients by providing them with immediate access to supervisors and attorneys with subject-matter expertise specific to the legal issues and inquiries presented.<sup>6</sup>

The liaison report further states:

It is intended that the Chief Counsel and the three managing attorneys hold overall management responsibility, with the supervising/senior attorneys charged with carrying out senior management’s directives for the specific subject matter and client assignments. The level of experience and precise classification for these supervising/senior attorneys should be determined as a part of the internal restructuring and reviewed as a part of the classification and compensation study.

The report’s additional recommendations regarding the management structure will be implemented once the managing attorney positions are filled. As indicated in the report, the level of experience and precise classification for the supervising/senior attorney structure also partially depend on the classification and compensation study.

Role of Chief Counsel

The liaisons considered Judicial Council restructuring directive 115 and recommended that the role of the Chief Counsel and the expectations for that role, along with the areas of responsibility, should be clearly defined to reflect the new organizational structure.

---

Judicial Council restructuring directive 115 states:

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts, as part of the review of the AOC organizational structure, to review current responsibilities and clearly define the role of the Chief Counsel.

As part of their report to the Judicial Council, the liaisons included an attachment clearly defining the responsibilities and role of the Chief Counsel of the Administrative Office of the Courts.<sup>7</sup>

The description has been adopted and specifies that the Chief Counsel is chief legal advisor to the Judicial Council and to the AOC and office chief of the AOC Legal Services Office, which provides comprehensive legal services to the appellate and trial courts. It adds that the Legal Services Office has two major areas of service: legal advisor and counsel to the Judicial Council and legal advisor and legal services provider to the appellate and trial courts. In these capacities, the Chief Counsel has responsibilities that are enumerated in detail.

Survey of users of LSO services

The liaisons considered Judicial Council restructuring directive 120 and recommended that, to ensure that the appropriate level of client service is provided, particularly in the area of legal opinions, a formal procedure be developed and implemented in LSO to solicit client feedback.

Judicial Council restructuring directive 120 states:

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts that court users of legal services should be surveyed periodically to determine if such services are performed in a timely and satisfactory manner.

In response to this recommendation, a draft survey has been developed to ask court users for their evaluations of and suggestions for improvements to legal services provided by each of the six LSO units.<sup>8</sup> Because of workload issues and staffing concerns, it is anticipated that the survey will be distributed to the courts in late 2014 as a pilot. If the survey proves useful and courts do not find it overly burdensome, LSO will continue to survey the courts on an annual or biennial basis.

Use of outside counsel

With respect to Judicial Council directive 122 regarding the use of outside counsel, the Judicial Council endorsed the liaisons' recommendation that (1) the use of outside counsel is appropriate for specialized areas of law and litigation; and (2) protocols for LSO's use of outside counsel

should be strengthened to ensure that outside counsel is used in the most cost-effective manner. That directive states:

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts to order an independent review of the Office of the General Counsel's use, selection, and management of outside legal counsel to determine whether outside counsel is being utilized in a cost effective manner. Before initiating the independent review, the Administrative Director of the Courts must provide a proposal with options for conducting the review, including the associated costs.

The liaisons undertook the review of the use of outside counsel and reported back to the council as follows:

Based on our experience in the legal field and after conferring with colleagues, we conclude that the use of outside counsel is appropriate and in some cases mandated, providing valuable legal resources for the varying needs of LSO relating to specific subject areas or broad-based branch initiatives (i.e., courthouse transfers). Outside legal counsel provides LSO with sufficient flexibility to meet the changing needs of the branch in an efficient and cost-effective manner.

(Judicial Council of Cal., supra, at p. 10.)

The liaison report also concluded, once it was confirmed that there was a legitimate need to use outside counsel, that a full study of past expenses would be extraordinarily time-consuming and would provide little benefit. Because the goal was to be certain that future expenditures are warranted, the liaisons recommended placing the responsibility for the retention and monitoring of outside counsel with the managing attorney in each area of practice. The liaisons added that (1) there should be written justification for the retention, and the managing attorney should be responsible for ensuring that the hourly rates and time spent are reasonable; (2) at the close of representation a short client feedback report should be obtained, and the managing attorney should evaluate the service provided from LSO's perspective; and (3) an annual report on the use of outside counsel should be provided to the Judicial Council.

Thus, the liaisons recommended that LSO develop:

- A structure in which each managing attorney is responsible for the approval of and justification for using outside counsel based on the area of expertise needed or resource requirements.
- A means for conducting an examination of the cost-effectiveness of using outside counsel versus potentially hiring attorney resources based on specific projects and the duration of legal assistance needed.
- A checklist that must be completed before initiating a contract with outside counsel to confirm that no internal LSO resources are available for the subject-matter area.

- A means of following up with the courts that receive services to gather their input on the services provided by outside counsel through an e-mail questionnaire or survey. This information would be used in tandem with input from the LSO attorneys assigned to the respective cases to identify if the outside counsel should be used for future cases.
- A means of regularly (every 12 months) surveying the market to ensure that what is being charged is appropriate and the rates are appropriate.

The liaisons also recommended that the Administrative Director provide to the Advisory Committee on Financial Accountability and Efficiency for the Judicial Branch an annual report on the use and cost of outside counsel for the committee's consideration and reporting to the council.

In response to these recommendations, the LSO protocol for the retention of outside counsel has been amended to require managing-attorney approval of the hiring of any outside counsel. Under that protocol, the managing attorney (1) reviews the recommendation to hire outside counsel and the expertise of the counsel suggested, and (2) confirms that no internal resource is available for the particular subject matter. The review and approval by the managing attorney are recorded in each file. In addition, on an annual basis, LSO will review the annual attorney fee surveys prepared by various organizations to ensure that the fees charged by outside counsel are appropriate and reasonable. LSO also will send to each court a survey after the conclusion of any significant litigation, arbitration, or proceedings before the Public Employment Relations Board, asking for the court's assessment of the specific legal representation provided by LSO and outside counsel.<sup>9</sup> The survey results will be used in an annual review of the use of outside counsel to ensure the delivery of quality and timely legal services. The LSO also will provide reports on the use and cost of outside counsel to the Advisory Committee on Financial Accountability and Efficiency at the request of the committee.

LSO attorneys located in field offices

In response to Judicial Council directive 117, the liaisons recommended that the AOC continue to support the existing practice of permitting attorney resources to reside in AOC field offices provided there is proper oversight and accountability. That Judicial Council directive states:

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts to adopt an operations model whereby attorneys generally are housed at one location with flexibility to adjust as necessary to meet court needs regionally, including regional demand for additional attorney support and smaller courts that have fewer staff for research and other legal services. The location where attorneys report to work should ensure proper supervision.

The liaison report states that, after reviewing the activities of LSO attorney staff located in the Sacramento and Burbank field offices, the liaisons believe that it is appropriate to have staff in these locations. The liaisons commented that such an arrangement is consistent with the staffing of many government agencies and private law firms.

<sup>9</sup> These surveys will be prepared for the individual case and tailored to the type and nature of the representation.

LSO has followed the recommendation of the liaisons and continues to house attorneys in field offices. Doing so allows more direct communication between LSO attorneys and the courts in their regions.<sup>10</sup> In addition, as recommended by the liaisons, to ensure oversight in the field offices for day-to-day accountability for off-site staff, LSO management requires staff in the field offices to report any absences both to their supervisors and to a designated local staff member, who would enter the appropriate information into the LSO calendar system.

Use of paralegal classifications

The LSO liaisons reviewed Judicial Council restructuring directive 112 and stated that they did not identify a specific need for a paralegal classification. That directive states:

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts to consider SEC Recommendation 7-72(f) and implement the necessary organizational and staffing changes, contingent upon the council's approval of an organizational structure for the AOC and taking into account the results of the classification and compensation studies to be completed.<sup>11</sup>

In their report, the liaisons state that paralegals in private law firms are typically used primarily for high-level administrative work and very minor legal-related work. Given that LSO already employs administrative staff to support LSO attorneys with administrative tasks, the liaisons indicate that to pursue the creation of a paralegal classification does not appear appropriate at this time.<sup>12</sup> Consistent with the LSO liaisons' recommendation, LSO does not employ paralegals.

Dual reporting

The liaison report discusses one other recommendation for LSO. That recommendation states: "All staff outside of LSO providing legal advice or legal-related services that require a law degree should establish a dual reporting relationship to LSO and their current office."<sup>13</sup> On this recommendation relating to attorneys within the AOC, it seems appropriate to wait for the results of the classification and compensation study. That study will expressly study the attorney

(f) Development and use of paralegal classifications, as found elsewhere in legal services throughout both the public and private sectors, could lead to the reduction of attorney positions in the Legal Services Office.

classifications and should provide useful information to assist in any efforts to redefine or change the relationship among the various groups and types of attorneys working for the AOC.

Policy and Cost Implications

LSO's mission continues to be to provide quality, timely, and ethical legal advice and services to the Chief Justice, the Judicial Council, council advisory committees and task forces, the appellate and trial courts, and the AOC. The restructuring of LSO will result in efficiencies and savings from, for example, the conversion of the position of assistant chief counsel into a senior managing attorney position and will continue to require a commitment of effort (for example, for staff and courts to conduct and complete user surveys).

This directive is now considered complete as follows:

Effective October 1, 2012, the reporting structure of the Office of Communications, currently named Communications, was changed as part of a new organizational structure approved by the Judicial Council. This new structure reduced the JCC Executive Team to four positions (Administrative Director, Chief of Staff, Chief Operating Officer, and Chief Administrative Officer) and realigned and renamed existing divisions into offices housed under one of three newly created divisions (Judicial Council and Court Leadership Services Division, Judicial and Court Operations Services Division, and Judicial and Court Administrative Services Division). As part of the new structure, Communications was moved under the Leadership Services Division, under the leadership of the Chief of Staff. In 2015, Communications was moved and now reports directly to the Administrative Director consistent with the directive.

Additionally, on August 21, 2015 the JCC completed its Classification and Compensation Study that resulted in the implementation of a new salary structure for the organization. The compensation phase of the project followed the classification portion of the study that began in December 2013 and ended in March of 2015, when JCC staff received their new classification specifications. All positions in the JCC were evaluated, and JCC employees were subsequently assigned a classification and provided with information as to whether their salary fell within, above, or below the new salary ranges employee classifications.

The results of the classification study validated that the duties of the Communications Senior Manager were aligned with the "Principal Manager" classification specification and this position was subsequently re-classed to "Principal Manager."

SEC Recommendation 7-53

The resources of this office, including the Public Information Officer, should be made more available to furnish increased media relations services to courts requesting such assistance.

| X       | COMPLETED: Communications continues to provide general, high-level media relations assistance at the requests of the courts with the resources available, including: ad hoc media communication advice; trial court assistance with talking points on capital construction projects; ListServe administration for court liaisons and public information officers; and PIO training with the National Center for State Courts. |

At the time the Strategic Evaluation Committee made its final report in May 2102, Communications was comprised of 14 employees and was providing ad hoc “media relations service” to small and medium-sized courts. The service was provided by three individuals. When the Judicial Council adopted a similar recommendation in August 2012, the office had been downsized and the ad hoc media relations service to courts was provided by two individuals, one of whom was based in Sacramento and was able to travel to courts at their request to manage media issues in a high-profile case. This individual has since retired and the Communications staff has shrunk to seven employees. Today Communications staff priorities are primarily related to providing communications and public relations support to the Chief Justice, the Supreme Court, the Judicial Council, and capital programs.

The office continues to provide general, high-level assistance—i.e. telephone consulting—when any court requests it, but does not have the resources to provide anything more than telephonic consultation. These services include:

- (1) Ad hoc media communication advice to the courts for sensitive issues and review of press releases
- (2) Trial court assistance with talking points on capital construction projects
- (3) ListServe administration for court liaisons and court public information officers (PIOs)
- (4) Training with the National Center for State Courts on PIO training for court management.

As background on PIO services, The use of Public Information Officers was the focus of one of the recommendations made by the Bench Bar Media Committee, chaired by Associate Justice Carlos R. Moreno. The committee was created in 2008 by Chief Justice Ronald M. George to make recommendations to improve communications and working relationships among the three key stakeholders - judges, attorneys, and members of the media. The committee’s term expired in December 2010. In its final report, the Bench Bar Media Committee recommended the “Creation of regional public information officer (PIO) positions.” The committee supported “the creation of three public information officer (PIO) positions . . . when funds are available. The primary responsibilities of the regional PIOs would include assisting local courts, upon request, with: (1) coordination of media activities in high-profile cases, (2) responses to other complex media situations, and (3) community outreach efforts and general media relations. Until the creation of these regional positions, the AOC Office of Communications should continue to provide the trial courts with assistance on high-profile cases and other media matters on an ad hoc basis when requested by the courts and according to AOC resource availability.” The Judicial Council never adopted this recommendation and it was never referred to any other committee or advisory group.

Communications will continue to provide ad hoc media relation services to the trial courts as requested with the resources available on an ongoing basis.

Council Directive 125

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts to return to the Judicial Council with an analysis, defining the necessary emergency response and security functions for the branch and a recommendation on the organizational plan for council approval.

SEC Recommendation 7-54

There is no need for a stand-alone Office of Emergency Response and Security. Most necessary functions performed by the office can be reassigned and absorbed by existing units in the Judicial and Court Operations Services Division.

SEC Recommendation 7-55

The functions of this office should be refocused and limited to those reasonably required by statute or by the Rules of Court, primarily including review of security plans for new and existing facilities; review of court security equipment, if requested by the courts; and review of emergency plans.

SEC Recommendation 7-56

Reductions in this office are feasible. The office cannot effectively provide branch-wide judicial security and online protection for all judicial officers. Positions allocated for such functions should be eliminated. The Administrative Director should evaluate whether some activities undertaken by this office are cost effective, such as judicial security and online protection functions.

At its August 31, 2012, meeting, the Judicial Council directed the ADOC "to return to the Judicial Council with an analysis, defining the necessary emergency response and security functions for the branch and a recommendation on the organizational plan for council approval."

At its December 14, 2012, meeting, the Judicial Council approved the ADOC's recommendation to maintain the Office of Security within the Judicial and Court Operations Services Division, with responsibility for performing the security and emergency response planning functions currently assigned to it and at the current staffing level. It deferred action on directing a proposed Court Security Advisory Committee to review the Office of Security and make recommendations defining the necessary emergency response and security functions to be performed by the office, pending further consideration by E&P and RUPRO as part of their comprehensive review of advisory groups.

On its April 25, 2013, meeting, the Judicial Council approved an E&P, RUPRO, and Technology Committee recommendation that included a recommendation to create a Court Security Advisory Committee with a formal charge, a rule of court, and appointments made through the annual nominations process. E&P and RUPRO ensured proposed rule 10.61 to establish the committee was circulated for public comment, and submitted it to the Judicial Council for consideration at the October 25, 2013, meeting.

Effective October 25, 2013, the Judicial Council established the Court Security Advisory Committee. On November 8, 2013, E&P issued a solicitation for nominations for membership in the committee. Nominations were due by December 4, 2013. The Chief Justice appointed the members to the committee and announced Judge Thomas Maddock as chair of the committee on February 10, 2014. The committee is composed of 10 members, including 1 appellate justice, 4 trial court judges, 1 appellate court administrator, and 4 trial court administrators, 1 of whom is a member of the Court Facilities Advisory Committee, and 1 who is a member of the Court Facilities Modification Advisory Committee.

At its first telephonic meeting on June 18, 2014, Court Security Advisory Committee members discussed the council directive and the committee charge. The committee started to outline an agenda for the coming year and begin its work, to the extent possible, in reviewing the necessary security functions for the branch and an organizational plan for carrying out those functions. At its first in-person meeting on September 4, 2014, the committee approved a draft Annual Agenda for submission to E&P. Members discussed recommendations on emergency response and security functions and the organization of the Office of Security. An Ad Hoc Short Term Subcommittee on Office of Security Functions and Duties was formed to further develop recommendations and return to the full committee with a draft report for its consideration.

The Court Security Advisory Committee and Judicial Council staff presented a final report that identified the necessary emergency responses and security functions for the branch at the July 2015 council meeting. The report provided readers with the background and supported reasoning to provide physical security, personal security, and emergency management to the branch. In addition, the report reflected how the office has been reorganized and is now under the Real Estate and Facilities Management Office. The report listed the emergency responses and security functions that are needed for the branch and the office will continue to provide these duties.

Council Directive 126

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council support SEC Recommendation 7-84 with no further action, as the Bay Area, Northern Central, and Southern Regional Offices no longer have any direct regional office staff. The Northern Central Regional Office has been reorganized as the Trial Court Liaison Office reporting to the Executive Office.

SEC Recommendation 7-84

The regional offices should cease to exist as a separate division within AOC. The BANCRO and SRO offices should close. Advocacy and liaison services provided to the trial courts should be provided through the office of Trial Court Support and Liaison in the new Executive Office

Additional staffing restructuring and layoffs ultimately occurred and the Regional Office was renamed the Trial Court Liaison Office effective July 1, 2012. As of October 1, 2012, the Trial Court Liaison was located under the Leadership Services Division reporting to the Chief of Staff. Three positions in the one office now provide service in the same capacity as the former three regional offices. |

Directives 126 and 128 relate to the elimination of the former three regional offices and the related staffing levels that were established in Sacramento, San Francisco, and Burbank in 2002.

As background, the regional offices were created to provide more of a local council presence and regional resource for the courts. The regional offices were the point of contact for the courts, especially small and medium sized courts, requiring specialist assistance in areas such as human resources and budgeting. Over the next several years, the regional offices also encompassed regional court interpreter coordinators, enhanced collections, reengineering, and community corrections units within their organizational structure.

In November of 2011, Regional Office structure was changed to merge Bay Area Northern/Coastal Regional Office, the Northern/Central Regional Office, and the Southern Regional Office into one regional office under the leadership of the Regional Administrative Director reporting directly to the Admin. Director.

Additional staffing reductions occurred in the Regional Office as follows:

- The Enhanced Collection Unit was transferred to the Finance Division (now Fiscal Services) January of 2012.
- Regional Court Interpreters were transferred to the Court Interpreter Unit within the Court Programs and Services Division (now Court Language Access and Services Program) in March of 2012.
- Four positions were permanently eliminated (layoffs, retirement and VSIP)

- The Community Corrections Program previously part of BANCRO was transferred to the Criminal Justice Court Services Office under the Executive Office along with two remaining BANCRO regional office staff moved to the Criminal Justice Court Services Office.

Finally, after all of these changes were made, the Regional Office was renamed Trial Court Liaison Office effective July 1, 2012. Effective October 1, 2012, the Trial Court Liaison Office is located under the Judicial Council and Court Leadership Services Division reporting to the Chief of Staff. The remaining regional office position was converted to the Chief of Staff. The Trial Court Liaison Office now consists of three positions and serves the same role as the former regional offices now offered within one office. This office is now merged within other offices that provide support to branch leadership (i.e. Judicial Council Support Services).

Council Directive 127

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts to renegotiate or terminate, if possible, the leases for space utilized by SRO and BANCRO. To the extent AOC staff from other divisions is assigned to work at leased space at the regional offices, the need for locating such staff in currently leased space should be reevaluated.

SEC Recommendation 7-85

Leases for space utilized by SRO and BANCRO should be renegotiated or terminated, if possible, as such lease costs cannot be justified. - COMPLETED: The implementation of cancellations, terminations, contractions, renegotiations, relocations, and subleases of Judicial Council office space has resulted in rent reductions for the organization.

As reported in October 2012, the following lease transactions and exercised options have been completed (by location):

- Sacramento North: lease cancellation option exercised at 2880 Gateway Oaks Blvd.; leases at 2850 and 2860 Gateway Oaks blvd. renegotiated mid-term; lease cancellation option exercised on fourth floor lease at 2850 Gateway Oaks Blvd.
- Burbank: 11,992 SF of space on first floor sublet; lease to be terminated by electing not to exercise renewal option.
- San Francisco: several lower cost options in San Francisco's Civic Center and Financial districts were identified. Depending upon which points in time are used for comparison purposes, comparable lease space in the same submarket of San Francisco was listed for 25% to 40% lower than the rate paid by the AOC to DGS in Fiscal Year (FY) 2011/12.

The AOC sought out potential interest from other state agencies to occupy a surplus of space equal to the 7th floor of the San Francisco building, approximately 38,575 SF. DGS did not permit the AOC to relinquish the space because the occupying agency we identified, the state Public Utilities Commission (PUC), requires the space only until December, 2015, when renovations to their current facility are scheduled to be completed. The AOC executed an interbranch agreement "subleasing" the 7th floor to the PUC. State-managed renovation projects of this magnitude often fall behind schedule, so PUC's occupancy of the 7th floor may continue into 2016.

In light of the recommendation from the California State Auditor in its January 2015 report, recommending that the council should conduct a thorough cost benefit analysis of moving its operations to Sacramento, council staff is gathering pertinent facilities, lease, human resources and market data. This will be completed in the second quarter of 2015.

ASSESSMENT OF IMPLEMENTATION

Implementation of the cancellations, terminations, contractions, renegotiations, relocations, and subleases resulted in a $1.52 million rent reduction through fiscal year 2012-2013, and approximately $2.35 million through fiscal year 2014-2015.

Chapter 10

Other Issues

This chapter presents a review of several additional issues, including lease costs and location of AOC facilities.

Leases

The AOC leases office space in San Francisco, Burbank, and Sacramento. The SEC has considered concerns that have been raised about the cost of the leases.

Background

The AOC conducts its business from four leased spaces, including its main offices in San Francisco, regional offices located in Burbank and Sacramento, and a separate office in Sacramento housing the Office of Governmental Affairs. The regional offices house staff from multiple AOC divisions.

San Francisco

The AOC occupies office space at 455 Golden Gate Avenue, San Francisco. BANCRO and the Judicial Council Conference Center are located in the building. The AOC occupies a portion of the first floor, all of the third, fifth, sixth, and seventh floors, and part of the eighth floor.

This office building at 455 Golden Gate Avenue is owned and operated by the State of California and managed by the Department of General Services (DGS). Apparently, there is no formal lease, as DGS has assigned the space to a governmental entity and assesses a fair market rental value<sup>1</sup>. This office space contains 207,845 square feet and is leased at $4.27<sup>2</sup> per square foot per month, and 10,655 square feet of storage space in the building is rented at a monthly rate of $1.43 per square. The lease amount is adjusted usually every fiscal year. The total annual lease costs for the leased office and storage space is $10,832,816.80<sup>3</sup>. There is no expiration date under the lease arrangement with DGS.

Moving from this office would be problematic, since the AOC most likely would be required to negotiate a release from DGS or find an acceptable sublessor to take over the leased space.

Burbank Lease

The Burbank facility is located at 2255 North Ontario Street. This office building is located near the Burbank Airport, with 37,347 square feet of office space over two floors. The first floor is occupied primarily by OCCM personnel.<sup>4</sup> The second floor is occupied primarily by SRO and CCMS personnel.<sup>5</sup>

The lease term is $3.17 per square foot per month.<sup>6</sup> There is an additional $100 per month cost for the first floor relating to the existing HVAC system. Annualized, the expense is $3.19 per square foot each month.<sup>7</sup> The lease rate for the second floor is $3.1827 per square foot each month.<sup>8</sup> The lease agreement specifies the annual lease cost is $459,203.28 for the first floor and $968,368.32 for the second floor.<sup>9</sup> The total annual lease cost for the Burbank facility is $1,427,571.60.<sup>10</sup> The lease cost for each floor increases to $3.28 per square foot as of June 1, 2012,<sup>11</sup> with one option to renew for an additional five-year term extending through June 30, 2018. There is a “no early termination” condition in the lease agreement. The current lease term ends June 30, 2013.

Sacramento

The downtown office space, occupied by the Office of Governmental Affairs, is located within walking distance of the State Capitol, at 770 L Street. This office space, referred to as the Sacramento-Central facility, comprises 6,578 square feet on one floor, occupied exclusively by OGA. In February 2012<sup>12</sup> the AOC renegotiated the lease and reduced the leased footage. The total annual lease cost for this lease space is $177,606<sup>13</sup>. The current lease term ends August 31, 2017. There is one three-year option to extend the lease, with the rental rate to be set at 95 percent of the fair market value as of the end of the initial lease term.

The North facilities consist of space located in two office buildings located at 2850 and 2860 Gateway Oaks, Sacramento. The lease of office space at 2850 Gateway Oaks consists of 36,368 square feet and is used by the Finance and TCAS divisions. The rental rate is $2.10 per square foot per month.<sup>14</sup> The current lease term ends July 31, 2016. There are two three-year options with rent at fair market value.

<sup>8</sup> $3.28 effective as of July 1, 2012

The leased office space at 2860 Gateway Oaks consists of 28,263 square feet and is occupied by NCRO and OCCM. The rental rate is $2.05 per square foot per month.<sup>15</sup> There are two three-year options with rent at fair market value. The combined annual lease cost for 2850 and 2860 Gateway Oaks is $1,611,743.40.<sup>16</sup> The lease for this space includes a credit for one month's rent and a $200,000 tenant improvement allowance, which was taken upfront as a rent credit during the 2011–2012 fiscal year.<sup>17</sup>

Previously, the AOC leased additional space at 2880 Gateway Oaks. That lease was terminated in May 2011.<sup>18</sup> AOC employees working at that office were relocated to the 2850 Gateway Oaks office building.<sup>19</sup> The leases for space at 2850 and 2860 Gateway Oaks were renegotiated,<sup>20</sup> resulting in a reduction of $0.49 per square foot for space at 2850 Gateway Oaks and $0.27 per square foot for space at 2860 Gateway Oaks.<sup>21</sup>

| LOCATION                | AOC - LEASEHOLDS                 |                    |                                    |                   |                       |

Discussion

The AOC spends more than $1,150,000<sup>25</sup> per month on leased office space — an annual total of $13,866,898<sup>26</sup> — plus an additional annual charge of $182,839.8<sup>27</sup> for storage space for its San Francisco space.

Comparatively, the rental rates for the leased office spaces in Sacramento ($2.10 per square foot at 2850 Gateway Oaks<sup>28</sup>; $2.05 per square foot for 2860 Gateway Oaks<sup>29</sup>; and $2.25<sup>30</sup> per square feet at 770 L Street) are approximately half the $4.27<sup>31</sup> per square foot rental rate assessed for the government-owned building in San Francisco. This is consistent with historically lower commercial and residential lease rates found in Sacramento, compared with those in San Francisco.

Additionally, it is apparent from site visits to the leased spaces that not all lease space is utilized. If recommendations for reducing staffing levels are followed, the need for leased space will decrease.<sup>32</sup>

AOC Headquarters Location

The AOC has operated from headquarters in San Francisco since 1961. Its offices are located in the same building as the California Supreme Court.

It is usual for most enterprises, public or private, to consider their costs of operation and location. Given the comparative lease costs discussed above, there is reason for the AOC to reevaluate its office locations, including its headquarters space in San Francisco. Such review should be part of the organization's long-term business planning. In this case, the considerations should include a consideration of costs and benefits, both economic and political.

From a strictly economic standpoint, lease costs are generally lower in Sacramento than San Francisco. Labor costs generally are lower as well. the AOC partly recognizes this through its geographic pay differential system, whereby some Sacramento region employees are paid 7 percent less than San Francisco-based employees performing the same type of work.

<sup>29</sup> $2.10

<sup>32</sup> Current AOC occupied square footage is 310,493, reduced by 11,992 square feet in Burbank. As of July 1, 2013, AOC occupied square footage is scheduled to be reduced further by 54,888 to 255,605.

From a political standpoint, relocating AOC operations to Sacramento may be beneficial by placing the judicial branch administration closer to the Legislature, the executive branch, and governmental agencies. The importance of a strong political and legislative presence at the capital cannot be understated. Future success of the judicial branch in obtaining funding, and in advancing legislative goals, will be based partly on establishing strong relationships and credibility with legislators, legislative staff, and the Governor's Office. Access and interactions with key executive branch agencies, such as the Department of Finance, may be improved with AOC headquarters located in Sacramento.

One current legislative proposal would require all state agencies and the judicial branch to relocate their headquarters to Sacramento by 2025 (Assembly Bill 2501).

While no recommendation is offered concerning legislative proposals, possible relocation of AOC headquarters should be considered in the course of long-term planning for the judicial branch. That planning should be based on a cost-benefit analysis, taking into account economic, political, and other relevant factors.

Recommendations

The following recommendations are made regarding leases and location of operations.

Recommendation No. 10-1: The AOC should renegotiate or terminate its lease in Burbank. The lease for the Sacramento North spaces should be reviewed and renegotiated to reflect actual usage of the office space. The AOC should explore lower-cost lease options in San Francisco, recognizing that DGS would have to find replacement tenants for its space.<sup>33</sup>

Recommendation No. 10-2: As part of its long-term planning, the AOC should consider relocating its main offices, based on a cost-benefit analysis of doing so.

<sup>33</sup> In FY 11/12, the Sacramento North leases were negotiated mid-term for rent reduction. The AOC also exercised a termination option to relinquish a portion of the space under one lease, which will become effective in October 2012. The lease for the OGA office was renegotiated in FY 11/12 to contract the space mid-term. In FY 12/13, the AOC negotiated an Interagency Agreement with the California Public Utilities Commission for temporary occupancy of the entire 7th floor. In FY 12/13, the AOC entered into a sublease for a tenant to occupy the entire first floor of the Burbank office; upon the expiration of the lease, the office will move into a space that is approximately one-third of the current leased space.

7. Agreement on business terms of assignment of San Francisco 7th floor to State Public Utilities Commission on 6/13/2012; MOU with DGS signed.
8. FY 2013/14 San Francisco rent estimated to increase 3% over FY 2012/13.
9. Tenant improvement expenses, if any, and brokerage commissions not included.
10. Previously-reported space and rent reduction in San Francisco no longer feasible due to increase in BCDC programmatic requirement.

Information on Judicial Council Directives

Council Directive 128

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council support SEC Recommendation 7-86 and direct the Administrative Director of the Courts to provide the council with an update on organizational changes made with the elimination of the regional office staff.

SEC Recommendation 7-86

While responsibility for essential services currently provided to courts through regional offices should be consolidated and placed under the direction of Trial Court Support and Liaison Services in the Executive Office, a physical office should be maintained in the Northern California Region area to provide some services to courts in the region.

|---|---|
| x | PENDING COMPLETED: In November of 2011, the former Regional Office structure changed with the merger of the Bay Area Northern/Coastal Regional Office, the Northern Central Regional Office and the Southern Regional Office into one Regional Office. Additional staffing restructuring and layoffs ultimately occurred and the Regional Office was renamed the Trial Court Liaison Office effective July 1, 2012. As of October 1, 2012, the Trial Court Liaison was located under the Leadership Services Division reporting to the Chief of Staff. Three positions in the one office now provide service in the same capacity as the former three regional offices. |
|---|---|

Directives 126 and 128 relate to the elimination of the former three regional offices and the related staffing levels that were established in Sacramento, San Francisco, and Burbank in 2002.

As background, the regional offices were created to provide more of a local council presence and regional resource for the courts. The regional offices were the point of contact for the courts, especially small and medium sized courts, requiring specialist assistance in areas such as human resources and budgeting. Over the next several years, the regional offices also encompassed regional court interpreter coordinators, enhanced collections, reengineering, and community corrections units within their organizational structure.

In November of 2011, Regional Office structure was changed to merge Bay Area Northern/Coastal Regional Office, the Northern/Central Regional Office, and the Southern Regional Office into one regional office under the leadership of the Regional Administrative Director reporting directly to the Admin. Director.

Additional staffing reductions occurred in the Regional Office as follows:

- The Enhanced Collection Unit was transferred to the Finance Division (now Fiscal Services) January of 2012.
- Regional Court Interpreters were transferred to the Court Interpreter Unit within the Court Programs and Services Division (now Court Language Access and Services Program) in March of 2012.

- Four positions were permanently eliminated (layoffs, retirement and VSIP)
- The Community Corrections Program previously part of BANCRO was transferred to the Criminal Justice Court Services Office under the Executive Office along with two remaining BANCRO regional office staff moved to the Criminal Justice Court Services Office.

Finally, after all of these changes were made, the Regional Office was renamed Trial Court Liaison Office effective July 1, 2012. Effective October 1, 2012, the Trial Court Liaison Office is located under the Judicial Council and Court Leadership Services Division reporting to the Chief of Staff. The remaining regional office position was converted to the Chief of Staff. The Trial Court Liaison Office now consists of three positions and serves the same role as the former regional offices now offered within one office. This office is now merged within other offices that provide support to branch leadership (i.e. Judicial Council Support Services).

This directive is now considered complete as follows:

Effective October 1, 2012, the reporting structure of Trial Court Administrative Services (TCAS) was changed as part of a new organizational structure that was approved by the Judicial Council. This new structure reduced the JCC Executive Team to four positions (Administrative Director, Chief of Staff, Chief Operating Officer, and Chief Administrative Officer) and realigned and renamed existing divisions into offices housed under one of three newly created divisions (Judicial Council and Court Leadership Services Division, Judicial and Court Operations Services Division, and Judicial and Court Administrative Services Division). As part of the new structure, TCAS was moved under the Administrative Division, under the leadership of the Chief Administrative Officer consistent with the directive.

Additionally, on August 21, 2015 the JCC completed its Classification and Compensation Study that resulted in the implementation of a new salary structure for the organization. The compensation phase of the project followed the classification portion of the study that began in December 2013 and ended in March of 2015, when JCC staff received their new classification specifications. All positions in the JCC were evaluated, and JCC employees were subsequently assigned a classification and provided with information as to whether their salary fell within, above, or below the new salary ranges employee classifications.

The results of the classification study validated that the duties of the Director of TCAS were appropriate for the "Director" classification specification.

Trial court use of the Phoenix HR/Payroll functionality remains optional to individual courts, subject to available resources.

The Phoenix Program was approved in a Department of Finance budget change proposal for the 2008–2009 fiscal year. Prior to the budget reductions, the overall program envisioned deploying all of this functionality to the trial courts over a 5-year period with an authorized budget of $43M over this time span. The downturn of the economy resulted in almost immediate budget reductions, eventually culminating into a reduction of nearly $23 M as noted above. These budget reductions have suspended the program’s ability to provide an “enterprise resource program” as originally envisioned for the benefit of the courts.

In 2012 when this directive was considered complete, Sacramento, Stanislaus, Lake, Siskiyou, Santa Cruz, Riverside, and San Bernardino were deployed on the Phoenix HR/Payroll system.

ASSESSMENT OF IMPLEMENTATION

Since the directive was closed, the Yuba and Lassen Superior Courts implemented the Phoenix HR/Payroll System resulting in a total of 10 courts currently utilizing the payroll solution. Trinity Superior Court will deploy the system in July 2015. Planning has been initiated with Tehama Superior Court, and Monterey Superior Court is considering Phoenix as an option. Several other courts have shown interest in implementing the Phoenix payroll system; however, limited funding restricts the Trial Court Administrative Services (TCAS) office from expanding the services, and it can only take on a limited number of deployments at once.

TCAS staff is now able to deploy to additional courts with much less reliance on consultants. However, to deploy several courts at once, or to deploy to large courts, TCAS would require consulting assistance in the form of staff augmentation during the deployments.

Status of Phoenix Payroll System Deployment Activity

October 2012

The following is information regarding the status of payroll deployment activity and an identification of the courts that have expressed an interest in having their payroll functions performed by the Phoenix System and the Judicial and Court Administrative Services Division.

Trial court use of the Phoenix Human Resources functionality remains optional to individual courts. However, deployment activities for payroll were suspended after the Phoenix Program suffered severe budget reductions (53%), equal to approximately $23 M over the course of recent years.

Listed below are courts having expressed some level of interest in being included in future payroll deployments. The lack of funding has prohibited the possibility of an affirmative response from the AOC.

|           |             |          |
|-----------|-------------|----------|
| San Diego | Fresno      | Monterey |
| Kern      | Merced      | Yuba     |
| Alpine    | Alameda     | Orange   |
| Trinity   | San Joaquin |          |

These expressions of interest were unsolicited by the AOC, and several of the courts have been extremely vocal at either the Trial Court Budget Working Group meetings and/or the Court Executive Advisory Committee (CEAC) meetings. Although the Phoenix Financial System has been deployed to all 58 courts, the Phoenix payroll system has only been deployed to the 7 courts noted below:

|                |            |           |
|----------------|------------|-----------|
| Sacramento     | Stanislaus | Lake      |
| Siskiyou       | Santa Cruz | Riverside |
| San Bernardino |            |           |

The Phoenix Program was approved in a Department of Finance budget change proposal for the 2008–2009 fiscal year. Prior to the budget reductions, the overall program envisioned deploying all of this functionality to the trial courts over a 5-year period with an authorized budget of $43 M over this time span. The downturn of the economy resulted in almost immediate budget reductions, eventually culminating into a reduction of nearly $23 M as noted above. These budget reductions have suspended the program’s ability to provide an “enterprise resource program” as originally envisioned for the benefit of the courts.

The AOC’s goal is to provide a uniform process of financial management and human resources services to all of the trial courts in California. It is significant to note that if the fully integrated solution comes to fruition, the current and constant need to do a multitude of manual surveys with the trial courts would be virtually eliminated. The information would largely be captured in the Phoenix System and would enhance the courts' ability to manage and direct their resources.

Of further interest is that the executive branch payroll project, called the 21st Century Project, being implemented by the State Controller's Office is on the same SAP platform as the Phoenix System. It may make good business sense to explore bringing the Supreme Court, Appellate Courts, Habeas Corpus Resource Center, and the Administrative Office of the Courts onto the Phoenix System to furnish the judicial branch its own integrated system, rather than have it be a small player in the executive branch system that has yet to be proven.

Below is a representation of the current payroll scope of services and benefits of the Phoenix HR System, as well as additional requested "human capital management" functionality that courts have expressed a desire to obtain. They have also expressed an interest in acquiring additional financial functionality such as asset accounting, inventory management, and travel management.

| Trinity     | Small               |
| San Joaquin | Medium              |

*Draft proposals represent informal discussion of specific court deployment and departure from normal deployment strategy at Courts' request during no-deployment period. For example, a solution outside of Phoenix was implemented for Alpine.
 Note: The AOC has historically borne all deployment costs; several courts have raised the possibility of sharing the deployment cost.

Executive Summary

The Trial Court Budget Working Group and the Administrative Office of the Courts submit recommendations for distribution of the new $30 court reporter fee revenue to the courts and for allocation of monies from the State Trial Court Improvement and Modernization Fund to pay for the trial courts' direct costs related to Phoenix financial services.

Recommendation

The Trial Court Budget Working Group (TCBWG) and the Administrative Office of the Courts (AOC) recommend that, effective January 17, 2013, the Judicial Council:

- 1a. Allocate revenue from the new $30 fee for court reporting services in civil proceedings lasting under one hour to each trial court in the amount that each court remits to the Trial Court Trust Fund;
- 1b. Direct the AOC to request from the Department of Finance and the Legislature an additional $4 million in Trial Court Trust Fund Program 45.10 (Support for Operation of the Trial Courts) expenditure authority for the purpose of distributing the new court reporter fee revenue to courts;
- 1c. Direct the AOC to distribute this allocation to courts even if the Department of Finance and/or the Legislature do not approve an additional $4 million in expenditure authority; and
2. Allocate $6.769 million in one-time funding from the State Trial Court Improvement and Modernization Fund for direct costs related to the financial component of Phoenix Financial and Human Resources Services that had been paid for by courts in previous years according to council policy.

Previous Council Action

The council considered the recommendation for allocating the new court reporter fee revenue at its October 26, 2012 business meeting, but postponed any action due to possible concerns of the Department of Finance (DOF).

At its April 21, 2006 business meeting, the Judicial Council approved a TCBWG recommendation establishing council policy on which expenses for statewide administrative infrastructure services would be state-funded and which would be funded by the trial courts. Among the costs the council directed to be reimbursed by the courts were court-specific services related to the Court Accounting and Reporting System (CARS) and Court Human Resources Information System (CHRIS), which are now known as the Phoenix Financial and Human Resources Services program.

On the recommendation of the TCBWG at the council's August 31, 2012 business meeting, the council deferred the one-time allocation of $6.769 million from the Trial Court Trust Fund (TCTF) Program 30 appropriation for the AOC staffing costs charged to trial courts for the financial component of the Phoenix Financial and Human Resources Services program until the council's October 2012 meeting, but approved the allocation of $1.424 million from the TCTF

Program 30 appropriation for the AOC staffing costs charged to trial courts for the human resources component of the Phoenix program.

At its October 26, 2012 business meeting, the council allocated $6.758 million from the State Trial Court Improvement and Modernization Fund (STCIMF) for costs of the Phoenix Financial and Human Resources Services program that are not costs funded by the trial courts. The council deferred action on the TCBWG recommendation to allocate, on a one-time basis, $6.769 million for trial courts' direct costs related to Phoenix financial services from the STCIMF instead of the TCTF. The council deferred action due to potential concerns of the DOF.

Rationale for Recommendation

Recommendation 1a: Trial Court Trust Fund allocation of revenue from new civil court reporting services fee

As a result of the enactment of Senate Bill 1021, effective June 27, 2012, Government Code<sup>1</sup> section 68086(a)(1)(A) requires a new $30 fee for court reporting services in civil proceedings lasting under one hour. Section 68085.1 requires trial courts to remit any monies collected pursuant to section 68086 to the Trial Court Trust Fund (TCTF). While section 68086(b) is silent on how the monies should be allocated among courts, it requires that the fees collected "shall be used only to pay the cost for services of an official court reporter in civil proceedings." In order to offset the costs incurred by the courts that are providing court reporter services in civil proceedings lasting under one hour, the TCBWG is recommending that the council allocate to courts any revenue from the new $30 fee for court reporting services in civil proceedings lasting under one hour in the amount that each court has collected. If a court were to receive a share of the statewide $30 fee revenue in an amount that exceeded its actual costs, the court could not use the "excess" monies for any other purpose, including reduction offset. The allocation of the revenues back to courts in the amount that they have collected ensures that statewide the maximum amount of the restricted revenues will be used to offset courts' court reporter costs.

Recommendation 1b: Requesting $4 million in additional expenditure authority

The Budget Act of 2012 does not include additional TCTF Program 45.10 expenditure authority for distribution of this new revenue to trial courts. Courts have remitted about $1.16 million for the first four months of the fiscal year (see Attachment A). Assuming the statewide average monthly remittances for the remaining eight months will be the average of the August, September, and October monthly remittances, the total annual amount of revenue in 2012–2013 will be about $3.8 million. If more courts start charging the fee or if collections in the remaining eight months are on average higher than the first four months, the total revenue collected will likely exceed $3.8 million. Given the possibility of total annual revenue in 2012–2013 exceeding $3.8 million, it would be prudent to request $4 million in additional expenditure authority.

Provision 4 language in the Budget Act of 2012, provided below, authorizes the council to request additional TCTF Program 45.10 expenditure authority due to additional revenues:

Upon order of the Director of Finance, the amount available for expenditure in this item may be augmented by the amount of any additional resources available in the Trial Court Trust Fund, which is in addition to the amount appropriated in this item. Any augmentation must be approved in joint determination with the Chairperson of the Joint Legislative Budget Committee and shall be authorized not sooner than 30 days after notification in writing to the chairpersons of the committees in each house of the Legislature that consider appropriations, the chairpersons of the committees and appropriate subcommittees that consider the State Budget, and the chairperson of the joint committee, or not sooner than whatever lesser time the chairperson of the joint committee, or his or her designee, may determine. When a request to augment this item is submitted to the Director of Finance, a copy of that request shall be delivered to the chairpersons of the committees and appropriate subcommittees that consider the State Budget. Delivery of a copy of that request shall not be deemed to be notification in writing for purposes of this provision.

Recommendation 1c: Distribution of allocation of revenue from new civil court reporting services fee

Currently, there is estimated to be $25.1 million in available TCTF Program 45.10 expenditure authority, which can be used to distribute the new $30 court reporter fee revenue to courts (see row 51 of Attachment B). The TCBWG recommends allocating this revenue regardless of approval of additional appropriation authority since direct costs have been and continue to be incurred by the courts that provide court reporting services in civil proceedings lasting under one hour. If the Department of Finance and/or the Legislature do not approve an additional $4 million in Trial Court Trust Fund Program 45.10 (Support for Operation of the Trial Courts) expenditure authority, there would be an estimated $21.1 million in expenditure authority available to allocate funding for other purposes, including reduction offsets (see row 55 of Attachment B). The TCBWG is deferring to a subsequent council meeting any recommendations on whether the council should allocate any further reduction offsets to trial courts, due, at least in part, to the TCBWG wanting to consider any recommendations on trial court funding allocation methodologies that might be issued by the Trial Court Funding Workgroup.

Recommendation 2: State Trial Court Improvement and Modernization Fund (STCIMF) allocation for Phoenix financial services costs

This recommendation is for a one-time exception to statewide administrative services policy in order to provide a measure of financial relief to the courts from the $385 million of additional reductions allocated in FY 2012–2013. This adjustment will have no impact on the services provided to the trial courts by the AOC Trial Court Administrative Services Office. If the council allocates funding from the STCIMF for these Phoenix financial services direct costs, courts would not be charged what they had been in FY 2011–2012 and prior years through distribution reductions in their TCTF allocation (see Attachment D).

Based on current revenue estimates and currently approved allocations, there are sufficient monies to fund this allocation (see Column E of Attachment C). Excluding the recommended allocation, AOC is projecting an ending unrestricted fund balance of $38.3 million. In terms of expenditure authority, the Budget Act of 2012 authorizes the AOC to increase the current Program 30 appropriation amount of $9 million to an amount up to $18.673 million. To accommodate an additional $6.769 million, the AOC would need to augment the current expenditure authority by $5.815 million to $14.822 million (see Column E of Attachment C).

Alternatives Considered and Policy Implications

The TCBWG considered an alternative of distributing the new court reporter fee revenue pro-rata based on share of the TCTF allocation, but that would not ensure that statewide the maximum amount of the restricted revenues will be used to offset courts' court reporter costs. If a court were to receive a share of the statewide $30 fee revenue in an amount that exceeded its actual costs, the court could not use the "excess" monies for any other purpose, including reduction offset. Regarding the funding of the AOC staffing costs for Phoenix financial services, the only other alternative the TCBWG considered was the status quo, where courts continue to pay for direct costs related to Phoenix financial services from their TCTF allocation.

Notes

- 1 SB 1021, effective in FY 2012-2013, merged the Judicial Administration Efficiency and Modernization Fund and the Trial Court Improvement Fund into the State Trial Court Improvement and Modernization Fund.
- 2 Combines the FY 2010-2011 and FY 2011-2012 fund condition statements of the Judicial Administration Efficiency and Modernization Fund and the Trial Court Improvement Fund.
- 3 Included in this line are transfers from the General Fund, to the Trial Court Trust Fund per GC 77209(j) (previously GC 77209(k)), from the Trial Court Trust Fund (TCTF) previously required per GC 77209(b), and assumes that $20 million of the transfer to the TCTF in FY 2012-2013 will continue in future fiscal years.
- 4 Included in this line are the $31.6 million and $20 million transfers from the Modernization Fund to the TCTF in FY 2010-2011 and FY 2011-2012 as well as FY 2012-2013 transfers to the TCTF related to AOC staff cost savings, the Deloitte CCMS Delay Cost reimbursement, and fund balance.
- 5 The 2012 Budget Act allows this item's appropriation to be increased up to $18.673 million.
- 6 Prior to FY 2012-2013, the former Trial Court Improvement Fund was continuously appropriated and did not have an expenditure limit. The Judicial Administration Efficiency and Modernization Fund had an appropriation of $38.709 million in FY 2010-2011 and $18.709 million in FY 2011-2012.

Information on Judicial Council Directives

Council Directive 133

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council support SEC Recommendation 7-50 and direct the Administrative Director of the Courts, as part of AOC long term planning, to conduct a review and audit of all technology currently used in the AOC, including an identification of efficiencies and cost savings from the use of a single platform, and return to the council with a progress report on the findings.

SEC Recommendation 7-50

As with the Information Services Division, the AOC should determine whether to continue use of multiple or overlapping technologies for similar functions, as using a single technology could result in efficiencies and savings, both operationally and in personnel cost.

|                                     |   |
|-------------------------------------|---|
| <input type="checkbox"/>            | PENDING   |
| <input checked="" type="checkbox"/> | COMPLETED: Judicial Council staff conducted a cost benefit analysis for combining the Phoenix Financial System and Oracle Financial System into a single platform and it was determined that this proposal is cost prohibitive at this time. |

Judicial Council staff reviewed the Phoenix Financial System and Oracle Financial System to determine whether the council should expend future time and resources to consolidate the systems into a single platform.

Combining the two systems into a single platform will require legislative and, potentially, constitutional changes that would allow the judicial branch to deploy a single branchwide enterprise resource planning IT platform, including deposit of all judicial branch funds into a single judicial branch treasury. If successful in gaining the authority for a single branch treasury, the Oracle System would be moved to the Phoenix System. A preliminary staff estimate suggests there would be approximately $5M in deployment costs with an ongoing annual savings of $250,000. This will also require significant effort from council's Legal Services and Governmental Affairs, and will require a complete cost-benefit analysis when the requirements are determined.

Based on the review, it was determined that consolidating the two systems into a single platform is cost prohibitive at this time, and there is no monetary benefit to separating from the State Controller's Office.

Although the proposal to combine Phoenix Financial System and Oracle Financial System into a single platform is not being considered for today's environment, this issue will warrant future consideration. If the branch were able to resolve the potential legislative and constitutional changes required, the branch would be better able to manage its resources, accounting for state entities and the trial courts in one system.

- Report regarding Directive 133, November 2014

JUDICIAL COUNCIL OF CALIFORNIA

455 Golden Gate Avenue · San Francisco, California 94102-3688

www.courts.ca.gov

Report regarding Directive 133

Executive Summary

Judicial Council restructuring Directive 133 directed the Administrative Director to review the information technology systems that are currently implemented branchwide to support enterprise resource planning - finance, human resources, and education functional areas - to identify costs, benefits, potential long-term savings, and the challenges of migrating support to a single information technology (IT) platform.

In response to this directive, it is recommended the council select option 1.

Recommendations

The options presented for consideration by the Judicial Council relate specifically to whether the council should expend future time and resources to consolidate the Phoenix Financial System and Oracle Financial System into a single platform.

It should be noted that this report does not include analysis and recommendations regarding whether the council should direct the organization to move off of the State Controller's Office (SCO) payroll system given that the SCO's payroll system is not a branchwide system. However, if the State Level Judiciary (SLJ)<sup>1</sup> is moved to the Phoenix system for financials (see Option 2 below), it would make sense to look at the HR/Payroll functionality within Phoenix, once the financial system is stable, to replace the state system for SLJ employees.

Additionally, also excluded from this analysis are recommendations to the council on moving some human resource and education functions currently being done in a Peoplesoft application for the SLJ. This area was not considered for this analysis because that functionality does not currently exist in Phoenix and, as such, there is no existing platform to migrate towards for these functions.

Option 1: Do not consolidate the two (Phoenix Financial and Oracle Financial) branch enterprise resource planning systems. There would be no additional costs to the branch.

Option 2: Pursue legislative and, potentially, constitutional changes that would allow the judicial branch to have a single branchwide enterprise resource planning IT platform, including the deposit of all judicial branch funds into a single judicial branch treasury. If successful in gaining the authority to have a single branch treasury, move the state-level judiciary from the Oracle system to the Phoenix system. A preliminary staff estimate suggests there would be approximately $5,000,000 in deployment costs with an ongoing annual savings of $250,000.

This option will result in significant effort from council's Legal Services and Governmental Affairs, and will require a complete cost-benefit analysis once the requirements are solidified.

Directive 133 will be closed once the council chooses an option.

Option 1 is being recommended because option 2 is cost prohibitive at this time, and there is no monetary benefit to separating from the State Controller's Office. There is an argument for future consideration that the branch would be better able to manage its resources if accounting for the state entities and the trial courts was in one system.

Previous Council Action

At its August 31, 2012, meeting, the council approved the following directive:

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council support SEC recommendations 7-46 and 7-50 and directs the Administrative Director of the Courts, as part of AOC long-term planning, to review the information technology systems currently implemented branchwide to support enterprise resource planning: finance, human resources, and education functional areas; to identify costs, benefits, and potential long-term savings, and the challenges of migrating support to a single IT platform; and to return to the council with a progress report on the findings.

Rationale for Recommendations

Current status

Trial courts. Currently, all 58 trial courts are on the Phoenix Financial System, and nine trial courts are on the Phoenix human resources and payroll system.

Each court is responsible for managing and controlling its own fiscal affairs in compliance with Generally Accepted Accounting Practices (GAAP) from the Governmental Accounting Standards Board (GASB), and the Trial Court Financial Policies and Procedures Manual (TCFPPM). The trial courts are individual entities by statute and are considered in each year's Governor's Budget and Budget Act as "local assistance"; there is no official combined entity.

The trial courts receive their revenue from the state in 13 monthly installments. The 13th period is for reimbursements and other revenues that cannot be disbursed before the end of June. Once the trial courts receive their revenue - whether from the state, or local collections - they deposit the funds into the Trial Court Treasury as established by the Judicial Council pursuant to Government Code section 77009. A few courts have some money on deposit with their county but other than payroll, most payments to vendors are issued from the Trial Court Treasury. All expenses, regardless of source, are recorded in Phoenix.

State Level Judiciary (SLJ). The financial record keeping of the Judicial Council, the appellate courts, the Habeas Corpus Resource Center, and the Commission on Judicial Performance is being done on Oracle applications maintained by the council staff with interfaces to the State Controller’s Office (SCO). Payroll is completed by council staff entering information into the SCO payroll system.

The state-level judiciary is considered in each year’s Governor’s Budget and Budget Act as a state entity. The state-level judiciary’s financial records are required to be maintained with the California Legal Basis accounting methodology as described in Government Code sections 12460 and 13344. This is a modified accrual accounting with three fiscal years’ appropriations being tracked in the financial records at all times, along with other nuances as imposed by the State Controller’s Office and the Department of Finance.

SLJ funds are maintained in the State Treasury, and all payments from these entities are made through the SCO. The SCO is responsible for managing and controlling the fiscal affairs of the state, and therefore they review and validate all payments before releasing funds. Council staff facilitate this process by validating that all requests will meet SCO standards before sending to the SCO.

Phoenix/Oracle comparison. The table below provides additional information regarding the differences between the Phoenix and Oracle systems.

| Function   | Phoenix  | Oracle   |
|---|---|---|
| Configuration   | Configured for the trial courts to be an end-to-end solution for financials and payroll.  | Configured to manage SLJ budgets and accounting in the manner required by the state.  |
| Compliance with state budgetary–legal basis of accounting | Trial courts do not have to comply with the state budgetary–legal basis of accounting as described in Government Code sections 12460 and 13344. Although, at year-end, information from the trial courts and Phoenix are combined to complete a Comprehensive Annual Financial Report (CAFR) that is | Oracle has to comply with state budgetary-legal basis of accounting as described in Government Code sections 12460 and 13344. |

|---------------------------------------|---|---|
|                                       | included in the State of California government-wide financial statements.   |   |
| Appropriation accounting <sup>2</sup> | Phoenix does not do appropriation accounting.   | Configured to do appropriation accounting as required by the state.   |
| Accounting structures and codes       | Accounting structures and codes were set up specifically for the trial courts. They do not match the state structures and codes, other than in some of the written descriptions.                    | Accounting codes roll up to comply with the state's Uniform Code Manual .  |
| Payments                              | Relies on there being a treasury (bank accounts) on which to deposit and draw funds. Checks and electronic payments to employees and vendors are done through Phoenix using interfaces to the bank. | Oracle generates claim schedules that have to be submitted to the SCO Claims Audit to initiate payments through the State Treasury.                       |
| Reporting                             | Each court is treated as a separate business entity. Yet, they all may be rolled up in a summary format for reporting to the state.   | All SLJ entities are summarized and reported at the judicial branch level as one entity, as budgeted in the Budget Act or authorized by the Legislature.  |
| Other                                 | Trial courts do not manage capital projects.  | Includes the following functionality not currently deployed in Phoenix: capital projects, construction in progress, fixed assets, and various interfaces. |

Comments, Alternatives Considered, and Policy Implications

If the council were to decide that the Phoenix and Oracle systems should not be consolidated (Option 1 above), council staff will continue to look for opportunities in the future to streamline business processes and potentially combine Enterprise Resource Planning systems if a favorable cost benefit arises.

If the council were to request that the organization continue with activities to combine Phoenix and Oracle into a single branchwide enterprise platform (Option 2 above), additional work will be required. The additional work would include significant effort from Legal Services and Governmental Affairs, as well as a complete cost-benefit analysis once final requirements are solidified. Additionally, council staff would need to work with the state Department of Finance and the State Controller's Office on cash flow issues to the SLJ. A regular allocation process similar to that of the trial courts might work for SLJ operations, but funds related to construction and bonds would be more complicated. Please note that the Senate and Assembly financial transactions are subject to State Controller's Office claims audit review and warrant processing; both houses of the Legislature are required to use the State Treasury.

Judicial Council staff understand that legislation is likely necessary in order to authorize the state-level judiciary to be exempt from the State Controller's Office claims audit review and warrant processing and from the obligation to use the State Treasury, but even then arguments could be made that these duties - because they are constitutional - cannot be transferred by legislation.

The review and creation of options for this directive were performed by a group of interdivisional council staff representing Finance, Trial Court Administrative Services, Information Technology, Human Resources, the Center for Judiciary Education & Research, and Legal Services. It should be noted that an additional task performed by the team was to survey the trial courts on the possible need for further functionality not currently available in Phoenix (education management, performance management, etc.). The courts have implemented alternate methods for fulfilling these requirements until a solution is available through Phoenix. This information will be used for future cost-benefit analyses and possible funding requests. As noted previously, given that this functionality is not in Phoenix at this time, this report does not address moving the SLJ from a PeopleSoft application to Phoenix.

Implementation Requirements, Costs, and Operational Impacts

The current cost for licenses for the Oracle Financial System is approximately $250,000 per annum. In addition, major system upgrades requiring external consulting services to assist internal staff are performed about every seven years costing approximately $1 million ($143,000 if annualized). The system is supported on an everyday basis by two staff in Information Technology at a cost of approximately $275,000. The only savings that would be realized by moving the SLJ to the Phoenix Financial System would be the license fee of $250,000 per annum. The two Information Technology staff members would need to move to the Phoenix support team to work on support requests from the SLJ. Additionally, there would be no savings from the upgrade costs as it is estimated that these costs would be subsumed as Phoenix upgrade costs to cover the additional functionality required to meet the needs of the SLJ.

Based on Judicial Council staff experience in deploying Phoenix to the trial courts, an estimate of $5,000,000 in one-time costs is being used for this exercise. This is a rough estimate because the requirements would depend on the outcome of the legislative pursuit and would be driven by the requirements of the state in regards to accommodating their ongoing budget and accounting needs. The branch owns an enterprise license for Phoenix, so no additional licensing costs would be incurred.

 COMPLETED: TCAS continues to provide clear service-level agreements with respect to services provided to the courts.

TCAS continues to provide clear service-level agreements (SLAs) with respect to services provided to the courts. An SLA is an agreement reached between the council and a court regarding the provision of certain services provided to the court related to the implementation and maintenance of the Phoenix System. These agreements, entered into by the Phoenix Program Director and a court's CEO, originated in 2007 and continue to outline the responsibilities of both parties.

SERVICE LEVEL AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE JUDICIAL COUNCIL OF CALIFORNIA, ADMINISTRATIVE OFFICE OF THE COURTS AND
THE SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA, COUNTY OF «COURT» FOR THE PROVISION OF PHOENIX FINANCIAL SERVICES

I. PURPOSE

This service level agreement (“Agreement”) including its attached schedule outlines the understanding between the Judicial Council of California, Administrative Office of the Courts (AOC) and the Superior Court of California, County of «Court» (Court) related to the provision of certain services to the Court relating to the Phoenix Financial system to be implemented for the Court.

This agreement shall be effective as of July 1, 2007 (“Effective Date”).

II. PARTIES

The signatories to this agreement are Ms. Jody Patel, Regional Administrative Director, as the authorized signatory for the AOC and «CEO», the Court Executive Officer of the Superior Court of California, County of «Court», as the authorized signatory for the Court.

III. BACKGROUND

Since the implementation of the Trial Court Funding Act of 1997 (Assembly Bill 233; Stats. 1997, ch. 850), which transferred funding responsibility for the Superior Courts from the individual counties to the State of California, the branch has focused on coordinating and integrating its administrative functions and improving the technology that supports court operations. Based on those goals the technology infrastructure project “Phoenix Financials” is currently being deployed statewide to all courts to provide centralized financial management that allows for more uniform, consistent, and cost-effective administration of trial court operations.

IV. SERVICES DESCRIPTION

Phoenix Financials is a centralized financial management system that currently provides the following areas of services (“Services”) to courts once they have been implemented on Phoenix Financials:

1. General Services
2. Accounts Payable Services
3. General Ledger, Analysis and Reporting Services
4. Trust and Treasury Services

5. Procurement Services.

The AOC shall provide the Court the services listed above at the service levels identified in the attached standardized Service Level Agreement Schedule (SLA Schedule) document.
«SLA_Comments»

V. RESPONSIBILITIES

The AOC shall provide the services at the levels specified to the Court as defined in the SLA Schedule. The Court shall allocate the resources and perform the responsibilities set forth in the SLA Schedule. Responsibilities outlined in the SLA Schedule, for both the Court and the AOC, are limited only to modules and/or functionality that the Court has implemented.

VI. NOTICES

Any formal notice or communication required to be sent to a party pursuant to this agreement shall be sent in writing by First-Class U.S. Mail or commercial express mail to the street address of the Authorized Signatory of the party, which notice shall be effective upon date of receipt. Routine exchange of information regarding the Services may be conducted by email or fax.

VII. EFFECTIVE DATE

July 1, 2007.

The services to the Court will continue to automatically renew on its anniversary date until the parties agree to any modification or changes to this agreement.

VIII. QUALITY ASSURANCE

If the AOC fails to perform any of the service levels under this Agreement based upon a commercially reasonable standard of care, the AOC shall within 30 days of receipt of notice from the Court to develop and implement a Corrective Action Plan and report such plan to the Court. If the Corrective Action Plan fails to materially resolve the problem within a reasonable time (not less than 60 days) after implementation, the Court may escalate resolution of the problem by requesting a resolution meeting between the Court CEO and the Project Director over the Phoenix Project. If the issues(s) are not resolved at that meeting, the Court CEO can request a resolution meeting with the Chief Deputy Director, Administrative Office of the Courts. This procedure shall be the Court’s sole and exclusive remedy in connection with any failure of the AOC to meet the service levels contained in this Agreement.

Information on Judicial Council Directives

Council Directive 135

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts to consider SEC Recommendation 7-64 and implement the necessary organizational and staffing changes, contingent upon the council's approval of an organizational structure for the AOC.

SEC Recommendation 7-64

The OCCM should be renamed Office of Court Construction and Facilities Management Services. The functions of this unit should be placed under the Judicial and Court Operations Services Division and reporting to the Chief Operating Officer. The manager of this unit should be compensated at the same level.

This directive is now considered complete as follows:

Effective October 1, 2012, the reporting structure of OCCM was changed as part of a new organizational structure that was approved by the Judicial Council. This new structure reduced the JCC Executive Team to four positions (Administrative Director, Chief of Staff, Chief Operating Officer, and Chief Administrative Officer) and realigned and renamed existing divisions into offices housed under one of three newly created divisions (Judicial Council and Court Leadership Services Division, Judicial and Court Operations Services Division, and Judicial and Court Administrative Services Division). As part of the new structure, the Office of Court Construction and Management (now Capital Program) was moved under the Operations & Programs Division, under the leadership of the Chief Operating Officer (currently vacant) consistent with the directive.

Additionally, on August 21, 2015 the JCC completed its Classification and Compensation Study that resulted in the implementation of a new salary structure for the organization. The compensation phase of the project followed the classification portion of the study that began in December 2013 and ended in March of 2015, when JCC staff received their new classification specifications. All positions in the JCC were evaluated, and JCC employees were subsequently assigned a classification and provided with information as to whether their salary fell within, above, or below the new salary ranges employee classifications.

The results of the classification study validated that the duties of the Director of the Capital Program were appropriate for the "Director" classification specification and the compensation study validated that the pay range for the existing Director was within the salary range for the "Director" classification pay range.

- COMPLETED: Capital Program office currently utilizes an approach that focuses on cumulative cost effectiveness of the capital outlay projects.

With the reorganization of the AOC effective October 1, 2012, the former Office of Court Construction and Management was bifurcated into two offices, Capital Program and Real Estate and Facilities Management (REFM) and both offices have provided a response to this directive. This response is provided by Capital Program office.

With respect to an approach for the evaluation of the cost effectiveness for the entire scope of the Capital Program office this directive was reported as complete in June of 2013. The approach focused on analyzing the cumulative cost effectiveness of each of the 45 capital outlay projects with a combined value of $4.7 billion that together form the entire scope of the Capital Program office. The program has another approximately $1.1 billion in construction to start—about one-half of the remaining active projects have not yet begun construction and are in site acquisition or under design. The analysis recommended in this approach has been completed for the first 6 projects in the process of preparing the report mandated by Sen. Bill 78 (Committee on Budget and Fiscal Review), Stats. 2011, ch. 10, and for 3 additional projects in the process of preparing the report mandated by Sen. Bill 75 (Stats. 2013, ch. 31).

Proposed Approach to Evaluate Cost Effectiveness

Judicial Branch Capital Program Office

AOC Directive #136

June 5, 2013

Below is an outline of a proposed approach to evaluate the cumulative cost effectiveness of each of the 45 capital outlay projects that together form the entire scope of the Judicial Branch Capital Program Office. This outline has been prepared for a June 2013 interim report to the Judicial Council (the council) on the status of AOC Restructuring Directive #136. The analysis recommended in this approach has been completed for the first six projects in the process of preparing the report mandated by Sen. Bill 78 (Committee on Budget and Fiscal Review), Stats. 2011, ch. 10. As projects are completed, an analysis using a methodology as the one employed for the SB 78 report will be completed using internal staff resources.

The proposed approach covers the following topics, which are outlined below:

1. The scope of the Judicial Branch Capital Program Office in relation to this directive.
2. Definition and measurement of “cost effectiveness.”
3. Timing and execution of an analysis of cost effectiveness.
4. Accepted industry methodologies and standards employed in assessments of cost effectiveness.

1. Judicial Branch Capital Program Office Scope

For the purpose of this directive, which focuses on cost effectiveness, the primary scope of the office is to deliver the $5.0 billion capital program of 45 projects within budget. The proposed approach outlined below recognizes that the key performance indicator of the Capital Program Office should relate to the most significant cost to the state of the program itself, which is the cumulative total of the actual cost of the 45 capital projects.

2. Definition and Measurement of Cost Effectiveness

In the California Capital Construction Program Management Audit Report prepared by Pegasus-Global Holdings, Inc. (2012 Pegasus report), overall effectiveness of an organization is defined on page 29 of the final report as “the determination of how well predetermined goals and objectives for a particular activity or program are achieved.” In other words, what are the outcomes or results of the capital program compared to program goals. The 2012 Pegasus report also defines “efficiency” as “the use of minimal input of resources for the achievable output,” and “economy” as the “acquisition of resources of appropriate quality and quantity at the lowest reasonable cost.”

Proposed Approach to Evaluate Cost Effectiveness

Judicial Branch Capital Program Office

AOC Directive #136

June 5, 2013

For the purpose of this directive, the most significant measure of cost of the capital program is the total of all costs of the 45 projects that together form the capital program. The cost effectiveness of the program is further defined as the extent to which collectively, overtime, the 45 projects are delivered within budget.

Whether the capital program is completed within budget is measured by comparing the sum total of the cost of all completed projects to the sum total of total project budgets as initially and finally authorized by the legislature.

Comparing the final total cost of a project to the final authorized project budget is a more robust measure of cost effectiveness for two reasons. First, the final authorized project budget reflects the final scope of work of the project as authorized by the legislature. Secondly, the final authorized budget for roughly sixty percent of the projects will incorporate the direction of the Court Facilities Working Group and its Courthouse Cost Reduction Subcommittee (the subcommittee).<sup>1</sup> A total of 17 of 45 projects in the capital program were designed prior to the involvement of the subcommittee, including the 10 projects completed to date<sup>2</sup>. The subcommittee has and will continue to oversee a process to reduce project budgets that, along with Judicial Council mandated reductions to hard construction cost budgets for 28 of the 45 projects in the program, will significantly reduce the costs of the capital program as projects are completed over time. Over $122 million in project budget reductions have been mandated for the first 14 projects reviewed by the subcommittee. Review by the subcommittee of the remaining 14 projects will occur when these projects are design.

3. Timing and Execution of Cost Effectiveness Analysis

The timing of an analysis for this directive is, by definition, determined by when groups of projects complete construction and their actual costs are known. As demonstrated by the report the Judicial Council was directed to prepare in accordance with Senate Bill 78<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup> At its October 26, 2012 meeting, the Judicial Council approved a recommendation that clarified the authority and role of the subcommittee as follows: “The Courthouse Cost Reduction Subcommittee of the Court Facilities Working Group shall oversee and have direct implementation authority to mandate project cost reductions for all capital-outlay projects in design (preliminary plans and working drawings) managed by the Judicial Branch.” Full report can be found here: <http://www.courts.ca.gov/documents/jc-20121026-itemG.pdf>

<sup>2</sup> Of the 10 projects that have been completed for the benefit of the judicial branch, 8 were entirely state funded. The new courthouse in downtown Merced was county funded with a small state contribution. The Fresno- Juvenile Delinquency Courthouse project was county funded with the state leasing to purchase the courthouse portion of the building. Of the 8 projects entirely funded by the state, 2 were managed by the Executive DGS—the Court of Appeal, Fifth Appellate District in Fresno and the Renovation of the Mosk Courthouse for the Third Appellate District in Sacramento.

Proposed Approach to Evaluate Cost Effectiveness

Judicial Branch Capital Program Office

AOC Directive #136

June 5, 2013

(SB 78) an analysis of whether one or more projects is completed within budget must be undertaken when the project is fully completed. To date, 10 of the 45 projects that compose the capital program have been completed, with one project in the warranty phase.<sup>4</sup> Based on the estimated schedule for executing the remaining 36 projects<sup>5</sup>, there will be several sets of projects that complete construction in each year starting in 2013, with the last set currently scheduled to be completed in 2019. This is illustrated in Attachment 1, which is a schedule dated March 19, 2013 illustrating how groups of projects are scheduled to be completed through the conclusion of the warranty period as follows:

- 2013 (1)
- 2014 (4)
- 2015 (5)
- 2016 (6)
- 2017 (3)
- 2018 (5)
- 2019 (0)
- 2020 (12)

Final construction costs—and therefore total project costs—are typically fully identified about one year after a project is completed, when all outstanding punch-list and warranty items are closed out. Therefore, an analysis of the cost effectiveness of each set of projects, as measured by comparing the completed cost to the initial and final authorized budget, will be completed about 16 months after the last project in a set of projects is completed. An analysis of how the cost of completed projects compare to their budgets will be executed by staff using the methodology employed for the SB 78 report, which is provided as Attachment 2. As the program progresses and each set of projects is completed, an annual or periodic evaluation of the cumulative cost effectiveness of the program will be completed. A program level analysis will be completed after the costs of all projects have been closed out.

<sup>4</sup> Note that a comparison of final costs to original and final appropriations (the budgets for each project) has been completed for the set of six completed projects that were managed by the Judicial Branch and documented as part of the SB 78 Report submitted to the legislature in January 2013 under council direction. The Lassen–New Susanville project is completed but still in the warranty phase.

<sup>5</sup> Includes the Lassen project, which is in the warranty phase. The Sacramento – New Sacramento Criminal Courthouse project is another project currently in the site acquisition phase, but has been indefinitely delayed and is therefore excluded from this project count.

4. Accepted Industry Methodologies and Standards Related to Measuring Cost Effectiveness

The 2012 Pegasus report identifies accepted industry methods used to measure how organizations are performing in relation to goals. These methods are various forms of “benchmarking”. The 2012 Pegasus report outlines a series of recommendations related to benchmarking, including a recommendation to develop, adopt, and implement functional benchmarking, using both best practice benchmarks and “key performance indicator” benchmarks.

The proposed approach to evaluating cost effectiveness is based upon key performance indicator benchmarking, using the total cost of the program as the key performance indicator. The benchmark is an analysis of how collectively the budgets for the 45 capital outlay projects compare to the actual completed costs of the projects.

Chapter 1

Executive Summary

Subject Projects

The six projects covered by this report are listed below. See Mandate section and Table 1.4 on pages 7 and 8 for more detail.

1. Court of Appeal, Fourth Appellate District, Division Three
2. Plumas/Sierra Regional Courthouse
3. B. F. Sisk Courthouse
4. Richard E. Arnason Justice Center
5. Mammoth Lakes Courthouse
6. Lassen Superior Court Hall of Justice

Key Findings Summary

Project Costs

The AOC has maintained a strong record of managing court construction project costs. Based on the final appropriation amounts for the six subject projects, the AOC delivered all projects under budget, saving the state nearly $29 million. The AOC even delivered four of the six projects below their original appropriation amounts. Two projects required augmentations to the original appropriation amounts, primarily because of rapidly escalating construction costs during the period in which they were originally budgeted and then bid. Viewed as a group, the six projects came in a total of $6.7 million under their original budgets. For individual savings for each project see the Appropriations and Project Costs table in the project-specific Chapters 2–7.

Notes for Table 1.1

<sup>1</sup> AOC employee costs are not billed directly to the projects and thus are not included in this table or in the Appropriations and Project Costs Table in the project-specific chapters 2–7. Costs for outside firms providing project management are taken from job cost accounting reports and are included in project costs throughout this report.

The 10-year expansion of construction activity in California from 1995 to 2005, illustrated in Figure 1.1 below, was a primary cause of the augmentations required for the Court of Appeal, Fourth Appellate District, Division Three and the B. F. Sisk Courthouse. Prices rose sharply in response to the increasing activity, causing current estimates to exceed those produced at the projects' inception. Total construction activity in California increased 248 percent, or almost 25 percent per year, from $29 billion in 1995 to $72 billion in 2005, with the sharpest increase between 2003 and 2005. When the industry is at peak levels of activity, competition declines and bid prices increase. Figure 1.2 below illustrates the ensuing high annual rate of construction cost escalation, which peaked at almost 10 percent in 2004–2005.

Project Timelines

Compared to the final approved project timelines, two projects were completed early and two projects were completed 6 and 8 weeks after their approved completion dates. Delays for the other two projects were 25 and 28 weeks.

Compared to the original project timelines, one project was completed early. Delays for the other five projects ranged from 28 to 78 weeks. The longest schedule extensions were caused by complications in completing property acquisitions and changes to project scope driven by Judicial Council–approved new judgeship requirements. Reasons for delays are described in the project key findings sections below and in more detail in the project-specific Chapters 2 through 7.

Variations occur between the original scheduled completion date and the final approved completion date because a new schedule is submitted with each funding request or scope change that is approved by the Department of Finance (DOF). As these courthouse construction projects moved forward, the DOF and the Legislative Analyst’s Office (LAO) collaborated with the AOC to develop revised project scopes to provide the best long-term value for the state. This effort to align project scopes with the state’s long-term budget priorities or to take advantage of economic opportunities in the form of donated or below market sites caused delays, as occurred with the following five of the six projects covered by this report: Court of Appeal, Fourth Appellate District, Division Three; Plumas/Sierra Regional Courthouse; Richard E. Arnason Justice Center; B. F. Sisk Courthouse; and Mammoth Lakes Courthouse. See the Key Findings for Each Project section in this chapter and the Project Timelines section in each of the project-specific chapters 2–7 for more detail.

Approvals

All necessary approvals were obtained for each project. Approvals by the Judicial Council, the State Public Works Board (SPWB), the Governor through the annual budget act and authority delegated to the DOF, and the Legislature through the annual budget act, as well as review by the local court, are documented in the Review and Approval Dates table in each project-specific chapter. The jurisdiction for approval by each approving body varies. For example, the SPWB approves site selection, site acquisition, and preliminary plans, as set forth in the State Administrative Manual (SAM).

Procurement Methods

As authorized in SB 1732,<sup>1</sup> the Trial Court Facilities Act of 2002 (Gov. Code, §§ 70301–70404), and according to the Court Facilities Contracting Policies and Procedures adopted by the Judicial Council in 2007, the capital program is exempted from the branch contracting policies and procedures and is thus able to use a range of proven project delivery methods. These methods, including traditional design-bid-build (which is strictly quantitative), construction manager at risk (which employs both qualitative and quantitative evaluation criteria), and design-bid-build with prequalification of general contractors (which employs a qualitative evaluation followed by quantitative low-bidding), all provide for a competitive, equitable, and diverse process to benefit the branch projects. The selection of any one method for a project may take into account numerous factors, including but not limited to: size of the project; location of the project; pool of eligible firms; timing; and market conditions. For the courthouse capital projects covered by this report, the AOC employed two processes for construction procurement: construction manager at risk (CMAR) and design-bid-build (DBB) with prequalification of general contractors. The AOC uses the CMAR process on many projects because it has the following advantages in delivering these complex, design intensive projects: early focus on design issues, construction advice and cost review during the design process, careful oversight of costs and schedule, early cost commitments, and opportunities to shorten the overall project schedule. This process was used for four of the six projects covered by this report: Court of Appeal, Fourth Appellate District, Division Three, Richard E. Arnason Justice Center, B. F. Sisk Courthouse, and Mammoth Lakes Courthouse. The design-bid-build process was used for the Plumas/Sierra Regional Courthouse and the Lassen Superior Court Hall of Justice. See Appendix B, Procurement Methods and Evaluation Criteria, for more detail. See the Key Findings for Each Project section below for the number of proposals or bids received for each procurement, which ranged from 2 to 7 and averaged 4.7 per procurement.

Construction Claims and Litigation

There are no unresolved construction claims and no pending construction litigation associated with the six subject projects. As shown in Appendix B, Figure B.2, one of the criteria the AOC uses to evaluate CMAR firms and general contractors involves financial strength, safety record, and claims avoidance.

Design Standards, Code Conformance, and Sustainable Measures

The AOC developed its California Trial Court Facilities Standards, which were adopted by the Judicial Council in April 2006 and amended in March 2010. As stated in the preface, “These Facilities Standards attempt to maximize value to the State of California by balancing the aesthetic, functional, and security requirements of courthouse design with the budget realities of initial construction cost and the long-term life cycle costs of owning and operating institutional buildings.” Use of the Facilities Standards by the design teams is defined in the Agreement for Services between the AOC and the consultants retained for specific projects. The Facilities Standards, used in conjunction with all applicable codes and ordinances, form the basis of design for all new court facilities in California. The Facilities Standards require that “All new courthouse projects shall be designed for sustainability and, at a minimum, to the standards of a LEED™ 2.1 “Certified” rating. Depending upon the project’s program needs and construction cost budget, projects may be required to meet the standards for a LEED™ 2.2 “Silver” rating.” The sustainability levels achieved for the six subject projects are shown in Table 1.2 below.

Innovative Project Management and Comprehensive Project Teams

As authorized by the Court Facilities Contracting Policies and Procedures, the AOC has utilized the following tools to enhance the effectiveness of its project management:

1. A highly visible and transparent selection process, which attracted top architecture and construction firms;
2. Management plans for each project;
3. Kick-off meetings for each project;
4. Project advisory groups comprising key representatives from the court, the local community, and the AOC Project Manager;
5. Monthly progress reports for use by AOC management and staff, judges, and court staff;
6. Prequalification of prospective construction management firms and general contractors;
7. Regular project review and active involvement by AOC management; and
8. Alternate delivery methods such as construction manager at risk.

Each AOC project team comprises the following major components: project manager, facilities planner, real estate analyst, environmental analyst, facilities management administrator, and security coordinator. The composition of the project teams helps ensure that: the projects as designed and built adhere to their authorizing documents and comply with the California Environmental Quality Act (CEQA); the real estate acquisition is completed and will accommodate the proposed project; the new facility will be efficient and economical to operate; and the new facility will be safe and secure for the public, court staff, and judicial officers.

Impact of the Ongoing State Budget Crisis

The legislatively mandated income stream, from increased court user fees and fines, put in place to fund the California Courthouse Facilities Program has been repeatedly borrowed from, transferred to the state General Fund, and redirected to trial court operations.<sup>2</sup> Even in this challenging environment, the AOC has completed initial authorization of all projects mandated under SB 1732 and SB 1407<sup>3</sup> and continues to move projects forward while competing for funding with Caltrans, the California Department of Corrections and Rehabilitation (CDCR), and other state agencies.

Judicial Branch Project Management Costs

Project management for courthouse capital projects is provided by the AOC's Capital Program Office, primarily by AOC employees and sometimes with assistance from outside firms. For this report, judicial branch project management costs are calculated by estimating labor costs for project managers, associate project managers, planners, real estate analysts, and construction inspectors who worked on each project and by using a model to allocate costs for all other support units. See Appendix C for a detailed explanation of this methodology. For the six projects reviewed in this report, judicial branch project management costs accounted for 3.55 percent of the total aggregate project costs, or 4.21 percent of the construction costs. See Table 1.3 below and the Judicial Branch Project Management Costs table in the project-specific Chapters 2–7 for more detail.

<sup>2</sup> Since FY 2009–2010, over $1.4 billion of court user fees originally designated by the Legislature to be set aside for court construction has been borrowed ($440 million), transferred to the General Fund ($310 million), or redirected to trial court operations ($675 million).

Costs for Contractors

In this report, the costs for contractors are classified and calculated two ways as listed below.

Project contractors: all service providers and vendors including the construction contractor, with the following exceptions: land purchase price; document review and construction inspection fees charged by the State Fire Marshal, the Division of the State Architect, and the Board of State and Community Corrections; local or regional development fees; and utility connection fees.

Construction contractor: the general contractor responsible for constructing the project.

Project contractor costs accounted for 98.1 percent of the total aggregate project costs. The separate cost of the construction contractor accounted for 84.3 percent of the total aggregate project costs. See the Costs for Contractors table in the project-specific Chapters 2–7 for more detail.

Mandate

Senate Bill 78<sup>4</sup> (SB 78) (Committee on Budget and Fiscal Review) was enacted on March 24, 2011. Section 22 of this bill requires the Judicial Council to “. . . report to the Joint Legislative Budget Committee by January 15, 2013, on the process, transparency, costs, and timeliness of its construction procurement practices. The information in this report shall include, but not be limited to, the following for each court construction project completed between January 1, 2008, and January 1, 2013:

- (1) The dates that each step of the procurement and construction process was completed, including steps involving the seeking or selection of bidders or contractors, completion of the different phases of project design and construction, and approvals by local courts, the Judicial Council, the State Public Works Board, the Governor, and the Legislature.
- (2) The criteria and factors used in evaluating contractors for prequalification as well as those used to evaluate bids, as well as the number of bids received for each procurement.
- (3) Identification of all project costs for each phase of design and construction, including any cost increases and reasons for those increases.
- (4) Identification of the original project timeline for each phase of design and construction, as well as all project delays and the reasons associated in causing the project delays.
- (5) The total project management costs incurred by the Judicial Branch, including for existing staff who worked on each project, distinguished by project activity
- (6) The total costs paid for contractors, distinguished by project activity.” (emphasis added).

The six projects that have been completed by the Judicial Council in this time frame are listed below in Table 1.4. The text of SB 78 section 22 is included in Appendix A, along with definitions of terms in the bill as they are applied in this report.

Organization and Use of This Report

This report contains this executive summary, six project-specific chapters, and three appendices. The project-specific Chapters 2 through 7 provide key findings and the six mandated categories of information for each project. Appendix A contains the text of SB 78 section 22, definitions of terms in the bill as they are used in this report, and an overview of each of the six information categories. Appendix B contains the AOC's construction procurement methods and evaluation criteria for capital courthouse projects. Appendix C contains the methodology for estimating judicial branch project management costs.

Sources of Information

Information in this report was taken from the following documents: the annual state budget act, agendas and meeting minutes for the SPWB and the Judicial Council, written authorization from

DOF to proceed or encumber funds (form DF 14D), correspondence between the AOC's Judicial Branch Capital Program Office (Capital Program Office) and the DOF, Capital-Outlay Budget Change Proposals (COBCPs), monthly progress reports completed by the Capital Program Office project managers, correspondence between the Capital Program Office and the local courts, and interviews with the Capital Program Office project managers.

Key Findings for Each Project

Key findings for each project appear below, for each of the six categories requested in SB 78.

Court of Appeal, Fourth Appellate District, Division Three—Key Findings

1. Completion dates for project approvals and milestones: All necessary approvals were obtained.
2. Procurement methods and evaluation criteria: The CMAR process was used for this project. Two proposals were received.
3. Project costs and increases: The AOC delivered this project for $819,000 less than the final appropriation amount and $9.3 million more than the original appropriation amount. Several cost increases occurred that are listed and explained in Chapter 2, Table 2.3.1.
4. Original timeline and delays: This project was completed 8 weeks after the final approved completion date and 55 weeks after the originally scheduled completion date.
5. Judicial branch project management costs: Judicial branch project management costs accounted for 4.99 percent of total cost or 5.59 percent of construction cost for this project.
6. Contractor costs: Project contractor costs accounted for 98.0 percent of total cost of this project. The separate cost of the construction contractor accounted for 89.2 percent of the total aggregate project costs.

Plumas/Sierra Regional Courthouse—Key Findings

1. Completion dates for project approvals and milestones: All necessary approvals were obtained.
2. Procurement methods and evaluation criteria: The design-bid-build process was used for this project. Three bids were received.
3. Project costs and increases: The AOC delivered this project for $473,669 less than the final appropriation amount and $435,469 less than the original appropriation amount.
4. Original timeline and delays: This project was completed 3 weeks before the final approved completion date and 1 day before the originally scheduled completion date.
5. Judicial branch project management costs: Judicial branch project management costs accounted for 7.54 percent of total cost or 9.60 percent of construction cost for this project.

6. Contractor costs: Project contractor costs accounted for 96.5 percent of total cost of this project. The separate cost of the construction contractor accounted for 78.6 percent of the total aggregate project costs.

B. F. Sisk Courthouse—Key Findings

1. Completion dates for project approvals and milestones: All necessary approvals were obtained.
2. Procurement methods and evaluation criteria: The CMAR process was used for this project. Five proposals were received.
3. Project costs and increases: The AOC delivered this project for $5.7 million less than the final appropriation amount and $3.8 million more than the original appropriation amount. There was a 17.9 percent augmentation of the construction phase due to unusually high escalation of construction costs and to accommodate a change from 8 to 15 courtrooms and more extensive remodeling of the existing building to provide for existing and approved new judgeships identified by the Judicial Council for the Superior Court of Fresno County.
4. Original timeline and delays: This project was completed 25 weeks after the final approved completion date and 78 weeks after the originally scheduled completion date.
5. Judicial branch project management costs: Judicial branch project management costs accounted for 2.31 percent of total cost or 2.61 percent of construction cost for this project.
6. Contractor costs: Project contractor costs accounted for 99.8 percent of total cost of this project. The separate cost of the construction contractor accounted for 88.5 percent of the total aggregate project costs.

Richard E. Arnason Justice Center—Key Findings

1. Completion dates for project approvals and milestones: All necessary approvals were obtained.
2. Procurement methods and evaluation criteria: The CMAR process was used for this project. Four proposals were received.
3. Project costs and increases: The AOC delivered this project for $16.1 million less than the final appropriation amount and $13.9 million less than the original appropriation amount.
4. Original timeline and delays: This project was completed 6 weeks after the final approved completion date and 58 weeks after the originally scheduled completion date.
5. Judicial branch project management costs: Judicial branch project management costs accounted for 2.95 percent of total cost or 3.39 percent of construction cost for this project.
6. Contractor costs: Project contractor costs accounted for 99.6 percent of total cost of this project. The separate cost of the construction contractor accounted for 87.0 percent of the total aggregate project costs.

Mammoth Lakes Courthouse—Key Findings

1. Completion dates for project approvals and milestones: All necessary approvals were obtained.
2. Procurement methods and evaluation criteria: The CMAR process was used for this project. Seven proposals were received.
3. Project costs and increases: The AOC delivered this project for $1.3 million less than the final appropriation amount and $1.1 million less than the original appropriation amount. There was a 30 percent augmentation of the working drawings phase to accommodate site complexities and issues connected with the mountainous location.
4. Original timeline and delays: The actual completion date was 1 week before the final approved completion date and 44 weeks after the originally scheduled completion date.
5. Judicial branch project management costs: Judicial branch project management costs accounted for 2.91 percent of total cost or 3.93 percent of construction cost for this project.
6. Contractor costs: Project contractor costs accounted for 92.0 percent of total cost of this project. The separate cost of the construction contractor accounted for 74.2 percent of the total aggregate project costs.

Lassen Superior Court Hall of Justice—Key Findings

1. Completion dates for project approvals and milestones: All necessary approvals were obtained.
2. Procurement methods and evaluation criteria: The design-bid-build process was used for this project. Seven bids were received.
3. Project costs and increases: The AOC delivered this project for $4.4 million less than the final appropriation amount, which was the same as the original appropriation amount.
4. Original timeline and delays: This project was completed 28 weeks after the final approved completion date, which was the same as the originally scheduled completion date.
5. Judicial branch project management costs: Judicial branch project management costs accounted for 5.29 percent of total cost or 6.98 percent of construction cost for this project.
6. Contractor costs: Project contractor costs accounted for 96.7 percent of total cost of this project. The separate cost of the construction contractor accounted for 75.8 percent of the total aggregate project costs.

Chapter 2

Court of Appeal, Fourth Appellate District, Division Three

Key Findings

This $26.9 million project was delivered for 3.0 percent less than the final appropriation amount and 53.1 percent more than the original appropriation amount. The actual completion date was 8 weeks after the final approved completion date and 55 weeks after the originally scheduled completion date. Cost increases reflect the unusually high escalation in construction costs during the design and construction phases (August 2005–September 2009) after management responsibility was transferred from the Department of General Services (DGS) to the AOC in September 2003. The original appropriations for this project occurred in FY 2000–2001 (acquisition and preliminary plans phases) and in FY 2002–2003 (working drawings and construction phases) and were based on estimates created while the project was still being managed by the DGS. Delays occurred primarily due to a complex site acquisition process through which the AOC and the court pursued an infill site in the existing urban core of Santa Ana over a suburban site near UC Irvine. The AOC acquired the site from the city of Santa Ana for $1, and the city also provided secure parking and street improvements for the project at no cost to the state. In addition to providing an economic opportunity, this site selection supports the state’s planning priority to promote infill development as set forth in California Government Code sections 65041–65041.1. See key findings below for each of the six mandated information categories. More information is provided in the body of this chapter.

1. Completion dates for project approvals and milestones: All necessary approvals were obtained.
2. Procurement methods and evaluation criteria: The CMAR process was used for this project. Two proposals were received.
3. Project costs and increases: The AOC delivered this project for $819,000 less than the final appropriation amount and $9.3 million more than the original appropriation amount. Several cost increases occurred that are listed and explained in Table 2.3.1.
4. Original timeline and delays: This project was completed 8 weeks after the final approved completion date and 55 weeks after the originally scheduled completion date.
5. Judicial branch project management costs: Judicial branch project management costs accounted for 4.99 percent of total cost or 5.59 percent of construction cost for this project.
6. Contractor costs: Project contractor (all service providers and vendors) costs accounted for 98.0 percent of total cost of this project. The separate cost of the construction contractor accounted for 89.2 percent of the total aggregate project costs.

Project Description

The new courthouse replaced two overcrowded and inadequate leased spaces with a modern, secure, adequately sized courthouse for the Fourth Appellate District of the Court of Appeal, Division Three, which handles appeals from Orange County.

The Fourth Appellate District, Division Three in Santa Ana occupied leased space for 20 years. When it outgrew its original court space, it had to lease additional space several miles away. For an appellate court, this split location was very inefficient, and the lease costs amounted to over $1 million per year. The new courthouse remedies these inefficiencies, unifying all court staff in one location and creating a durable, functional, and expandable location for the Court of Appeal.

This courthouse won an Award of Merit in the government/public category of California Construction's Best of 2009. Featured in the semicircular lobby is a unique collection of student-created artworks that commemorate significant cases decided by this particular court as well as one landmark federal Orange County case, Mendez v. Westminster, which was the first in the nation to order an end to segregation in public schools.

Procurement Methods and Evaluation Criteria

The CMAR process was used for this project. Two proposals were received from construction management firms. See Appendix B for a description of how the AOC selects construction management firms.

Project Costs

The AOC delivered this project for $819,000 less than the final appropriation amount and $9.3 million more than the original appropriation amount. This project was originated under DGS management with funding for acquisition and preliminary plans appropriated in the Budget Act of 2000 (FY 2000–2001), almost 10 years before the building was completed. Responsibility for the project was transferred to the AOC in a memorandum of understanding (MOU) dated September 15, 2003. The AOC submitted a COBCP in FY 2005–2006 to reappropriate $75,000 for the acquisition phase and to revert $2.178 million of unused acquisition phase funds. Project costs are identified in Table 2.3 below.

|  | Acquisition   | Preliminary Plans | Working Drawings | Construction | Total        |
|--|---------------|-------------------|------------------|--------------|--------------|
| 1. Original Appropriation   | $2,783,000   | $432,000         | $792,000        | $13,558,000 | $17,565,000 |

| 3. Actual Expenditure   | $501,565     | $626,113         | $1,104,025      | $24,667,397 | $26,899,100 |

| 5. Increase or (Savings) from Final Appropriation(5 = 3 - 2)    | ($103,435)   | ($3,887)         | ($12,975)       | ($699,603)  | ($819,900)  |

Cost increases shown and explained in Table 2.3.1 below reflect the unusually high escalation in construction costs during the design and construction phases (August 2005–September 2009) after management responsibility was transferred from the DGS to the AOC in September 2003. The original appropriations for this project occurred in FY 2000–2001 for acquisition and preliminary plans phases, and in FY 2002–2003 for working drawings and construction phases, and were based on estimates created while the project was under DGS management. By the time site acquisition was completed in August 2005, the project scope had been reduced by the AOC to align with the needs of the court and the terms of the property acquisition agreement: the program gross area was reduced by approximately 3,000 square feet and 110 structured parking spaces were deleted as they were provided by the city of Santa Ana. Even though the scope was reduced, escalation in the market caused the current estimates to exceed the original estimates.

Court of Appeal, 4th Appellate District, Division 3—Cost Increases

| #  | Fiscal Year | Description     | Amount      | Reason for Cost Increase   |
|----|-------------|-----------------|-------------|--|
| 1. | 2005–2006   | Augment P       | $198,000   | Replaces funds expended by DGS for schematic design work connected to a site that was rejected by the court.   |
| 2. | 2006–2007   | Augment W       | $45,000    | Delays in site acquisition and preliminary plans increased cost in the working drawings phase.   |
| 3. | 2006–2007   | Augment C       | $6,783,000 | Construction cost updated to match escalated underlying cost in marketplace after responsibility for this project was transferred from the DGS to the AOC (original estimates predate FY 2000–2001).         |
| 4. | 2007–2008   | Augment C       | $3,086,000 | Unforeseen and excessive escalation in marketwide construction costs.  |
| 5. | 2008–2009   | Augment C       | $2,220,000 | Bidding climate reflected a surplus of institutional construction in Southern California relative to qualified trade contractors and increased material costs so acceptable bids were higher than estimates. |
| 6. | 2008–2009   | Redirect C to W | $280,000   | Transfer of unexpended funds from the construction phase to the working drawings phase due to increased design costs for final project scope.  |

Project Timelines

As shown in Figure 2.1 below, the project was completed 8 weeks after the final approved completion date and 55 weeks after the originally scheduled completion date. Delays in the preliminary plans phase were caused by the architect's difficulty in producing an acceptable design that met the program and site constraints during a period of unusually high construction escalation requiring redesign to bring interim cost estimates in line with the project budget. Delays in the construction phase were caused by the difficulty in obtaining bids that were within project estimates due to an overabundance of institutional work in Southern California and the previously mentioned high escalation in construction costs. Due to state budget issues, the Pooled Money Investment Account (PMIA) ran short of funds and construction had to be shut down in December 2008, which caused an additional eight-week delay and additional costs for the contractor to de-mobilize and re-mobilize the job site.

Judicial Branch Project Management Costs

Judicial branch project management costs are presented in Table 2.4 below. See Appendix C for the methodology used to calculate judicial branch project management costs. See Table 1.3 on page 7 for a summary of judicial branch project management costs for the six subject projects. Judicial branch project management costs accounted for 4.99 percent of total cost or 5.59 percent of construction cost for this project.

Costs for Contractors

In this report, the costs for contractors are classified and calculated two ways as listed below.

Project contractors: all service providers and vendors including the construction contractor, with the following exceptions: land purchase price; document review and construction inspection fees charged by the State Fire Marshal, the Division of the State Architect, and the Board of State and Community Corrections; local or regional development fees; and utility connection fees.

Construction contractor: the general contractor responsible for constructing the project.

Costs for contractors are shown in Table 2.5 below. Project contractor costs accounted for 98.0 percent of total cost of this project. The separate cost of the construction contractor accounted for 89.2 percent of the total aggregate project costs.

Chapter 3

Plumas/Sierra Regional Courthouse

Key Findings

This $6.1 million project—the first trial court project to be fully financed and managed from start to finish by the AOC—was delivered for 7.2 percent less than the final appropriation amount and 6.7 percent less than the original appropriation amount. The actual completion date was 3 weeks before the final approved completion date and 1 day before the originally scheduled completion date. See key findings below for each of the six mandated information categories. More detail is provided in the body of this chapter.

1. Completion dates for project approvals and milestones: All necessary approvals were obtained.
2. Procurement methods and evaluation criteria: The design-bid-build process was used for this project. Three bids were received.
3. Project costs and increases: The AOC delivered this project for $473,669 less than the final appropriation amount and $435,469 less than the original appropriation amount.
4. Original timeline and delays: This project was completed 3 weeks before the final approved completion date and 1 day before the originally scheduled completion date.
5. Judicial branch project management costs: Judicial branch project management costs accounted for 7.54 percent of total cost or 9.60 percent of construction cost for this project.
6. Contractor costs: Project contractor (all service providers and vendors) costs accounted for 96.5 percent of total cost of this project. The separate cost of the construction contractor accounted for 78.6 percent of the total aggregate project costs.

Project Description

The Plumas/Sierra Regional Courthouse provides residents of isolated areas in Plumas and Sierra Counties with better access to court services through a multijurisdictional courthouse, jointly serving the Superior Courts of Plumas and Sierra Counties.

The Superior Courts of Plumas and Sierra Counties shared challenges in serving the remote Eastern Sierra Valley close to each county's border. The public's access to justice in this area was severely compromised due to the area's natural isolation and heavy snow in winter, which makes driving the mountain passes hazardous. The Sierra County portion of the Sierra Valley is the county population center and had access to a service center, but no judicial proceedings.

The new courthouse replaced the deficient one-courtroom Portola Branch court located in the Sierra Center Mall and a leased court service center in Loyalton. The new courthouse provides public access to justice and court services and improves court functionality, security, and physical operations

This project was the first trial court project to be fully financed and managed from start to finish by the AOC. The vacant and unimproved property for the courthouse was donated by a local developer for $1 for the purpose of building a courthouse.

The courthouse was awarded a Best Project of 2010 by McGraw Hill's California Construction magazine and a 2010 Distinguished Project Award from the Western Council of Construction Consumers.

Project Facts

- Location: 600 South Gulling Street, Portola
- Capacity: 1 courtroom in 7,312 square feet with minimal staff support area, and a jury deliberation room. The courthouse does not have a dedicated jury assembly area or any in-custody holding capability.
- Project Cost: $6.1 million for all project costs, $5.5 million for construction. Land was donated to the state.
- Funded by: State Court Facilities Construction Fund (SCFCF), Trial Court Facilities Act of 2002 (SB 1732), which established a revenue source of court user fees for judicial branch courthouse projects.
- Architect: Nacht and Lewis Architects
- Contractor: SW Allen Construction Inc.
- Timeline: Received initial funding in FY 2006–2007. The construction phase began in August 2008 and was completed in October 2009. The building opened in December 2009.

Procurement Methods and Evaluation Criteria

The design-bid-build process was used for this project. The AOC prequalified contractors, received three bids, and awarded the contract to the lowest qualified bidder. See Appendix B for a description of how the AOC prequalifies contractors.

Project Costs

The AOC delivered this project for $473,669 less than the final appropriation amount and $435,469 less than the original appropriation amount. Significant savings in the acquisition phase resulted because the seller, a local developer, donated to the state the vacant and unimproved property for $1. The only cost increase on this project was a DOF-approved FY 2009–2010 augmentation of the construction phase in the amount of $38,200 for completion of a required access road.

Project Timelines

As shown in Figure 3.1 below, the project was completed 3 weeks before the final approved completion date and 1 day before the originally scheduled completion date even though acquisition was delayed by just over a year as the transaction details of the site donation were worked out. Durations of the design and construction phases were significantly reduced as compared to the original appropriation timeline. The construction procurement process was accelerated and accomplished in just under three months from RFQ to executed contract so the foundation work could be completed before the winter snow season.

Judicial Branch Project Management Costs

Judicial branch project management costs are presented in Table 3.4 below. See Appendix C for the methodology used to calculate judicial branch project management costs. See Table 1.3 on page 7 for a summary of judicial branch project management costs for the six subject projects. Judicial branch project management costs accounted for 7.54 percent of total cost or 9.60 percent of construction cost for this project.

Costs for Contractors

In this report, the costs for contractors are classified and calculated two ways as listed below.

Project contractors: all service providers and vendors including the construction contractor, with the following exceptions: land purchase price; document review and construction inspection fees charged by the State Fire Marshal, the Division of the State Architect, and the Board of State and Community Corrections; local or regional development fees; and utility connection fees.

Construction contractor: the general contractor responsible for constructing the project.

Costs for contractors are shown in Table 3.5 below. Project contractor costs accounted for 96.5 percent of total cost of this project. The separate cost of the construction contractor accounted for 78.6 percent of the total aggregate project costs.

Chapter 4

B. F. Sisk Courthouse

Key Findings

This $65.2 million project was completed for 8.1 percent less than the final appropriation amount and 6.2 percent more than the original appropriation amount. The actual completion date was 25 weeks after the final approved completion date and 78 weeks after the originally scheduled completion date. The delay was caused by discrepancies between federal and state legislation that complicated the transfer of the federal courthouse first to the County of Fresno and then to the State. See the Project Timelines section in this chapter for more detail on this topic. In addition, as the project planning moved forward, the AOC collaborated with the DOF and the LAO to develop a plan to renovate the building to maximize its use for up to 16 courtrooms for existing judges and new judgeships identified by the Judicial Council for the Superior Court of Fresno County. The original timeline assumed the property transfer would be complete by July 2006. Because of complications in the transfer process described above, the close of escrow was delayed over a year and the acquisition was finally approved by the SPWB at their September 2007 meeting, which accounts for 61 weeks of the overall project delay. See key findings below for each of the six mandated information categories. More detail is provided in the body of this chapter.

1. Completion dates for project approvals and milestones: All necessary approvals were obtained.
2. Procurement methods and evaluation criteria: The CMAR process was used for this project. Five proposals were received.
3. Project costs and increases: The AOC delivered this project for $5.7 million less than the final appropriation amount and $3.8 million more than the original appropriation amount. There was a 17.9 percent augmentation of the construction phase due to unusually high construction cost escalation and to accommodate a change from 8 to 15 courtrooms and more extensive remodeling of the existing building to provide for existing and approved new judgeships identified by the Judicial Council for the Superior Court of Fresno County.
4. Original timeline and delays: This project was completed 25 weeks after the final approved completion date and 78 weeks after the originally scheduled completion date.
5. Judicial branch project management costs: Judicial branch project management costs accounted for 2.31 percent of total cost or 2.61 percent of construction cost for this project.
6. Contractor costs: Project contractor (all service providers and vendors) costs accounted for 99.8 percent of total cost of this project. The separate cost of the construction contractor accounted for 88.5 percent of the total aggregate project costs.

Project Description

The B. F. Sisk Courthouse provides the Superior Court of Fresno County with appropriate and accessible court space for complex civil and family law proceedings and related support spaces for the public and court staff.

Originally constructed in 1967 as a federal courthouse, the building was vacated by the federal government after the Robert E. Coyle U.S. Courthouse was completed. The five-story building formerly housed eight federal courtrooms, chambers, and justice agencies. The building keeps its former name to honor the visionary public service of Bernice Frederic Sisk (December 14, 1910–October 25, 1995), member of the U.S. House of Representatives from California’s 12th Congressional District, 1955–1963.

The Superior Court of Fresno County serves court users in the downtown area through multiple facilities. Existing facilities poorly served the growing needs of the superior court, and the dispersal of court operations in multiple locations exacerbated the court’s operational challenges. The remodeled Sisk courthouse now houses the superior court’s civil and family law divisions, with 15 judicial officers, that formerly occupied space in the Fresno County Courthouse. The Family Law Facilitator and the Spanish Speaking Self-Help Center was also consolidated with other family court support functions in the Sisk Courthouse, enabling the court to terminate a lease and improve public service.

<sup>5</sup> The preliminary plans phase was actually started on June 18, 2007. See footnote 6 on page 29.

Procurement Methods and Evaluation Criteria

The CMAR process was used for this project. Five proposals were received from construction management firms. See Appendix B for a description of how the AOC selects construction management firms.

Project Costs

The AOC delivered this project for $5.7 million less than the final appropriation amount and $3.8 million more than the original appropriation amount. There are no acquisition phase costs because the federal courthouse was donated to the state. Project costs are identified in Table 4.3 below.

The original budget for this project included renovating the existing building to accommodate 8 courtrooms, which reflected the existing configuration. As the project planning moved forward, the AOC collaborated with the DOF and the LAO to develop a plan to renovate the building and maximize its use for up to 16 courtrooms for existing judges and new judgeships identified by the Judicial Council for the Superior Court of Fresno County. The only cost increase on this project was a FY 2007–2008 augmentation of the construction phase in the amount of $9.571 million required to fund the change from 8 up to the capacity of 16 courtrooms and because construction cost escalation was unusually high at this time. The final design for the project included 15 courtrooms because the authorized new judgeship for which the 16th courtroom was intended was not funded and the court requested that it be built as a hearing room for greater functionality. The DOF approved this increase to provide for existing and new judgeships. Unspent appropriations from the preliminary plans phase ($1.398 million) and the working drawings phase ($1.493 million) were redirected in FY 2008–2009 to the construction phase.

Project Timelines

As shown in Figure 4.1 below, this project was completed 25 weeks after the final approved completion date and 78 weeks after the originally scheduled completion date. The delay was caused by difficulty in completing the transfer of the federal courthouse first to the County of Fresno and then to the state. The federal legislation sponsored by Senator Boxer gave the property to the county, not the state, as subsequently mandated in Senate Bill 1732. The legal and real estate staffs at the federal, state, and county levels had to figure out how to accomplish the transfer to the state. In addition, after the transfer problem was solved, the AOC had to wait over a year longer than originally anticipated for the federal General Services Administration (GSA) to vacate the property before closing escrow. The original timeline called for the property transfer to be complete by July 2006. For the reasons stated above, the acquisition was not approved by the SPWB until their September 2007 meeting, which accounts for 61 weeks of the delay.

<sup>6</sup> The funding for the preliminary plans phase ($3,470,000) was transferred from the State Court Facilities Construction Fund to the Court Facilities Architectural Revolving Fund in November 2006.

Judicial Branch Project Management Costs

Judicial branch project management costs are presented in Table 4.4 below. See Appendix C for the methodology used to calculate judicial branch project management costs. See Table 1.3 on page 7 for a summary of Judicial Branch project management costs for the six subject projects. Project contractors: all service providers and vendors including the construction contractor, with the following exceptions: land purchase price; document review and construction inspection fees charged by the State Fire Marshal, the Division of the State Architect, and the Board of State and Community Corrections; local or regional development fees; and utility connection fees.

Construction contractor: the general contractor responsible for constructing the project.

Costs for contractors are shown in Table 4.5 below. Project contractor costs accounted for 99.8 percent of total cost of this project. The separate cost of the construction contractor accounted for 88.5 percent of the total aggregate project costs.

Chapter 5

Richard E. Arnason Justice Center

Key Findings

This $48.6 million project was delivered for 24.9 percent less than the final appropriation amount and 22.3 percent less than the original appropriation amount. The actual completion date was 6 weeks after the final approved completion date and 58 weeks after the originally scheduled completion date. The delays were caused by a scope change from four to seven courtrooms—based on a Judicial Council–adopted update to new judgeship requirements identifying additional new judgeships needed by the Superior Court of Contra Costa County. This scope change was included in the annual budget act for FY 2006–2007. See key findings below for each of the six mandated information categories. More detail is provided in the body of this chapter.

1. Completion dates for project approvals and milestones: All necessary approvals were obtained.
2. Procurement methods and evaluation criteria: The CMAR process was used for this project. Four proposals were received.
3. Project costs and increases: The AOC delivered this project for $16.1 million less than the final appropriation amount and $13.9 million less than the original appropriation amount.
4. Original timeline and delays: This project was completed 6 weeks after the final approved completion date and 58 weeks after the originally scheduled completion date.
5. Judicial branch project management costs: Judicial branch project management costs accounted for 2.95 percent of total cost or 3.39 percent of construction cost for this project.
6. Contractor costs: Project contractor (all service providers and vendors) costs accounted for 99.6 percent of total cost of this project. The separate cost of the construction contractor accounted for 87.0 percent of the total aggregate project costs.

Project Description

The Richard E. Arnason Justice Center replaced the outdated and undersized four-courtroom Pittsburg-Delta Courthouse, originally constructed in 1952 and demolished after the new courthouse was completed.

The eastern region of Contra Costa County includes the growing communities of Pittsburg, Antioch, Brentwood, and Oakley. Previously served by the outdated and undersized Pittsburg-Delta Courthouse, this region needed a larger, modern facility to meet growing demand for court services as well as a location for three new judicial officers. The previous building was so overcrowded that approximately 6,000 cases had to be reassigned to other courts throughout the county. The Arnason Justice Center has greatly improved access to justice for East County residents.

This courthouse has won numerous awards, and was the first judicial branch courthouse to receive LEED™ Silver certification from the U.S. Green Building Council. The building was named in honor of Richard E. Arnason, distinguished jurist and pioneering member of the bar in eastern Contra Costa County.

Procurement Methods and Evaluation Criteria

The CMAR process was used for this project. Four proposals were received from construction management firms. See Appendix B for a description of how the AOC selects construction management firms.

Project Costs

The AOC delivered this project for $16.1 million less than the final appropriation amount and $13.9 million less than the original appropriation amount. Project costs are identified in Table 5.3 below.

The cost increases in the acquisition ($672,000) and preliminary plans ($1.56 million) phases were included in the Budget Act of 2006 (FY 2006–2007) to fund a scope change from four to seven courtrooms.

Project Timelines

As shown in Figure 5.1 below, this project was completed 6 weeks after the final approved completion date and 58 weeks after the originally scheduled completion date. The delay was caused by the change in building size from four to seven courtrooms.

Judicial Branch Project Management Costs

Judicial branch project management costs are presented in Table 5.4 below. See Appendix C for the methodology used to calculate judicial branch project management costs. See Table 1.3 on page 7 for a summary of judicial branch project management costs for the six subject projects. Judicial branch project management costs accounted for 2.95 percent of total cost or 3.39 percent of construction cost for this project.

Costs for Contractors

In this report, the costs for contractors are classified and calculated two ways as listed below.

Project contractors: all service providers and vendors including the construction contractor, with the following exceptions: land purchase price; document review and construction inspection fees charged by the State Fire Marshal, the Division of the State Architect, and the Board of State and Community Corrections; local or regional development fees; and utility connection fees.

Construction contractor: the general contractor responsible for constructing the project.

Costs for contractors are shown in Table 5.5 below. Project contractor costs accounted for 99.6 percent of total cost of this project. The separate cost of the construction contractor accounted for 87.0 percent of the total aggregate project costs.

Chapter 6

Mammoth Lakes Courthouse

Key Findings

This $20.2 million project was delivered for 6.1 percent less than the final appropriation amount and 5.1 percent less than the original appropriation amount. The actual completion date was 1 week before the final approved completion date and 44 weeks after the originally scheduled completion date. The delay was caused by the challenging site acquisition—a land exchange with the U.S. Forest Service—which delayed the start of the preliminary plans phase. See the Project Timelines section in this chapter for more detail on this topic. The original timeline assumed site acquisition would be complete by August 2006. The acquisition was actually approved by the SPWB at their February 2008 meeting, which was a delay of 78 weeks. The actual project duration was compressed by 30 weeks compared to the originally scheduled project duration primarily by accelerating the design phases—19 weeks in preliminary plans and 7 weeks in working drawings. See key findings below for each of the six mandated information categories. More detail is provided in the body of this chapter.

1. Completion dates for project approvals and milestones: All necessary approvals were obtained.
2. Procurement methods and evaluation criteria: The CMAR process was used for this project. Seven proposals were received.
3. Project costs and increases: The AOC delivered this project for $1.3 million less than the final appropriation amount and $1.1 million less than the original appropriation amount. There was a 30 percent augmentation of the working drawings phase to accommodate site complexities and issues connected with the mountainous location.
4. Original timeline and delays: The actual completion date was 1 week before the final approved completion date and 44 weeks after the originally scheduled completion date.
5. Judicial branch project management costs: Judicial branch project management costs accounted for 2.91 percent of total cost or 3.93 percent of construction cost for this project.
6. Contractor costs: Project contractor (all service providers and vendors) costs accounted for 92.0 percent of total cost of this project. The separate cost of the construction contractor accounted for 74.2 percent of the total aggregate project costs.

Project Description

The Mammoth Lakes Courthouse replaced inadequate, overcrowded leased space and provides the Superior Court of Mono County with a modern, secure, adequately sized courthouse for all court services.

The site for the new courthouse was part of a land exchange between the U.S. Forest Service and the Town of Mammoth Lakes and the County of Mono. The town and county then conveyed, at a discount, a portion of the land to the state for the new courthouse. The courthouse is the first building in a location envisioned as the future government center for Mammoth Lakes.

The historic Mono County courthouse in Bridgeport, built in 1881, is the second oldest, still functioning courthouse in California. Because of its adjacency to the county jail, this historic building is used almost exclusively for arraignments. The court has operated a branch courthouse in Mammoth Lakes, 55 miles south, for many years. Findings in the 2003 facilities master plan showed that 90 percent of the court's civil and criminal workload was attributable to the Mammoth Lakes area, where the population can increase from approximately 7,000 to 40,000 during peak ski season. The previous South County Branch Courthouse was a leased space in a shopping mall that was undersized, in poor condition, and in need of replacement. The new Mammoth Lakes Courthouse provides improved security, expanded space for current and new court services, and improved access to justice for the majority of Mono County residents and visitors.

Procurement Methods and Evaluation Criteria

The CMAR process was used for this project. Seven proposals were received from construction management firms. See Appendix B for a description of how the AOC selects construction management firms.

Project Costs

The AOC delivered this project for $1.3 million less than the final appropriation amount and $1.1 million less than the original appropriation amount.

The only cost increase on this project, an augmentation of the working drawings phase in the amount of $219,000 that was required to align the working drawings with the final construction scope, was included in the Budget Act of 2008 (FY 2008–2009). Some of the early planning for this project did not anticipate the full impact of the site development issues.

Project Timelines

As shown in Figure 6.1 below, this project was completed 1 week before the final approved completion date and 44 weeks after the originally scheduled completion date. The challenging site acquisition was accomplished under the provisions of section 206 of The Federal Land Policy Management Act of 1976 (43 U.S.C. § 1716), through a land exchange with the U.S. Forest Service (USFS) that originally involved the Town of Mammoth Lakes, the County of Mono, and the local hospital district. Ultimately, the hospital district dropped out of the transaction and the town and the county acquired land, which was exchanged for the courthouse site with the USFS and acquired at below market value by the AOC. The original timeline called for the site acquisition to be complete by August 2006. The acquisition was approved by the SPWB at their February 2008 meeting, which accounts for 78 weeks of delay. The actual project duration was compressed by 30 weeks compared to the originally scheduled project duration primarily by accelerating the design phases—19 weeks in preliminary plans and 7 weeks in working drawings.

Judicial Branch Project Management Costs

Judicial branch project management costs are presented in Table 6.4 below. See Appendix C for the methodology used to calculate judicial branch project management costs. See Table 1.3 on page 7 for a summary of judicial branch project management costs for the six subject projects. Judicial branch project management costs accounted for 2.91 percent of total cost or 3.93 percent of construction cost for this project.

Costs for Contractors

In this report, the costs for contractors are classified and calculated two ways as listed below.

Project contractors: all service providers and vendors including the construction contractor, with the following exceptions: land purchase price; document review and construction inspection fees charged by the State Fire Marshal, the Division of the State Architect, and the Board of State and Community Corrections; local or regional development fees; and utility connection fees.

Construction contractor: the general contractor responsible for constructing the project.

Costs for contractors are shown in Table 6.5 below. Project contractor costs accounted for 92.0 percent of total cost of this project. The separate cost of the construction contractor accounted for 74.2 percent of the total aggregate project costs.

Chapter 7

Lassen Superior Court Hall of Justice

Key Findings

This $34.5 million project was delivered for 11.4 percent less than the final appropriation amount, which was the same as the original appropriation amount. The actual completion date was 28 weeks after the final approved completion date, which was the same as the originally scheduled completion date. The delay was caused primarily by a transition from analog to digital technology by the manufacturer of the video and recording portions of the security system that required cost changes and redesign at a critical point in the construction schedule. See the Project Timelines section in this chapter for more detail on this topic. See key findings below for each of the six mandated information categories. More detail is provided in the body of this chapter.

1. Completion dates for project approvals and milestones: All necessary approvals were obtained.
2. Procurement methods and evaluation criteria: The design-bid-build process was used for this project. Seven bids were received.
3. Project costs and increases: The AOC delivered this project for $4.4 million less than the final appropriation amount, which was the same as the original appropriation amount.
4. Original timeline and delays: This project was completed 28 weeks after the final approved completion date, which was the same as the originally scheduled completion date.
5. Judicial branch project management costs: Judicial branch project management costs accounted for 5.29 percent of total cost or 6.98 percent of construction cost for this project.
6. Contractor costs: Project contractor (all service providers and vendors) costs accounted for 96.7 percent of total cost of this project. The separate cost of the construction contractor accounted for 75.8 percent of the total aggregate project costs.

Project Description

The Lassen Superior Court Hall of Justice replaces the court's inadequate space in three buildings and provides the Superior Court of Lassen County with appropriate and accessible court space for all calendar types and related support services in the county seat.

Built in 1915, the Lassen County original one-courtroom courthouse, with its natural stone façade, is listed on the National Register of Historic Places. In 1991, the court expanded into the Court Annex, in a building originally intended for county offices and the public library. The court also leased space in a nearby building for the Access to Justice Self-Help Center.

The Historic Courthouse and Annex were functionally deficient, overcrowded, and among the worst in the state in terms of security and physical condition, hindering the public's access to court services. The new courthouse replaces the three existing court locations and consolidates all court services into one new courthouse. The 42,300-square-foot, two-story building includes space for court clerks, holding areas, and building support space.

Procurement Methods and Evaluation Criteria

The design-bid-build process was used for this project. The AOC prequalified contractors, received seven bids, and awarded the contract to the lowest qualified bidder. See Appendix B for a description of how the AOC prequalifies contractors.

Project Costs

The AOC delivered this project for $4.4 million less than the final appropriation amount which was the same as the original appropriation amount.

There were no cost increases on this project.

Project Timelines

As shown in Figure 7.1 below, the project was completed 28 weeks after the final approved completion date, which was the same as the originally scheduled completion date. A primary cause for the delay was a transition from analog to digital technology by the manufacturer of the video and recording portions of the security system during the design/bid/construction period that created the need for review and approval of cost changes, redesign, new shop drawings, and manufacturer-required training for the installing subcontractor.

Judicial Branch Project Management Costs

Judicial branch project management costs are presented in Table 7.4 below. See Appendix C for the methodology used to calculate judicial branch project management costs. See Table 1.3 on page 7 for a summary of judicial branch project management costs for the six subject projects. Judicial branch project management costs accounted for 5.29 percent of total cost or 6.98 percent of construction cost for this project.

Costs for Contractors

In this report, the costs for contractors are classified and calculated two ways as listed below.

Project Contractors: all service providers and vendors including the construction contractor, with the following exceptions: land purchase price; document review and construction inspection fees charged by the State Fire Marshal, the Division of the State Architect, and the Board of State and Community Corrections; local or regional development fees; and utility connection fees.

Construction contractor: the general contractor responsible for constructing the project.

Costs for contractors are shown in Table 7.5 below. Project contractor costs accounted for 96.7 percent of total cost of this project. The separate cost of the construction contractor accounted for 75.8 percent of the total aggregate project costs.

Text of SB 78 Section 22, Definition of Terms, and Information Categories Requested in SB 78

SB 78 Section 22

The text of section 22 of the bill is shown in courier font below. Terms defined in the next section of this appendix are bolded.

SEC. 22. (a) The Judicial Council shall report to the Joint Legislative Budget Committee by January 15, 2013, on the process, transparency, costs, and timeliness of its construction procurement practices. The information in this report shall include, but not be limited to, the following for each court construction project completed between January 1, 2008, and January 1, 2013:

- (1) The dates that each step of the procurement and construction process was completed, including steps involving the seeking or selection of bidders or contractors, completion of the different phases of project design and construction, and approvals by local courts, the Judicial Council, the State Public Works Board, the Governor, and the Legislature.
- (2) The criteria and factors used in evaluating contractors for prequalification as well as those used to evaluate bids, as well as the number of bids received for each procurement.
- (3) Identification of all project costs for each phase of design and construction, including any cost increases and reasons for those increases.
- (4) Identification of the original project timeline for each phase of design and construction, as well as all project delays and the reasons associated in causing the project delays.
- (5) The total project management costs incurred by the Judicial Branch, including for existing staff who worked on each project, distinguished by project activity.
- (6) The total costs paid for contractors, distinguished by project activity.

(b) Within 75 days of receiving the report required under subdivision (a), the Legislative Analyst's Office shall conduct an analysis of the findings and, based on information which shall be provided by the Department of General Services, compare the costs and timeliness of methods of delivery used by the judiciary to projects of comparable size, scope, and geographic location procured under the Public Contract Code provisions applicable to state agencies. At the request of the Legislative Analyst's Office, the Department of General Services shall provide the comparable information as that required of the Judicial Council in subdivision (a) for those projects managed by the Department of General Services.

Definition of Terms

SB 78 includes several terms, shown in bold in the bill text above, that could be defined in several ways. Below is a description of how terms are defined for the purpose of presenting the information and findings requested in SB 78 and as they are used in this report.

Actual Completion Date

While this term does not occur in the bill, it is defined here to establish the precise end date of the actual project timeline. The completion of the construction phase in the Actual Timeline shown in the Timeline Comparison Figure in each of the project-specific chapters is the date when occupancy was granted by the State Fire Marshal (SFM) in the form of a Temporary Certificate of Occupancy followed by a Certificate of Occupancy.

Approval

In connection with approval dates described in section 22(a)(1), “approval” by the Department of Finance (DOF) shall constitute approval by the Governor, and approval by the Joint Legislative Budget Committee or inclusion in the annual budget act shall constitute approval by the Legislature.

Contractors

In connection with section 22(a)(6), “contractors” shall be defined as all service providers and vendors involved with the project. In the Costs for Contractors table in each of the project-specific chapters, the separate cost of the construction contractor is also provided.

Cost Increase/Project Costs/Each Phase of Design and Construction

In connection with section 22(a)(3), a “cost increase” shall be defined as costs exceeding the amount of the original appropriation request for each phase, at the time the subject phase was actually requested. “Project costs” presented in this report include site acquisition (A) phase costs as well as costs for “each phase of design and construction,” which are preliminary plans (P), working drawings (W), and construction (C).

Original Project Timeline and Delay

In connection with section 22(a)(4), the “original project timeline” is the timeline presented in the capital outlay budget change proposal (COBCP) that is the basis of the budget act appropriation and “delay” is measured against the original project timeline and is calculated by comparing the original completion date for each phase of design and construction (P, W, and C) with the actual completion dates. The final approved timeline is also represented, along with the original and actual timelines, in the Timeline Comparison figure in each of the project-specific Chapters 2 through 7. The final approved timeline is the timeline presented in the final project action or funding request approved by the DOF or the SPWB. The overall timelines represent the time period between the start of preliminary plans and the completion of construction. As set forth in the State Administrative Manual (SAM), Section 6853 – Award Construction Contract, and Section 6854 – Construction, the construction (C) phase begins with the approval of working drawings and proceed to bid, and thus includes bid and award activities.

Project Activity

In connection with section 22(a)(5) and (6), “project activity” shall mean the typical phases of a state capital project, which are site acquisition (A), preliminary plans (P), working drawings (W), and construction (C).

Information Categories Requested in SB 78

SB 78 requests six categories of information about the relevant projects as summarized below and reported in more detail in Chapters 2 through 7.

Section 22(a)(1) – Completion Dates for Project Approvals and Milestones

The following milestones in the approval, construction procurement, and phases of project delivery are documented.

Approvals for Capital Project Phases

1. Site Selection
2. Site Acquisition
3. Preliminary Plans
4. Working Drawings/Proceed to Bid
5. Construction Contract Award
6. Scope Changes, Augmentations, Reversions, and Redirections

Construction Procurement Contractor Selection Process

1. Request for qualifications and proposal (RFQ/P) for construction managers at risk (CMAR) or prequalified general contractors (GC)
2. Due date for qualifications/proposals
3. Shortlist for interviews
4. Interviews
5. Prequalified list and invitation to bid (DBB process omits steps 3 and 4)
6. Bids received from prequalified GCs
7. Notice of intent to award (CMAR process omits steps 5 and 6)
8. Contract executed

Phases of Project Delivery

1. Site Acquisition (A)
2. Preliminary Plans (P)
3. Working Drawings (W)
4. Construction (C)

Section 22(a)(2) – Procurement Methods and Evaluation Criteria

The following two construction procurement methods were used by OCCM to deliver the capital projects covered by this report.

1. Construction manager at risk with guaranteed maximum price
2. Design-bid-build with a select list of prequalified general contractors

Each method is described in Appendix B. The method used and the number of bids received are presented in each project-specific chapter.

Section 22(a)(3) – Project Costs/Increases

Project costs are taken directly from job cost accounting reports generated by OCCM Business and Finance Unit. The Appropriations and Project Costs table in each project-specific chapter shows the original appropriation amount, the final appropriation amount, and the actual expenditure for each as well as increases or savings from appropriation amounts. The original appropriation amount refers to the original amount appropriated in the annual budget act for each phase. The final appropriation amount refers to the sum of the original appropriation amount and all subsequent changes to that amount as contained in the annual budget act or as approved by the DOF or the SPWB. Changes to the original appropriation amount can be augmentations, reversions, or redirections (from one phase to another). Some changes to the original appropriation amount, within the guidelines set forth in the SAM, may be approved independently by the DOF or the SPWB and do not appear in the annual budget act. Cost increases are listed and reasons for cost increases are described.

Section 22(a)(4) – Original Timeline/Delays

The original project timeline, the final approved timeline, and the actual timeline are presented graphically including start and finish dates for each phase. The completion of the construction phase in the Actual Timeline shown in the Timeline Comparison figure in each of the project-specific chapters is the date when occupancy was granted by the State Fire Marshal (SFM) in the form of a Temporary Certificate of Occupancy followed by a Certificate of Occupancy.

Section 22(a)(5) – Judicial Branch Project Management Costs

Internal judicial branch project management costs are estimated through a combination of direct estimation for project managers, planners, real estate analysts, and construction inspectors, and a cost model for other AOC staff who contributed to the management of the capital projects. See Appendix C for the calculation methodology.

Section 22(a)(6) – Contractor Costs

Costs for contractors are taken directly from job cost accounting reports generated by the OCCM Business and Finance Unit.

Procurement Methods and Evaluation Criteria

Judicial Branch Procurement Methods and Evaluation Criteria

When procuring design and construction services, the AOC operates under two policy documents as described below.

Court Facilities Contracting Policies and Procedures

This document was adopted by the Judicial Council on December 7, 2007, and fulfills the mandate of the Trial Court Facilities Act of 2002 (Gov. Code, §§ 70301–70404) and the California Government Code concerning the adoption of independent contracting policies and procedures for acquisition and development of court facilities by the Judicial Council in consultation with the state Department of Finance. Its opening comprehensive policy statement is included below.

To provide Californians the best value initially and over the long-term operational life of court facilities the Administrative Office of the Courts (AOC) will follow competitive practices as set forth in these policies and procedures when contracting with qualified firms and individuals for products and services to be used in the planning, acquisition, design, construction, operation, and maintenance of trial and appellate court facilities.

These policies and procedures emphasize qualifications-based selection (QBS) processes and affirm that “contracts must provide for contemporary delivery methods and best practices related to facilities planning, acquisition, design, construction, operations, and maintenance of court facilities.”

AOC / OCCM Internal Procedure 3.40–Delivery Method and Contractor Selection

This document was implemented on July 28, 2009, with the intent “that a project delivery method be selected which results in the best value for the court, the Judicial Branch and all Californians.” As stated in its opening paragraph below, this procedure sets up a framework that allows flexibility in delivery methods and selection process and allows considerable discretion on the part of OCCM management.

Selecting a project delivery method is a strategic decision made by OCCM management. Once decided, a project manager determines the selection criteria and proceeds with the solicitation and selection process. The Court Facilities Contracting Policies and Procedures grants flexibility to OCCM in both delivery methods and the selection process.

Delivery Methods Utilized for SB 78 Report Subject Projects

Of the delivery methods made available in OCCM's Internal Procedure 3.40, the AOC employed two processes, as described below, for construction procurement on the courthouse capital projects covered by this report: construction manager at risk (CMAR) and design-bid-build (DBB) with a list of prequalified general contractors.

The CMAR process is employed because it has the following advantages in delivering these complex, design-intensive projects: early focus on design issues, construction advice and cost review during the design process, careful oversight of costs and schedule, early cost commitments, and opportunities to shorten the overall project schedule.

The design-bid-build process is used when the project conditions are present that make it expedient and advisable. In projects that are smaller in size (1- to 5-courtroom projects) with simpler design demands, less complexity, rural regional location, increased general contractor pool, or increased familiarity with the DBB process by the project team, the prequalified design-bid-build project delivery method may be elected as an alternative to the CMAR delivery method. The project manager must work together with OCCM management in the analysis of the project type, size, location, and competitive market conditions to determine if this project delivery type best serves the project and the pursuit of the best overall value. It should be noted that every project is unique and that this is not a delivery method that should be used exclusively on all small projects; however, this is a long-standing traditional method of project delivery that can be successful and cost effective if properly managed by experienced professionals. This process was used for the Plumas/Sierra Regional Courthouse and the Lassen Superior Court Hall of Justice.

Construction Manager at Risk

Construction, by nature, is complicated to manage due to fluctuating material pricing, workloads and workforces, changing building regulations and variable inspection processes, all of which have significant budgetary implications. Construction management is a broad term covering a variety of project delivery scenarios in which a construction manager is added to the building team to oversee scheduling, cost control, constructability, project management, building technology, bidding or negotiating construction contracts, and construction.

When the construction manager serves as constructor, the role of general contractor is added to the CM's standard management tasks. The construction manager assumes all the liability and responsibility of the general contractor, which is why this method is also known as construction manager at risk. This method combines the qualities of several other approaches. It offers the direct contractual relationship between owner and architect of traditional methods, the advisory benefits of CM as advisor, and the early cost commitment characteristic of design-build. The CMAR is hired early in the design process to deliver an early cost commitment and to manage issues of schedule, cost, construction, and building technology. The owner benefits from the simplicity of one contract with a single entity for the entire construction process. The contractual relationships are illustrated in Figure B.1 below.

CMAR Relationship Diagram

AOC’s CMAR Procurement Process

The AOC issues a request for qualifications and proposals (RFQ/P) via its website. Written qualifications and proposals are submitted to the AOC for review. A shortlist is established after review of the responsive written submissions. The short-listed firms are then interviewed by a team comprising AOC staff, court staff, and architectural firm staff. Only AOC staff and court staff contribute scores; the architectural firm staff serves in an advisory capacity. The criteria used to evaluate the written qualifications and the interview presentations are shown in Figure B.2 below.

Judicial Branch Construction Procurement Evaluation Criteria

| FinancialStrength, SafetyRecord, andClaimsAvoidance | Firm-WideQualificationsand Experience | ProjectPersonnelQualificationsand Experience | Project Plan(IncludingLocal TradeInvolvement) | Total |
|--|--|--|---|--------------|
| 20%  | 30%  | 30%  | 20%   | 100%         |

The proposal portion of the written submission contains amounts for preconstruction services, construction services, and a mark-up percentage to be applied to the value of all construction subcontracts. The final selection is made by combining the qualitative evaluation of the written submissions and interview presentations with the quantitative proposal to arrive at a cost per unit of quality. This portion of the process closely follows paragraph IV(D)(3)(d) of the Court Facilities Contracting Policies and Procedures, which states: “The AOC may review the compensation or product cost portion of a proposal, if one exists, as the sole criterion (as in the traditional low-bid model) or as a weighted criterion, or it may request that the compensation portion of the proposal be placed in a separate envelope for consideration independently or at a later date.” The CMAR contract is offered to the firm with the lowest cost per unit of quality. The successful CMAR firm works with the architect and the AOC project manager to create bid packages best suited to the local trade market and administers a bid process involving multiple bids for each bid package (trade or combination of trades). The trade contractors responsible for delivering each bid package are represented by the subcontractors and suppliers in Figure B.1 above. Competitive pricing for the required construction work is achieved through this bid process.

Design-Bid-Build with a List of Prequalified General Contractors

The traditional and most common form of project delivery is design-bid-build. It is a familiar way of working for all parties in the building industry. This project delivery method is characterized by its three phases (captured in the name design-bid-build) by its two independent contracts with the owner, and by the linear phasing of the work. There are three prime players: owner, architect, and contractor as illustrated in Figure B.3 below.

Traditional Design-Bid-Build Relationship Diagram

For decades, this traditional method was automatically assumed to be the best approach to project delivery. More recently, cost and scheduling pressures have pushed the owner’s interests in other directions. In the DBB process, the phases are organized end-to-end. For example, the construction documents must be complete before the general contractors can submit bids. While many aspects of design and construction might be undertaken in a parallel fashion in the CMAR process, restrictions imposed by the DOF on procuring a critical scope of work before the guaranteed maximum price is agreed upon diminish this potential time advantage. The potential for disputes and change orders is exacerbated by the independence of architect and contractor. The AOC mitigates the potentially adversarial nature of this delivery option by prequalifying general contractors and by adding a CM as advisor to the team.

AOC’s Design-Bid-Build Procurement Process

A process similar to that described above for the CMAR process is used to establish a shortlist of prequalified general contractors. The firms on this list are invited to submit sealed bids on the project. The construction contract is offered to the firm with the lowest responsive bid. The CM advisor is retained by the AOC early in the design process to help with cost estimating and constructability.

Appendix C

Judicial Branch Project Management Costs

Introduction

The purpose of this appendix is to explain how the judicial branch project management costs for its Capital Construction Program (Capital Program) were allocated to the six subject projects. These costs are displayed in Table 1.3 in the Executive Summary and in the Judicial Branch Project Management Costs table in each of the project-specific, Chapters 2–7.

The Capital Program is one of the responsibilities of the Administrative Office of the Courts (AOC), the staff agency of the Judicial Council. The AOC has one office dedicated to the Capital Program, the Judicial Branch Capital Program Office (Capital Program Office), some offices that support the capital program although this is not their primary mission (see note 2 under Table C.1), and some offices that have no connection to the Capital Program.

The fall 2012 reorganization of the AOC includes dividing the former Office of Court Construction and Management (OCCM) into the Judicial Branch Capital Program Office and the Office of Real Estate and Facilities Management. To accurately present the full project management costs of the six projects reviewed in this report, the analysis includes staff costs as attributed to OCCM.

Judicial branch project management costs comprise the sum of the four components displayed in Table C.1 below. The direct and indirect costs for AOC employees include salaries and wages, all employee benefits, and standard allocation of operating expenses and equipment.

Table C.1
Cost Components of Judicial Branch Project Management Costs

| Cost Type | Judicial Branch Program | Allocation Basis | Description  |
|------------------|--------------------------------|-------------------------|---|
| 1. Direct        | OCCM                           | Actual Hours Worked     | AOC OCCM employees: project managers, associate project managers, planners, real estate analysts, and construction inspectors |
| 2. Direct        | OCCM                           | Actual Cost             | Outside firms providing project management services in support of the AOC OCCM project manager                                |
| 3. Indirect      | OCCM                           | Pro Rata Share          | AOC OCCM units <sup>1</sup> that provide support functions to the capital projects  |
| 4. Indirect      | AOC (Non-OCCM)                 | Pro Rata Share          | Non-OCCM AOC units <sup>2</sup> that provide support functions for the capital projects                                       |

Notes for Table C.1

<sup>1</sup> AOC OCCM units that provide support functions to the capital projects:

1. Executive Management Team
2. Risk Management
3. Business and Finance
4. Environmental Analysis and Compliance
5. Appellate and AOC Facilities

<sup>2</sup> Non-OCCM AOC units that provide support functions for the capital projects:

1. Security and Emergency Response
2. Legal Services – Real Estate Unit
3. Governmental Affairs – Facilities
4. Education – Court Facilities
5. Fiscal – Accounting
6. Fiscal – Business Services
7. Fiscal – Budget
8. Information and Technology Services – Technical Support – OCCM
9. Information and Technology Services – Desktop Support – OCCM
10. Human Resources Services – Labor and Employee Relations
11. Human Resources Services – Recruitment, Classification, Strategy, and Policy Development

For the six subject projects, direct project management costs accounted for 74 percent, and indirect project management costs accounted for 26 percent, of the total judicial branch project management costs, as displayed in Table C.2 below.

Table C.2*Judicial Branch Project Management Costs—Proportion Direct / Indirect

Definitions

Direct Costs

Costs that can easily be identified to a program. For this report direct costs are developed from actual hours worked by project managers, associate project managers, planners, real estate analysts, and construction inspectors and actual the cost of outside firms providing project management services in support of the AOC OCCM project managers.

Indirect Costs

Costs that by their nature cannot be readily associated with a specific organization unit or program. Like general administrative expenses, indirect costs are distributed, through the use of a formula, to the organizational units or programs that benefit from their incurrence. See notes for Table C.1 for functional units that contributed indirect costs to the Capital Program.

Calculation of Judicial Branch Project Management Costs

Judicial branch project management costs include direct and indirect components. The direct costs, such as those for project managers, associate project managers, planners, real estate analysts, construction inspectors, and outside firms providing project management services, are added to the indirect costs to yield the total project management costs. Below is a description of how the indirect costs are distributed to the projects.

Allocation Methodology for Indirect Costs

The indirect component of judicial branch project management costs were calculated by the process described below.

1. Obtain from accounting reports the cost of non-OCCM AOC units that provide support functions for the Capital Program.
2. Obtain from accounting reports the total cost of all OCCM units.
3. Calculate the cost of each OCCM unit as a percentage of OCCM's total cost as displayed in Table C.3. For example, as shown in Table C.3, in FY 2010–2011, the OCCM Executive Management Team accounted for 4.56 percent of OCCM's total cost. This percentage is used in the next step to calculate the pro rata share of the non–OCCM AOC support units' costs to be distributed to each OCCM unit.
4. To obtain the total indirect cost of each OCCM unit by fiscal year, distribute the pro rata share of the total cost of the non–OCCM AOC support units to each OCCM unit based on its percentage of OCCM's total cost (calculated in step 3 above). For example, as shown in Table C.3, in FY 2010–2011, the OCCM Executive Management Team accounted for 4.56 percent of OCCM's total cost, so 4.56 percent of the non–OCCM AOC support unit costs for FY 2010–2011 were distributed to the OCCM Executive Management Team. This calculation was repeated for each of the 10 OCCM units.
5. Add the total indirect costs (calculated in step 4 above) of the five OCCM units that support the Capital Program (see note 1 under Table C.1) to obtain the total indirect costs to be distributed to the project phases.
6. Calculate the direct project management cost of each project phase as a percentage of OCCM's total cost, as displayed in Table C.4. For example, in FY 2010–2011 the cost of the Construction (C) phase of the B. F. Sisk Courthouse accounted for 0.14 percent of OCCM's total cost.
7. To obtain the pro rata share of the total indirect costs for each project phase, multiply the total indirect cost calculated in step 5 by the percentage calculated in step 6. These indirect costs are displayed in Table C.2 above.

Table C.3

Proportional Cost of OCCM Functional Units by Fiscal Year

| OCCM Units  | FY 2003-04 | FY 2004-05 | FY 2005-06 | FY 2006-07 | FY 2007-08 | FY 2008-09 | FY 2009-10 | FY 2010-11 |

Report title: Governor George Deukmejian Courthouse: Evaluation of Cost Effectiveness

Statutory citation: Senate Bill 75 (Stats. 2013, ch. 31) Code section: Multiple<sup>1</sup>

Date of report: June 30, 2014

The Judicial Council/Administrative Office of the Courts has submitted a report to the Legislature in accordance with Sen. Bill 75 (Stats. 2013, ch. 31).

The following summary of the report is provided under the requirements of Government Code section 9795.

Senate Bill 75, enacted June 27, 2013, requires the Judicial Council to assess and compare the Governor George Deukmejian Courthouse in Long Beach, a performance-based infrastructure project, with three other court construction projects delivered using traditional procurement methods to address whether the PBI approach for the project was cost-effective compared to the traditional approach for the other projects. Although this report provides information on three other projects, the most valuable comparison is to the San Bernardino Justice Center, which is of a similar quality and scale, with 35 courtrooms. The two other completed projects examined—the Richard E. Arnason Justice Center in Pittsburg and the South County Justice Center in Porterville—are the next largest of the new courthouse projects completed by the judicial branch and have only 7 and 9 courtrooms, respectively.

<sup>1</sup> An act to amend section 116.232 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to amend sections 12419.10, 68086, 68502.5, 68511.7, 70628, and 77203 of, and to add section 68502.6 to, the Government Code; to amend sections 1203.2, 1229, 1230, 1231, 1232, 1233, 1233.1, 1233.15, 1233.2, 1233.3, 1233.4, 1233.6, 1233.61, and 3000.08 of, and to repeal section 1233.8 of, the Penal Code; to amend, repeal, and add section 19210 of the Public Contract Code; and to amend section 903.45 of the Welfare and Institutions Code, relating to courts, and making an appropriation therefor, to take effect immediately, bill related to the budget.

The evaluation of cost-effectiveness is based on a comparison of the following key features of the Governor George Deukmejian Courthouse project and the San Bernardino Justice Center comparator project, which was delivered using the construction manager at risk method:

1. Project schedules
2. Construction costs
3. Design and construction processes
4. Judicial branch project management costs
5. Risk allocation and transfer
6. Operating costs

The report is composed of the main body in 54 pages, including a 4-page executive summary, followed by four appendixes in 36 pages, for a total of 90 pages, and covers approximately $773 million of total project cost.

The full report can be accessed here: www.courts.ca.gov/7466.htm. A printed copy of the report may be obtained by calling 415-865-4900.

Executive Summary

Purpose of Report

Senate Bill 75 (Committee on Budget and Fiscal Review; Stats. 2013, ch. 31) requires the Judicial Council to assess and compare the Governor George Deukmejian Courthouse in Long Beach, a performance-based infrastructure (PBI) project, with three other court construction projects delivered using traditional procurement methods to address whether the PBI approach for the project was cost-effective compared to the traditional approach on other projects. Although this report provides information on three other projects, the most valuable comparison is to the San Bernardino Justice Center, which is of a similar quality and scale, with 35 courtrooms. The two other completed projects examined—the Richard E. Arnason Justice Center, in Pittsburg, and the South County Justice Center, in Porterville—are the next largest of the new courthouse projects completed by the judicial branch and have only 7 and 9 courtrooms, respectively.

Key Findings Summary

Schedule

The Governor George Deukmejian Courthouse was designed and constructed nearly two years faster than the San Bernardino Justice Center for two main reasons. First, the design-build (DB) delivery method used as part of the PBI process allowed for design and construction phases to overlap. In addition, construction activities were fast-tracked.<sup>1</sup> The Administrative Office of the Courts' (AOC's) traditional construction manager at risk<sup>2</sup> (CMR) delivery method, which was used by the AOC on the three comparator projects, requires sequential approvals of preliminary design, working drawings, bidding, and construction phases, taking more time to complete than fast-track DB. Second, PBI uses readily available private financing, which is not subject to the timing of state bond sales, which drive the construction start date for state-financed construction projects and can produce delays. The San Bernardino Justice Center construction start was delayed by nine months because of a cancelled bond sale.

Construction Cost

The AOC delivered all four new courthouses under budget, saving the state over $71 million. The hard construction costs of the Governor George Deukmejian Courthouse and the San

---

<sup>1</sup> When the design and construction phases overlap rather than follow in sequence, the process is called fast-tracking. The overall project calendar is reduced by awarding construction contracts before design documentation is complete. The potential time savings and thus cost savings are offset by risks, which must be carefully considered and allocated by the parties.

Bernardino Justice Center are almost identical, with the Governor George Deukmejian Courthouse costing 0.15 percent more per square foot. Three factors add value to the Governor George Deukmejian Courthouse: (1) mechanical and electrical equipment configurations were designed to alleviate failure and avoid service payment deductions; (2) infrastructure was designed for future conversion of leased office space to six courtrooms; (3) and significantly more holding cells are included to accommodate future expansion in the number of courtrooms.

Project Delivery Method

The two methods used to develop the four projects studied, PBI for the Governor George Deukmejian Courthouse and CMR for the other three projects, valued and supported collaboration throughout the design, construction, and operations transition processes, resulting in projects with predictable budget management and minimal change orders related to coordination of documents. Each method relied on competitive procurement with multiple proposers.

Application of the *California Trial Court Facilities Standards

The Judicial Council's California Trial Court Facilities Standards (the Standards) were applied to each project and resulted in new courthouses of predictable quality, function, and cost irrespective of delivery method. The four subject projects align favorably with the target ranges in the Standards for square feet per courtroom, floor area efficiency factors, and volume-to-area ratio.

Judicial Branch Project Management Costs

Project management for courthouse capital projects is provided by the AOC's Judicial Branch Capital Program Office, primarily by AOC employees and sometimes with assistance from outside firms. For the four projects reviewed in this report, judicial branch project management costs accounted for 1.69 percent of the total aggregate project costs or 1.89 percent of the hard construction costs.<sup>3</sup>

Implementation of the Project Agreement

The project company for the Governor George Deukmejian Courthouse, Long Beach Judicial Partners (LBJP), carried out the project agreement effectively and met all of its requirements concerning schedule, design and construction processes, change orders, and quality control.

Value for Money Assumptions

The assumptions about site, timing, and capital costs of the Governor George Deukmejian Courthouse, as defined in the project's final Value for Money (VfM) analysis, dated January 24,

<sup>3</sup> Throughout this report, project management costs are calculated for the development phase of the projects, through occupancy only.

2011, were valid.<sup>4</sup> The assumptions about project risks were also valid, with no additional costs passed to the AOC in excess of the original allocation. The successful refinancing in December 2013 indicates that the financing assumptions were also valid. It is too early in the service period to make definitive assessments of operating costs and revenues.

Operation and Maintenance

The project agreement for the Governor George Deukmejian Courthouse requires the project company to operate and maintain the new courthouse for 35 years and then return it to state ownership in a specified condition<sup>5</sup> and requires that the project payments to the project company be reduced if these terms are not met. The project company, not the AOC, has assumed the risk of operating and maintaining this facility to a high level for the 35-year duration of the project agreement. Because the San Bernardino Courthouse opened in May 2014 and the Governor George Deukmejian Courthouse has been operating for less than one year, a comparison of actual operating and maintenance costs cannot be provided in this report.

Organization and Use of This Report

This report contains this executive summary, a chapter that provides more detail on the cost-effectiveness of the Governor George Deukmejian Courthouse compared to the San Bernardino Justice Center, and four project-specific chapters. The project-specific chapters, 2 through 5, provide key findings and the four categories of information specified in SB 75 for each project. Appendix A contains the text of SB 75 section 27 and definitions of terms used in this report. Appendix B describes the methodology used to normalize construction costs. Appendix C provides the detailed risk table for the Governor George Deukmejian Courthouse. Appendix D describes the methodology used to calculate judicial branch project management costs.

Sources of Information

Information in this report came from the following documents: the annual state Budget Act, agendas and meeting minutes of the State Public Works Board (SPWB) and the Judicial Council, written authorization from the California Department of Finance (DOF) to proceed or encumber funds, correspondence between the AOC's Judicial Branch Capital Program Office (JBCPO) and the DOF, Capital-Outlay Budget Change Proposals (COBCPs), monthly progress reports

<sup>4</sup> This analysis is a comparison of the risk-adjusted whole-life-cycle cost of the project procured as a PBI compared with the risk-adjusted whole life-cycle cost of the project as if it was were procured as a design-bid-build (DBB), which is the public sector comparator (PSC). The comparison is done on a net present value (NPV) basis to facilitate a consistent comparison of costs because the costs to the state occur at different points in time under each procurement option. The NPV of each of the procurement methods is compared to determine which would provide the best value to the State.

completed by the JBCPO project managers, correspondence between the JBCPO and the local courts, interviews with the JBCPO project managers, interviews with staff of the AOC Office of Real Estate and Facilities Management (OREFM), and interviews with key members of the project company.

Chapter 1

Comparative Assessment of Cost-Effectiveness: Governor George Deukmejian Courthouse and San Bernardino Justice Center

Introduction

The most useful comparison for the purpose of this report is to compare the Governor George Deukmejian Courthouse to the San Bernardino Justice Center, which are of a similar quality and size and were built in similar construction markets at roughly the same time. This report presents both quantitative and qualitative factors to determine cost-effectiveness. Table 1.1 presents a summary of key aspects of cost-effectiveness for the Governor George Deukmejian Courthouse and the San Bernardino Justice Center.

<sup>8</sup> Hard construction costs spent to date, adjusted for unique features, time, location, and market conditions.

<sup>9</sup> For the San Bernardino Justice Center, the AOC retained all realized major risks and retains future major risks.

Cost-Effectiveness Comparison

The evaluation of cost effectiveness presented below is based on a comparison of the following key features of the Governor George Deukmejian Courthouse project and the San Bernardino Justice Center comparator project, which was delivered using the CMR method:

1. Project schedules
2. Construction costs
3. Design and construction processes
4. Judicial branch project management costs
5. Risk allocation and transfer
6. Operating costs

Project Schedules

The Governor George Deukmejian Courthouse was designed and constructed 23 months faster than the San Bernardino Justice Center for two main reasons: first, the DB delivery used within the PBI process allowed for design, approvals, and construction phases to overlap or be fast-tracked. The AOC's traditional CMR delivery method, which was used by the AOC on the San Bernardino Justice Center, requires sequential approvals of Preliminary Plans, Working Drawings, bidding, and Construction phases, taking more time to complete than fast-track DB. Second, PBI used private financing, which was readily available and not subject to the timing of state bond sales that drive the construction start date for state-financed construction projects and can result in delays. The San Bernardino Justice Center construction start was delayed by nine months as a result of a cancelled bond sale. One of the benefits of PBI is that private financing is not subject to twice-per-year bond issuances, which currently affect the schedules of all courthouse capital projects that rely on bond sales to finance construction. With PBI, risk of this type of schedule delay is entirely eliminated.

This analysis considers the starting point for the Governor George Deukmejian Courthouse project as the release date of the request for proposals (RFP), when the design process for the three short-listed proposers and thus for the successful proposer actually began. By comparison, the starting point for the San Bernardino Justice Center is considered to be the start of the Preliminary Plans phase, as shown in the actual timeline (see figure 1.1, Project Timeline Comparisons).<sup>10</sup>

<sup>10</sup> The timelines begin with the start of design because SB 75, section 27(f)(2) requests the timeline information "...for each phase of design and construction ...". Time required for site acquisition and procurement of design services is not included in the project timelines.

Construction Costs

To provide a meaningful comparison, the AOC adjusted construction costs for both the Governor George Deukmejian Courthouse and the San Bernardino Justice Center to account for differences in unique project features, time, location, and market conditions. See Appendix B for the detailed financial comparison methodology used in this report. Final fully adjusted hard construction costs are shown in table 1.2 and figure 1.2 below.

Summary of Hard Construction Costs With All Adjustment Factors Applied

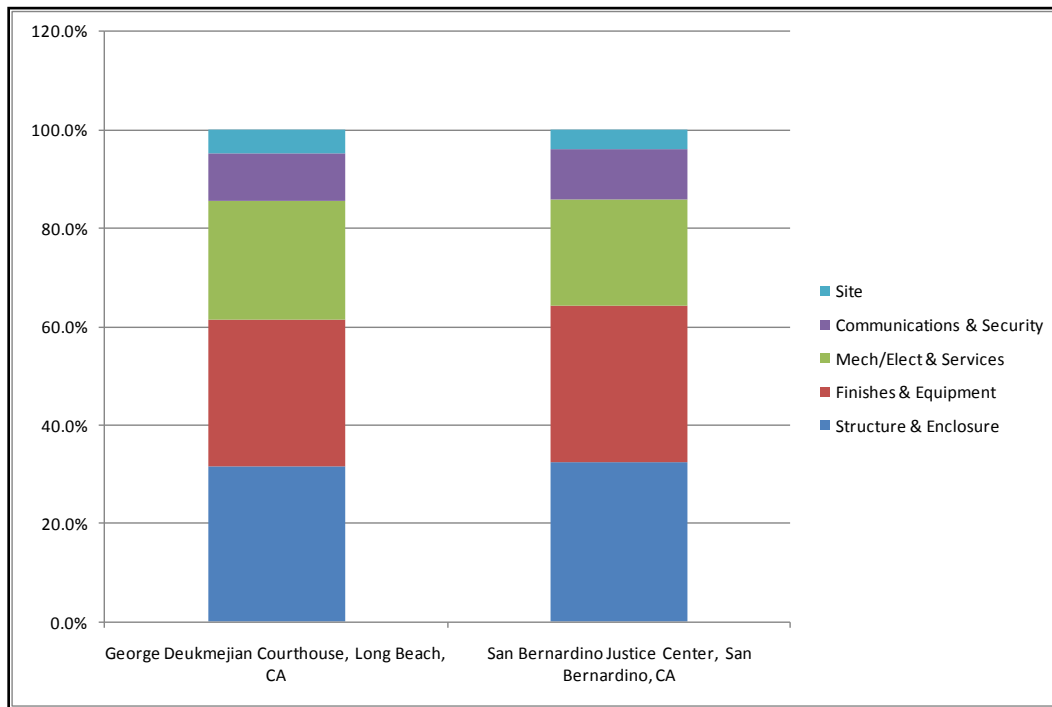

Even though the per-square-foot hard construction costs for the Governor George Deukmejian Courthouse and the San Bernardino Justice Center are nearly identical, three factors add value to the Governor George Deukmejian Courthouse: (1) mechanical and electrical equipment configurations were designed to alleviate failure and avoid service payment deductions; (2) infrastructure was designed for future conversion of leased office space to six courtrooms; and (3) significantly more holding cells are included to accommodate future expansion in the number of courtrooms.

The portion of costs allocated to five major building elements is very consistent for both projects. See figure 1.3 below.

Allocation of Adjusted Subcontractor Costs by Major Building Elements

Design and Construction Processes

The PBI approach maximizes partnership and collaboration in the design, construction, and operations process. A focus on predictable operations and maintenance over the building lifespan is an inherent quality of the PBI approach and is required because the project company not only must base its design on the needs of the public agency, but is also accountable to meet standards of maintenance, repair, and replacement over an extended period of time. This approach requires maximum collaboration and accountability and demonstrates cost-effectiveness by meeting long-term operations and management obligations over the 35-year term of the project agreement.

The CMR approach to design and construction is considered more effective than less collaborative forms of procurement. The partnership created by preconstruction involvement of the CMR in the design process has been identified as a significant driver for cost-effectiveness because of increased predictability and greater accountability. This process also allows for significant operator input (the AOC representing the operator in terms of daily building management and long-term obligations), which is likely to result in reduced long-term operations and maintenance costs.

To ensure competitive construction procurement, a sufficient number of interested and qualified firms must submit proposals on the work. A reasonable industry standard for the minimum number of qualified proposals to produce an acceptably competitive procurement is three for the PBI process and four for the CMR process. The lower industry standard for the PBI process is because PBI proposals are proportionately more expensive for the proposers to produce and for the owner to evaluate. The AOC obtained three qualified proposals for the Governor George Deukmejian Courthouse (PBI), with the proposers selected from a field of 12 firms that submitted qualifications, and four qualified proposals for the San Bernardino Justice Center (CMR), with the proposers selected from a field of 6 firms that submitted qualifications.

The design process for all new courthouses recently completed or now in design and construction in California—regardless of delivery method—is informed by design standards, including sustainability requirements, and complies with applicable codes and ordinances. In April 2006, the Judicial Council adopted the California Trial Court Facilities Standards, which are applied to all projects managed by the judicial branch. These Standards promote buildings that have long-term value and attempt to maximize value to the State of California by balancing the aesthetic, functional, and security requirements of courthouse design with the budget realities of initial construction cost and the long-term life-cycle costs of owning and operating institutional buildings. Application of the Standards provides uniform and predictable quality, functionality, and cost.

The Standards require that all new courthouse projects be designed for sustainability and, at a minimum, to the standards of a Leadership in Energy and Environmental Design (LEED™) 2.1 “Certified” rating. Depending on the project’s program needs and construction cost budget, projects may be required to meet the standards for a LEED™ 2.2 “Silver” rating. The sustainability levels achieved for the projects are shown in table 1.3 below.

Achieved Sustainability Levels

| Project Name                          | Sustainability Level Achieved | Certified by U.S. Green Building Council? |

| Governor George Deukmejian Courthouse | LEED™ Silver                  | Submitted                                 |
| San Bernardino Justice Center         | LEED™ Silver                  | Submitted                                 |

LEED™ = Leadership in Energy and Environmental Design, a program of the U.S. Green Building Council.

The Standards establish targets for area efficiency factors, relative building volume ratios, and building area per courtroom. Figure 1.4 below illustrates the relationships between net square feet, component gross square feet, and building gross square feet and the resulting target efficiency factors.

Courthouse Efficiency Factors

The relative building volume ratio is the result of dividing the building volume (cubic feet) by the building gross square feet, with a target range of 14–16. The target range for building area per courtroom is 9,000 to 14,000 building gross square feet. Table 1.4, below, shows that the subject projects are within the ranges stated in the Standards, with the following exceptions.

The reasons for the building volume ratio of 19 for the Governor George Deukmejian Courthouse are the floor-to-floor heights of 20 feet in the basement and 17.5 feet in the rest of the building, in addition to the multistory public lobby. The height in the basement is required for access by the large vehicles used by the sheriff for in-custody transport. The floor-to-floor heights in the rest of the building were set by the DB team to facilitate the construction operations and future maintenance.

The net and component gross square feet efficiency factors are slightly below the target range in the San Bernardino Justice Center. The variance is in the range of 3 to 5 percent.

Judicial Branch Project Management Costs

As shown in table 1.5 below, the project management costs for the Governor George Deukmejian Courthouse and the San Bernardino Justice Center accounted for 1.48 percent of the total aggregate project costs, or 1.63 percent of the hard construction costs. The project management costs for each project are very similar but a slightly higher percentage for the Governor George Deukmejian Courthouse because of the resources required to create the project agreement. See the Judicial Branch Project Management Costs table in the project-specific chapters, 2–5, for more detail and Appendix D for a detailed explanation of the methodology used to estimate these costs.

Risk Allocation and Transfer

In the case of the Governor George Deukmejian Courthouse Project, the risks allocated to the project company include those for design, construction, and operations. By contrast, the CMR held risks related only to construction of the San Bernardino Justice Center.

The project company managed its risks exclusively, and the AOC had neither the ability nor the contractual right to track the actual impacts or how they were managed. The project agreement provided adequate commercial protection for both parties, and both parties were responsible to manage their individual internal risks. The project company was wholly responsible for the cost of any such risk that they retained, and no additional costs were passed to the AOC in excess of those that were originally allocated.

In this PBI, a significantly greater proportion of risk was transferred to the project company than was transferred and held by the CMR in the San Bernardino Justice Center. In either procurement approach, bidders quantify their retained risks and build the cost into their bid price. Transferring more risk to the contractor therefore requires the AOC to indirectly fund more risks, whether or not they occur. When risks are transferred, the AOC benefits because the contractor is responsible for any cost in excess of the cost included in the bid. This method also removes the uncertainty of the risks' impacts, which can be substantial and potentially in excess of available AOC funds. In the case of the Governor George Deukmejian Courthouse, cost-effectiveness was achieved not just through greater risk transfer than under the CMR delivery model, but because of the nature and magnitude of the risks transferred. Certain significant risks—such as schedule, design review, unforeseen conditions in the renovation of the existing parking structure, parking revenue, and landlord revenue risk for the noncourt space—were in fact realized and absorbed by the project company. Going forward, the project company is responsible for all ongoing maintenance and life-cycle risk. In the PBI delivery method, both the ongoing operating parameters and the condition of the facility at hand-back are defined in the contract, and therefore adequate funding must be provided for operation and maintenance. Transferring these risks is beneficial to the AOC over the long term. See table 1.6 for a summary of project-risk responsibilities and Appendix C for a complete analysis matrix of project risks associated with the Governor George Deukmejian Courthouse.

Operating Costs

The project company, not the AOC, has assumed the risk of operating and maintaining the Governor George Deukmejian Courthouse to a specified level for the 35-year duration of the project agreement.<sup>16</sup> This is, in fact, a key feature of the PBI delivery method. Because the San Bernardino Courthouse recently opened and the Governor George Deukmejian Courthouse has been operating for less than one year, a comparison of actual operating and maintenance costs cannot be provided in this report. Future operating-cost obligations are identifiable as part of the Governor George Deukmejian Courthouse service payments; however, the San Bernardino Justice Center opened in May 2014 and has not been in operation long enough to provide any actual cost data.

The AOC retains full cost responsibility under CMR delivery for building life-cycle and ongoing maintenance of the San Bernardino Justice Center. Although the AOC budget requests for routine operation and maintenance are based on comparable facility condition index standards as required for the Governor George Deukmejian Courthouse, such requests are subject to appropriations risk. Furthermore, life-cycle replacements are not included in these annual budget requests but are addressed reactively. By comparison, the Governor George Deukmejian Courthouse is subject to performance and availability requirements, enforced over time through use of the contractually delineated deduction mechanism in which service payments are reduced due to nonperformance. This commercial requirement eliminates appropriations risk and guarantees a level of quality higher than that which can be reasonably expected under the CMR delivery method. The impact of this funding disparity can be seen in Figure 1.5 below, which illustrates how reactive and fluctuating life-cycle investment results in a higher rate of facility condition index degradation over time than does investment under the PBI approach.

Governor George Deukmejian Courthouse, Long Beach

Project Background

The old Long Beach Courthouse was functionally and physically deficient, ranking among the worst in the State in terms of security and overcrowding. The building was outdated, overcrowded, not able to meet the State's current needs—and therefore incapable of meeting the region's growing demand for court services.<sup>17</sup>

The Governor George Deukmejian Courthouse project was procured under a public-private-partnership delivery method, also referred to as performance-based infrastructure, or PBI, whereby the new courthouse is governed by a long-term agreement between the project company and the AOC. Under this project agreement, the project company is responsible for designing, building, financing, commissioning, operating, and maintaining the new courthouse.

Project Description

The Governor George Deukmejian Courthouse is located at 275 Magnolia Avenue, Long Beach, a six-acre site one block northwest of the previous courthouse. The project site was acquired under a property exchange agreement with the City of Long Beach Redevelopment Agency.<sup>18</sup>

The five-story building houses 31 courtrooms, as well as court administration offices, Los Angeles County judicial agency lease space, and retail leasable space. The building includes below-grade detention facilities and separate secure parking for judges. A five-level, open atrium, enclosed on the two exterior perimeters by a cable-supported glass curtain wall system, serves as the single entry point for all building occupants and provides access to a secured exterior courtyard. Clad in a deeply articulated curtain wall and elements of stone, the project spans two city blocks in downtown Long Beach. In addition to constructing the new building, the project team also renovated and expanded an existing 399,000-square-foot parking structure built in 1974. The courthouse was designed to qualify for the LEED™ Silver certification by the U.S. Green Building Council.

<sup>17</sup> Although an option to renovate and expand the existing facility was considered, it was determined to be infeasible due to the age, physical condition, and functional issues present in the existing courthouse. To address the major functional issues, a complete gutting and renovation would have been required. Furthermore, the temporary relocation of the entire court staff and judicial officers during construction would have been prohibitively expensive.

<sup>18</sup> The agreement executed in September 17, 2009, exchanged existing court building property of approximately three acres for the approximately six-acre building site plus a payment of $7 million from the City. The existing parking structure, owned by the State, was not a part of the property exchange agreement.

Design of the new facility is consistent with the Standards, with a scale that is compatible to, and consistent with, nearby office buildings. To manage pedestrian traffic and security, the only public entrance is located near the corner of Magnolia and West Broadway, near the pedestrian entrance to the parking garage.

Security features include:

1. A secured below-ground sally port, enabling sheriff's deputies to drive into and park as many as three prisoner buses in a secured area to transfer in-custody detainees into and out of the courthouse;
2. Electronic security systems for door control, video surveillance, and personal attack alarms throughout the building and site;
3. Separate hallways, exit stairs, and elevators for the public, staff, and in-custody detainees; and
4. Between each pair of courtrooms, seven holding cells that allow separation of different classifications of in-custody detainees for the benefit of improved efficiency and safety of sheriff's deputies.

Description of the Project Company

The project agreement was signed between the AOC and the project company, Long Beach Judicial Partners, a single-entity company wholly owned by Meridiam Infrastructure, established specifically as a special-purpose vehicle (SPV) to design, build, finance, operate, and maintain the project. The project company is a consortium of companies made up of Meridiam, Edgemoor Infrastructure & Real Estate, AECOM, Clark Construction, and Johnson Controls Inc. (JCI). For a full description of the project company, please refer to the following webpage:

www.courts.ca.gov/documents/fact\_sheet\_lbjp.pdf.

Description of Design-Build Implementation of the Project Agreement

The primary obligations of the project company relating to its full responsibility for design and construction are defined in the project agreement.<sup>19</sup> The responsibilities for design and construction were passed down by the project company to Clark using the design-build agreement. As the design-builder, Clark was responsible for all design and construction obligations as defined in the design-build agreement. These provisions of the project agreement were transferred directly to Clark, as is common in such contracts. Therefore, as the design-builder,<sup>20</sup> Clark became responsible for all project company obligations as defined by the project agreement. Hence, references in this report to project agreement and design-build agreement obligations and the project company and design-builder are intended to be the same. AECOM undertook the primary responsibility for design, as Clark's subcontractor. Various other specialty subcontractors were also employed by the design-builder.

In accordance with the requirements of the project agreement, the performance of the project company was overseen by the independent building expert (IBE), TMAD Taylor Gaines (TTG). The IBE monitored and reported on the performance of the project company from the date of notice to proceed in December 2010 to occupancy in September 2013 and final completion of the construction in December 2013.

A project labor agreement (PLA) was used for the Governor George Deukmejian Courthouse. The PLA is dated December 9, 2011, and was executed by Clark, the Los Angeles/Orange Counties Building and Construction Trades Council, and all applicable subcontractors and local unions. Article I, paragraph A of this PLA states: "The purpose of this Agreement is to insure that all work on this Project shall proceed continuously and without interruption."

<sup>20</sup> Although the project company includes Clark as one of its entities, it is useful to refer to Clark separately as the design-builder in evaluating the design-build process within the overall PBI process.

Below is a summary of the IBE's performance evaluation of the design-builder—and therefore, effectively, of the project company—in its execution of the project agreement's requirements.

Summary of Design-Builder Performance

The performance of the design-builder was measured against criteria agreed to by the AOC, the superior court, the project company, and the IBE. The following general topics were monitored:

1. Summary of construction schedule
2. Design review process
3. Design meetings and reports
4. Design quality management
5. Quality of materials and work
6. Project change orders
7. Correction of deficiencies and unsatisfactory work
8. Testing results

Summary of Construction Schedule

The project schedule that was agreed to and is memorialized in the financial closing documents included the construction duration of 28 months, from April 2011 to August 2013. This period also included the design phase and approvals for code-related items by the authorities having jurisdiction. Design, bidding, and construction phases overlapped, and even though construction commenced in April 2011, the final design activities were completed in March 2012. The design-builder applied a proactive approach using a carefully developed system of phased design approvals and bid package releases that allowed early start on construction elements. Major equipment and materials with long lead times were procured early to keep the project on schedule. This is a key aspect of any DB project, resulting in a compressed design and construction schedule.

Both the design and the construction teams were adequately resourced with skilled personnel to achieve the required results of the contract and meet the project schedule. The number of construction workers increased from an initial 200 to more than 400 as work progressed to ensure that all key scheduled milestones were met.

Design Review Process

An efficient and systematic process was put in place by the design-builder to comply with the design review procedure specified in the project agreement. A two-tiered review process was established, with the initial-tier tasks to be performed by the DB team and the second-tier tasks by the IBE, the operator JCI, other project company members, the AOC, the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, and other stakeholders. A tracking system was used for all comments, and interaction between parties happened daily. Regular design development sessions were held to complete outstanding design issues. The process complied with the intention of the project agreement.

Design Meetings and Reports

The design-builder held weekly design meetings and workshops with representatives of the key stakeholders to discuss and resolve design options and issues. The design-builder's monthly progress report included a section on design status, activities completed, action items, and deviations from standards. This report was useful in recording and managing the design information and progress.

Quality Management

The project agreement required the project company to appoint a certified quality management consultant to develop a design-build quality management plan. The need for compliance with the plan and quality procedures had a positive effect on the design effort as well as the subsequent construction and associated construction inspections.

Quality of Materials and Work

A systematic quality management approach, developed by the project team, ensured that quality of work and materials were monitored and met high standards. Any identified problems were quickly remedied. One example involved poor quality of work on the stripping and marking of parking stalls, and the subcontractor was immediately removed and replaced. Another example involved the parking structure, where a quality-control check to confirm drainage was overlooked. Testing demonstrated that the performance for the drainage did not meet requirements, resulting in additional work and cost for the design-builder. Because this check happened early in the construction process, the lessons learned were applied by the design-builder into the quality checks for the rest of construction, and when there was any doubt, such as in underground waterproofing, the design-builder undertook rework at its own cost. Another example of quality control was the construction of one complete courtroom before fabrication or installation on site, not for design purposes but to check the quality of work and to resolve conflicting details. The five-month process undertaken by the design-builder allowed the actual in-building construction to proceed with few quality problems.

Project Change Orders

Due to the long-term nature of and the allocation of risks in the project agreement, the change order process was somewhat complex, because many change orders also needed to address downstream operations. Nevertheless, the parties managed the change order process with transparency.

The contract financial model included an allowance of $10 million for owner- (AOC-) directed design change orders. At the end of the construction period, $4,296,000 had been spent, primarily on fulfilling changes to the 2007–2008 performance requirements necessitated by changes in superior court operations, additional sheriff's requirements, and new technology standards.

Correction of Deficiencies and Unsatisfactory Work

For a project of this size and complexity, some deficiencies and noncompliant work are inevitable. However, the design-builder's quality management system, the oversight and monitoring by the IBE, and inspections and observations by other team members ensured that everyone worked closely to identify, rectify, and close-out deficiencies and unsatisfactory work quality as quickly and practically as possible.

Testing Results

Testing procedures were strictly enforced. Testing showed the work to be of very high quality, with results being well within generally accepted construction industry tolerances. The consistently excellent test results indicate high-quality construction management and a collaborative team of subcontractors.

Article 7 Obligations

In addition to the project company/design-builder's performance on the general criteria described above, the performance of the design-builder was also evaluated with reference to the specific requirements and obligations specified in article 7 of the project agreement. Performances relating to the following sections of article 7 were evaluated:

1. Section 7.1: Design-builder performance;
2. Section 7.2: Access to and suitability of the sites;
3. Section 7.6: Governmental approvals;
4. Section 7.13: Construction monitoring, observations, testing, and uncovering of work;
5. Section 7.15: Correction of work;
6. Section 7.16: Furniture, fixtures, and equipment (FF&E);
7. Section 7.17: Warranties;
8. Section 7.19: Commissioning; and
9. Section 7.21: LEED™ NC silver certification.

Design-builder performance. The project agreement obligated the design-builder to be responsible for practically all aspects of design and construction on behalf of the project company. Overall, the design-builder complied with the requirements of the project agreement. A significant importance was placed on the design review process. Changes to design and deviations were recorded and tracked. The design process was highly interactive and involved all team members.

Access to and suitability of the sites. Many of the access and suitability issues for the project sites—for the courthouse and the parking garage—were resolved in advance by the AOC, for example during site selection, completion of the CEQA (California Environmental Quality Act) process, and completion of other studies before the execution of the project agreement. Under the project agreement, the design-builder was deemed to have visited the site and to be familiar with all site conditions. The design-builder managed this risk by taking initiative to ensure timely access and use of the courthouse site by proactively relocating utilities and having archaeologists on site during excavation and grading. Storage of materials on site was a challenge that the design-builder managed well.

Governmental approvals. The design-builder was responsible for obtaining all governmental-agency approvals. This activity was included in the form of milestones on the critical path of the project schedule. The design-builder developed and maintained positive relationships with the regulating agencies, which helped with timely approvals. Interaction by phone, weekly meetings, and site visits were used to identify and resolve issues, facilitating timely securing of permits. This proactive approach by the design-builder ensured that progress was maintained to meet the schedule.

Construction monitoring, observations, testing, and uncovering of work. The inspection regime on the project was rigorous and systematic. All parties (architect of record, IBE, inspector of record, engineer of record) cooperated and worked toward solutions to achieve compliance with the requirements of the project agreement. Any necessary corrective actions were implemented by the design-builder, mostly at no additional cost to the contract.

Correction of work. Overall, the correction of work complied with the project agreement as it related to design and construction. No notices to the contrary were issued. The request for information (RFI) process worked well, allowing the designer to respond promptly to requests from the construction team.

Furniture, Fixtures, and Equipment. During the early stages, problems were encountered with respect to coordinating the requirements for furniture and electronic equipment systems in the project agreement. However, with time the design-builder initiated improvement in the management of the FF&E process and made significant progress in selection of FF&E. One example was to use competitive bidding for procurement. Another was to enforce the use of mockups in the selection process. Despite initial difficulties, there was no impact on the schedule and only a minor impact on cost.

Warranties. A main priority of the design-builder was to ensure that all warranties for materials, equipment, and installation work were in place, documented, and filed. This process was managed efficiently by the quality-management team. Warranty requirements in the project agreement were reviewed by the team, which provided an additional confirmation level to identify and verify requirements for warranties.

Commissioning and LEED™ New Construction Silver certification. The project agreement and LEED™ certification requirements required the project company to develop and use a commissioning plan. The project company appointed CT Energetics as the commissioning agent. CT Energetics prepared the commissioning plan using the performance standards and LEED™ requirements for Silver Certification as the basis for the plan. The plan was reviewed by all stakeholders, which also included the operator, Johnson Controls, as well as the design-builder. Timely project registration was submitted to the U.S. Green Building Council, which is still reviewing the project documentation included in the final application. The project agreement includes a provision for $2 million in liquidated damages if the registration is not obtained.

Existing Parking Structure and Court Expansion Space

Two elements that were unique to the project related to the existing parking structure and the requirement for future courtroom expansion within the new court building. The design-builder complied with its obligations regarding these elements efficiently and professionally. Problems encountered during renovation of the parking structure resulted in additional costs to the design-builder, which it absorbed at no cost to the AOC. The project company and the design-builder met with the AOC and stakeholders to discuss the provisions for up to six additional courtrooms and to ensure that the initial construction met the related infrastructure requirements.<sup>21</sup> A state-financed project typically does not provide for future expansion space at the scale provided in this project.

Article 8 Obligations

The scheduled occupancy date of August 31, 2013, was stipulated in the project agreement as when the AOC service payment was to begin. Occupancy readiness<sup>22</sup> was achieved earlier, on August 20, 2013—11 days ahead of schedule—facilitated by management of punch list and closeout activities. For example, of the original 16,000 punch list items, 82 percent were closed out by occupancy readiness, and the rest were closed out in mid-December 2013. The project company was obligated by its lenders to begin payment of the capital costs on the occupancy date regardless of the readiness for occupancy by the AOC (superior court) on that date.

Construction-to-Occupancy Transition

The design-builder has provided a full-time employee for a period of one year following occupancy to address punch list and remaining construction issues. Similarly, the operator (JCI) provided five full-time employees six months before occupancy to smooth the transition to the operating period. This overlap and cooperation is a key differentiator between PBI and CMR in terms of ease of resolving warranty-type issues and facilitating the transition from construction to operations.

Review of Value for Money (VfM) Analysis—Assumptions vs. Actual

SB 75, section 27(b), provides that this report contain as one of its elements the following:

Comparison of the assumptions included in the project's final value for money analysis, which was submitted to the Legislature in a report dated January 24, 2011, to the project's actual costs to date as well as projected costs incurred under the life of the contract. The comparison shall address assumptions that were made about the project

[¶] timing,
[¶] capital and operating costs,
[¶] financing and revenues, and
[¶] project risks.

[¶] The comparison shall describe, for each of the project risks that were identified in the Value for Money analysis, whether the risk was realized and if a cost was imposed on the project company or the Judicial Council as a result.

(Sen. Bill 75, § 27(b))

The objective of the VfM analysis was to compare the estimated risk-adjusted costs for a traditional method of procurement (the public sector comparator) against the estimated risk-adjusted costs under a PBI procurement method (referred to as the shadow bid). In the VfM analysis, assumptions were made to estimate the capital, management, operations, maintenance, and renewals and replacements costs over the 35-year life cycle of the project. The resultant quantitative and qualitative assessment of factors associated with the two delivery methods informed the decision making process regarding whether to proceed with the PBI delivery method.

In the final VfM analysis (January 2011), the original estimated shadow bid values were replaced by the actual values submitted and negotiated with the project company. The following factors, which fell into quantitative as well as qualitative categories, were considered in the VfM analysis:

1. Accelerated delivery of infrastructure, early start, and shorter construction duration;
2. Requirement of first payment only on occupancy or service commencement;

3. Optimization of legislative authority to construct expansion space and raise revenue;
4. Certainty of costs;
5. Level of service;
6. Risk transfer to the party best able to control and manage it; and
7. Risk-adjusted cost estimates appropriate to delivery method.

The approach taken by the AOC in carrying out the VfM analysis compares well with the practice elsewhere in the United States and internationally. Although not explicit in the VfM analysis, the CMR delivery method was understood to have been used as the traditional method for the PSC benchmark.

Table 2.1 contains a summary of the comparison of the VfM assumptions to the actual costs or projected costs over the life of the project.

Summary of Governor George Deukmejian Courthouse VfM Analysis Validation

| Item            | Comments   |
|-----------------|--|
| Site            | VfM assumptions validated.   |
| Timing          | VfM assumptions validated.   |
| Capital Costs   | VfM assumptions validated.   |
| Operating Costs | Too early in the service period to make a definitive assessment.   |
| Revenue         | Too early in the service period to make a definitive assessment.   |
| Financing       | It appears from the successful refinancing that the VfM assumptions were valid.  |
| Project Risks   | Given that the project company was 100% responsible for the cost of any such risk that they retained, the assumptions made in the VfM analysis have proven accurate in that no additional costs were passed to the AOC in excess of what was originally allocated. |

Site

Under PBI projects, owners often transfer a substantial portion of site acquisition risk to the private partner. However, for this project, the AOC was proactive in mitigating this risk. The project site was acquired by the state under a property exchange agreement with the City of Long Beach Redevelopment Agency. The existing courthouse property was exchanged for the new courthouse site and existing parking structure. The potential problems of site location, acquisition, and access were therefore removed before signing of the project agreement.

Initiative was taken by the project company to ensure access to the site by proactively relocating utilities and having archeologists on site during excavation and grading. Because the building occupies a large portion of the site, the storage of materials on site was a challenge. The project company addressed this challenge by using the exterior courtyard area at the northwest corner of the site to house its construction office trailers and lay-down area for most of the construction period and by moving to nearby rented office space during the closeout period.

Many of the access and suitability issues were eliminated by the AOC during the site selection process and completion of the CEQA process and other studies, before start of construction and execution of the project agreement. These actions by the AOC provided a relatively issue-free environment during design and construction. The AOC's approach and assumptions with respect to the site were validated by what actually occurred.

The costs agreed to under the property exchange deal were as follows:

- City of Long Beach to pay $2 million to the project company for sewer and gas main relocation;
- City of Long Beach to pay $5 million to the project company for off-site public infrastructure improvements over 20 years commencing when the court starts using the new courthouse.

The actual cost to the design-builder of utility relocations exceeded $5 million, which the project company assumed. City requirements were greater than anticipated, and the telecommunication utilities on the existing site proved to take significant management effort and time to relocate. The AOC bore no risk for additional time or costs to relocate the utilities, which would not have been true in a traditionally procured project.

Timing

Assumptions relating to project timeline or schedule are always a key factor in VfM analysis when comparing traditional procurement with the PBI method. The VfM analysis assumed that the PBI option, as compared to a traditional procurement, would result in a shorter construction period, leading to early occupancy. The assumed shorter construction period included an overlapping design phase.

Table 2.2 summarizes a comparison between the timing assumed in the VfM analysis and the actual timing for the project:

Governor George Deukmejian Courthouse
VfM Analysis Assumption and Actual Timing

| Event                                 | Assumption  | Actual      |
|---------------------------------------|-------------|-------------|
| Planning and development commencement | 1-Jul-2010  | 1-Jul-2010  |
| Construction commencement             | 21-Apr-2010 | 5-Apr-2011  |
| Construction duration                 | 28 Months   | 28 Months   |
| Occupancy date                        | 1-Sep-2012  | 31-Aug-2013 |
| Operations duration                   | 35 Years    | No Change   |
| Contract expiration                   | 31-Aug-2048 | No Change   |

The timing assumptions regarding the construction duration were validated, and the court was able to occupy the new courthouse on schedule. The timeline can be seen graphically in figure 2.1.

A unique contract structure necessitated a protracted review and approval of the selected proposal, causing delays to the signing of the project agreement. Once the project agreement was signed, no delays ensued, and construction ended 11 days ahead of schedule. This achievement was the result of the overlapping of design, code review by agencies, and construction; procurement of structural steel and the elevator before completing the design and receiving all approvals; and selection of a building enclosure system that was rapidly erected and therefore minimized the risk of weather-related delay in completing interior construction.

Capital Costs

The VfM assumptions for capital costs, risk-adjusted for the PBI option, were replaced by the actual and negotiated costs between the AOC and the project company. The VfM analysis therefore included the capital cost figure proposed by the project company. Table 2.3, below, summarizes the key assumptions for the capital costs included in the VfM final analysis—which is the basis for the financial agreement between the State and the project company—and the actual capital costs for the project at the end of the construction period.

<sup>23</sup> An additional $14.995 million was spent by the project company from a county-funded allowance for change orders related to the tenant improvements in the county lease space. This item was not contemplated in the VfM analysis.

<sup>24</sup> The Project Company initiated and provided the public art and will maintain it over the 35-year term of the project agreement.

A comparison of the costs assumed in the VfM analysis and the actual costs incurred in the construction of the Governor George Deukmejian Courthouse shows that the actual costs of the project were 4.4 percent lower than the VfM assumptions.

Operating Costs

The VfM assumptions for operating costs for the PBI option were replaced by the actual and negotiated costs between the AOC and the project company. The VfM analysis therefore included the operating-cost figure proposed by the project company, which is shown in table 2.4. A comparison to actual costs is unrealistic at this stage because the new courthouse has been occupied for less than one year.

Revenue Assumptions

To make a valid assessment of the accuracy of the revenue assumptions would be considered premature. However, both the City and the County payments are fixed in the project agreement and will not change. The revenue assumptions for county space, retail space, and parking fees have not changed. Table 2.6, below, summarizes the comparison between the VfM analysis assumptions regarding revenues and the payments made where known and disclosed, in relation to these assumptions.

| Public infrastructure improvements   | $5,000,000 <sup>25</sup>  | $333,333                              |
| Payments by County for its share of parking structure renovation <sup>26</sup>      | $10,907,000   | $2,742,676                            |
| Other payments to the project company <sup>27</sup>(October 2013 to April 2014) |  |  |
| County rental revenue  | $110,149,000  | $1,847,040                            |
| Retail rental revenue  | $9,504,000  | $40,611                               |
| Parking fee  | $17,900,000   | $110,113                              |

The project agreement includes provisions whereby 50 percent of any revenue amounts that exceed those assumed in the financial model (and the VfM report) would be paid to the AOC. The project company carries the full risk of revenues not meeting forecasts. Consequently, the AOC will benefit if revenues are higher than assumed but will be unaffected if revenues fall below projections.

Financing Assumptions

The project agreement stipulates that the project may be refinanced at any time, with the AOC entitled to a share of any resulting gain, in accordance with section 6.5. This ability for the AOC to share in refinancing gain is a unique feature to PBI procurement in this case and occurred in December 2013. The refinancing provided long-term funding through a private placement bond purchased by insurance companies and pension funds. The resulting gain to the project company and the AOC was approximately $200,000, and the AOC's share was applied to reduce the annual service payment. In addition, the project company accepts the risk of any such refinancing and accepts that the AOC is fully insulated from any possible resulting losses. Table

<sup>26</sup> In accordance with the project agreement, paragraph 13.4(b) and Appendix 16, the County of Los Angeles will contribute 24.74 percent of the capital cost of the parking structure and 24.74 percent of operating, maintenance, and management costs of the parking structure. These payments will be made by the AOC and reimbursed by the County under terms of the Joint Occupancy Agreement for the parking structure.

<sup>27</sup> The other payments to LBJP are estimated based on the VfM assumptions because they are considered commercially sensitive.

2.7 contains a comparison of the VfM analysis against the actual financial terms resulting from the recent refinance of the project company's debt.

Project Risks

As part of its internal project management process and before retaining the project company, the AOC engaged Ernst & Young to facilitate the process to identify, rank, and determine the probability of all potential risks related to the project. In general, the intent of this process was to quantify the potential financial impact of project risks if the project were procured under a PBI method and allow for a comparison of the same if the project were procured under other traditional procurement methods (CMR, in this case). The ultimate deliverable resulting from this effort was a document entitled “Risk Allocation Worksheet.” Clarifying the purpose of this document is important, as is providing context for understanding the way in which it was applied. The risk management process contributed financial values to the VfM analysis, which provided a comparison between PBI and traditional procurement not only in relation to risks, but also regarding construction, development, finance, and operating costs.

Ernst & Young led the risk management process in a manner consistent with standard industry practice. The first step of this process was to facilitate a risk workshop that identified pertinent risks and their likelihood of occurring. These outcomes were then entered into probability risk management software, which calculated the anticipated financial impact of these risks being realized individually. The risks were categorized generally between (1) project budget; (2) design, bid, and construction; (3) maintenance and operation; and (4) finance and capital markets—each broken down into a specific level of detail. Based on this analysis, risks were allocated between the AOC and the project company that would eventually be awarded the contract. The financial impacts were calculated to demonstrate the importance and severity of certain risks so that the AOC could make an informed decision about whether to transfer those risks to the project company or retain them for internal management.<sup>28</sup>

Based on the project agreement, any risks allocated to the project company are theirs exclusively to manage, and the AOC has neither the ability nor the contractual right to track the actual impacts or how they were or will be managed. The project agreement provides adequate commercial protection for both parties, and both parties have agreed to let the other manage their individual, internal risks. This approach, notably, is featured in PBI projects executed globally.

The project company provided information regarding the most significant risks they faced throughout design and construction. With the exception of the risk that was priced into its bid and subsequently carried in the service payments, the project company was 100 percent responsible for the cost of any such risk that they retained. As such, the assumptions made in the VfM analysis have proven accurate in the sense that no additional costs were passed to the AOC in excess of those that were originally allocated.

<sup>28</sup> Such a risk identification and quantification process is often used on programs or projects as a way to calculate and manage project contingency amounts, but this was not the intent or ultimate use of this process.

The following list identifies and provides a brief description of the most significant of the risks that were realized during design and construction. Appendix C describes the risks in greater detail, identifies to whom the risks were allocated, and identifies the impacts and outcomes.

1. Financial Security of Manufacturers and Major Subcontractors. A major installation subcontractor went into bankruptcy during design. The project company accepted the risk of replacing them and managing any schedule implications.
2. Subsurface Conditions.<sup>29</sup> The project company performed extensive investigations to best manage the portions for which they were responsible. Any subsurface problems were managed effectively, and the project company was responsible for the costs associated with additional investigations.
3. Utility Relocation. The City of Long Beach contributed to the estimated cost of sewer and gas utility relocation, and the project company carried the risk of any costs, in addition to this contribution, that had not been built into the bid.
4. Change in Law/Code. The project company absorbed costs associated with the impact of changes to the California Building Code. Even though the project company sought relief from the AOC, the project agreement was structured adequately to hold the project company 100 percent liable. The project company is responsible for 2010–2025 code changes that would affect the use of expansion spaces as courtrooms.
5. Plan Check/Permitting Uncertainty. The project company was responsible for managing any delays in the approvals or permitting process, which they accomplished with no impact on project cost or schedule.
6. Insurance. The cost of insurance was significantly higher than anticipated. The project company absorbed all such overruns, with no financial impact on the AOC.
7. County Fees. The project company submitted its bid with the belief that it was exempt from county fees. This belief proved to be untrue, and the liability was passed down to the construction contractor, with no financial impact on the AOC.
8. Off-site Improvements. The project company claimed that the requirements for off-site improvements had increased postcontract but ultimately accepted the obligations and proceeded at its own expense.

<sup>29</sup> Subsurface conditions were a shared risk: hazardous materials and geotechnical risks were held by LBJP; cultural and archeological risks were held by the AOC.

9. Commissioning. The project company determined that the commissioning requirements of the project agreement were not adequately rigorous to meet the occupancy requirements and, hence, increased the scope at its own cost to mitigate the risk of not meeting the occupancy requirements.
10. Punch List. The independent building expert and its subcontractor exceeded their budgets because their efforts were far greater than anticipated. The project company ultimately settled with both contractors following completion of the process, with no financial impact to the AOC.
11. Landlord Risk. Actual rental revenues fell short of the project company projections because of difficulty negotiating leases with the County. The project company absorbed all shortfalls, shielding the AOC from financial risk.
12. Parking Revenue. Through its contract with a parking operator, the project company is liable for a fixed amount based on anticipated parking revenues. Despite competition from surrounding facilities, the project company accepts the risk of lost revenue, with no financial impact to the AOC.
13. Labor Disputes. The design-builder created a project labor agreement with all trades, at its own cost, to set rules for labor dispute recourse to mitigate potential negative impacts on schedule.
14. Future Expansion. The project company's design facilitates future expansion. The cost of modifying space designed to be leased to the county for future court expansion was built in to the service payment, but the AOC benefits from the likely efficiencies and reduction in future costs should expansion take place. The capacities and quality of the building systems for the expansion space, when converted for court use, are required to be the same capacities and quality as for initial court spaces.
15. Subcontractor Cost Overruns. The project company absorbed the cost of the architect of record's exceeding its original budget (the liability was passed to the design-builder), with no financial impact on the AOC.
16. Construction-to-Occupancy Transition. The design-builder and operator established at their own cost a "cooperation agreement" that holds the construction contractor liable for post-warranty work for two years to mitigate the risk of payment deductions as a result of availability or performance problems due to construction defects.

17. Life Cycle and Maintenance. The project company is responsible to address any building degradation, through a maintenance and life-cycle replacement regime, to meet the quality standards laid out in the project agreement.

Changes to Scope, Budget, and Timeline

The project included 55 financial change orders, broken down as illustrated in figure 2.2.

Change-Order Summary

No changes were requested as a result of relief events, as specified in the project agreement.<sup>30</sup>

All the change orders initiated by the AOC were deducted from the $10 million allowance for changes that was built into the project construction budget, and the Los Angeles County request came from its budgeted allowance. The cost of remaining changes, including cost overruns in several areas of design or construction, was not passed to the AOC because the risk-transfer mechanism embodied in the project agreement shifted those costs to the project company.

---

<sup>30</sup> Relief events are events that would trigger relief from certain requirements of the project agreement. For example, an earthquake is an event that would allow relief from the agreed-upon construction schedule.

Project Management Costs

Judicial branch project management costs are presented in table 2.8 using the methodology presented in Appendix D. Judicial branch project management costs accounted for 1.55 percent of total cost, or 1.70 percent of the (court and noncourt) construction costs for this project.

Table 2.8

Costs for Contractors

In this report, the costs for contractors are classified and calculated as shown in table 2.9, below. The sum of project contractor and construction contractor costs accounted for 97.6 percent of the total cost of this project. The separate cost of the construction contractor accounted for 91.5 percent of the total aggregate (court and noncourt) project costs.

<sup>32</sup> Construction contractor—the general contractor responsible for constructing the project.

Chapter 3

San Bernardino Justice Center, San Bernardino

Project Description

The San Bernardino Justice Center is located on a 7.1-acre site at 247 West Third Street, directly across from the historic courthouse in downtown San Bernardino. The site for the new justice center was donated to the State by the City of San Bernardino and provides 385 onsite surface parking spaces for visitors, jurors, and staff. This new, seismically safe courthouse has 35 courtrooms plus two hearing rooms, consolidating court operations from nine existing facilities. This modern justice center provides adequate space for courtrooms, judicial support, court administration, facility support, security operations, and secure holding and sally port for in-custody detainees. The justice center serves the residents of the City of San Bernardino and the surrounding communities.

The new justice center is a seismically base isolated 11-story high-rise building with a partially exposed basement level. The architectural design incorporates several innovative features, including ways to draw daylight into the building without heat; reduced water usage in the building and onsite; and energy-efficient heating, ventilation, and air-conditioning systems. The building was designed to qualify for the LEED™ Silver certification by the U.S. Green Building Council.

Procurement Method

The CMR delivery method was used for this project. Four proposals were received from construction management firms.

Risk Allocation

As a CMR-delivered project, the San Bernardino Justice Center required the AOC to retain the risk of subsurface conditions, whereas this risk was allocated to the project company on the Governor George Deukmejian Courthouse project. In the case of the San Bernardino Justice Center, gas-laden soil was discovered, and the AOC was financially liable for its abatement. Under PBI delivery, the project company would have been responsible for this cost. The AOC also retained the risk associated with life cycle and maintenance, postwarranty work, and future expansion, each of which was transferred to the project company on the Governor George Deukmejian Courthouse project. Although these risks have not yet materialized, they are inevitable and represent typically significant value in terms of risk transfer under PBI procurement.

Project Costs

The AOC delivered this project for $44.7 million less than the final and original appropriation amounts. Project costs are identified in table 3.1.

Project Management Costs

Judicial branch project management costs are presented in table 3.2 using the methodology presented in Appendix D. Judicial Branch project management costs accounted for 1.39 percent of total cost, or 1.55 percent of hard construction cost for this project.

Costs for Contractors by Activity

In this report, the costs for contractors are classified and calculated as shown in table 3.3. The sum of project contractor and construction contractor costs accounted for 99.0 percent of total cost of this project. The separate cost of the construction contractor accounted for 89.8 percent of the total aggregate project costs.

<sup>35</sup> Construction contractor—the general contractor responsible for constructing the project.

Project Timeline

As shown in figure 3.1, below, this project was completed 63 weeks after the final approved completion date and 75 weeks after the originally scheduled completion date. Delay to the bidding process—which began in February 2011 and is accounted for in the Actual Timeline shown in the figure below—occurred during the Working Drawings phase. This approximate four-month delay was created by extended review periods of the agencies that have review authority over holding facilities (Corrections Standards Authority), Americans with Disabilities Act compliance (Division of the State Architect [DSA]), and fire/life safety requirements (Office of the State Fire Marshal [OSFM]). Consequently, this delay caused the project to miss the fall 2010 bond sale. Cancellation of the anticipated spring 2011 bond sale required the bids to be held until the fall 2011 bond sale. As a result of these delays, the FY 2010–2011 authorized construction-phase funding needed to be reappropriated in FY 2011–2012. The start of construction—which began in November 2011—occurred after the sale of bonds in the fall 2011 bond sale. One of the benefits of PBI is that private financing is not subject to twice-per-year bond issuances, which currently affect the schedules of all courthouse capital projects relying on bond sales to pay for construction. With PBI, risk of this type of schedule delay is entirely eliminated.

Also factored into the length of the Actual Timeline shown in the figure below, and owing to the size and complexity of the project, was the construction contractor–recommended four-month extension of the construction schedule—from 24 to 28 months. This extended schedule, although four months longer than the final approved schedule, was still expedited compared to the 30- or 36-month construction schedule typical for projects of this size and complexity.

Chapter 4

South County Justice Center, Porterville

Project Description

The South County Justice Center is located in downtown Porterville at 300 East Olive Avenue. The courthouse is positioned on an eight-acre site that provides surface parking spaces for visitors, jurors, and staff. This new nine-courtroom courthouse consolidates from the existing Porterville Government Center and the Tulare-Pixley Court operations that are overcrowded, have numerous physical and functional inefficiencies, and suffer from safety and security issues. This modern justice center provides adequate space for courtrooms, judicial support, court administration, security operations, and secure holding and sally port for in-custody detainees. This facility will serve the county's growing need for court services, enabling the court to greatly improve access and services for the southern half of Tulare County.

The 100,299-square-foot building has three stories, with a partial basement. The design incorporates several sun shading solutions, which add to the unique architectural style and significantly improve energy efficiency during the extremely long hot summers in the Porterville area. The majority of service windows are exterior, allowing the public to complete their transactions without processing through the security screening—reducing the burden on security staffing resources and improving access time. The building was designed to qualify for the LEED™ Silver certification by the U.S. Green Building Council.

Procurement Method

The CMR delivery method was used for this project. Six proposals were received from construction management firms.

Risk Allocation

Several risks were retained by the AOC for the South County Justice Center that for the Governor George Deukmejian Courthouse were transferred to the project company. The most significant risk was subsurface condition risk. Unanticipated subsurface conditions materialized, and the AOC bore the financial impact. Similarly, the AOC retained the risks associated with life cycle and maintenance, as well as post-warranty work and future expansion, each of which was transferred to the project company for the Governor George Deukmejian Courthouse. This facility has not been in operation long enough to demonstrate definitively the financial impact of these retained risks to the AOC. However, they are guaranteed to be realized, and the funding available to respond to such risks will determine to what extent they can be addressed, potentially affecting building quality and shortening the estimated useful life of the new courthouse.

Project Costs

The AOC delivered this project for $10.8 million less than the final and original appropriation amounts. Project costs are identified in table 4.1. A detailed breakdown of construction costs is provided in Appendix B.

<sup>37</sup> Construction contractor—the general contractor responsible for constructing the project.

Project Timeline

As shown in figure 4.1, this project was completed 38 weeks after the final approved completion date and 64 weeks after the originally scheduled completion date. Delays during the Acquisition phase are attributed to issues with property appraisals and negotiations with the property owner and environmental process details with the Department of General Services and DOF. Delays during the Preliminary Plans phase are attributed to additional time required for SPWB approval. Delays during the Working Drawings phase were due to the additional time required for review and approvals by DSA and the Office of the State Fire Marshal. The delays in starting the Construction phase are attributed to the fact that when the DSA and OSFM approvals were received, the project had to wait until the next available bond sale to allow the project to bid before a bond sale.

Chapter 5

Richard E. Arnason Justice Center, Pittsburg

Project Description

The Richard E. Arnason Justice Center replaced the outdated and undersized four-courtroom Pittsburg-Delta Courthouse, originally constructed in 1952 and demolished after the new courthouse was completed.

The eastern region of Contra Costa County includes the growing communities of Pittsburg, Antioch, Brentwood, and Oakley. Previously served by the outdated and undersized Pittsburg-Delta Courthouse, this region needed a larger, modern facility to meet growing demand for court services and to accommodate three new judicial officers. The previous building was so overcrowded that approximately 6,000 cases had to be reassigned to other courts throughout the county. The Arnason Justice Center has greatly improved access to justice for East County residents.

This courthouse has won numerous awards and was the first judicial branch courthouse to receive LEED™ Silver certification from the U.S. Green Building Council. The building was named in honor of Richard E. Arnason, distinguished jurist and pioneering member of the bar in eastern Contra Costa County.

Procurement Method

The CMR delivery method was used for this project. Seven proposals were received from construction management firms.

Risk Allocation

Regarding risk allocation relative to the Governor George Deukmejian Courthouse, notably, the AOC retained the risk of subsurface conditions, which was in fact realized, and the AOC bore the financial responsibility for its mitigation. In this case, asbestos was discovered, and the AOC paid for its abatement. Although this issue was relatively minor, it is an example of a type of risk that could well have had a significant financial impact.

Another risk retained by the AOC was for the punch list. In the case of the Richard E. Arnason Justice Center, the court was allowed to move in to the building on receipt of the Certificate of Occupancy, but this occupancy caused delays in the punch list process because the contractor's movements were restricted for security concerns once the court occupied the space. Under PBI procurement, the project company would retain this risk and therefore would have likely performed greater due diligence regarding the risk of phased occupancy to punch list completion. Under PBI, delays to completing the punch list would delay service commencement, resulting in a delay to the first service fee payment, negatively affecting the project company's ability to meet its debt service obligations.

Also noteworthy in the case of the Richard E. Arnason Justice Center was the AOC's retained risk regarding third-party reviews. Certain authorities having jurisdiction caused delays by not offering exceptions until construction was under way. Under PBI procurement, this risk would likely be shared; however, in this case the AOC accepted full financial responsibility, incurring additional costs and delays.

Project Costs

The AOC delivered this project for $16.1 million less in total project costs than the final appropriation amount and $13.9 million less than the original appropriation amount. Project costs are identified in table 5.1, below.

The cost increases in the Acquisition ($672,000) and Preliminary Plans ($1.56 million) phases were included in the Budget Act of 2006 (FY 2006–2007) to fund a scope change from four to seven courtrooms.

<sup>39</sup> Project contractors—all service providers and vendors, excluding the construction contractor, with exceptions for the following costs: land purchase price; document review and construction inspection fees charged by the State Fire Marshal, the Division of the State Architect, and the Board of State and Community Corrections; local or regional development fees; and utility connection fees.

Project Timeline

As shown in figure 5.1, below, this project was completed 6 weeks after the final approved completion date and 58 weeks after the originally scheduled completion date. The delay was caused by the change in building size from four to seven courtrooms. The overall actual duration of design and construction was five months less than the final approved timeline allowed.

Appendix A

Text of SB 75 Section 27 and Definitions of Terms

SB 75 Section 27

SEC. 27. The Judicial Council shall report to the appropriate budget and policy committees of the Legislature, the Joint Legislative Budget Committee, the Legislative Analyst's Office, and the Department of Finance, on or before June 30, 2014, on an evaluation of the Long Beach court building performance based infrastructure project. The evaluation shall assess the implementation of the project agreement and compare the project to other court construction projects the Judicial Council has pursued using the traditional public sector approach. The evaluation shall address whether the project was a cost-effective approach compared to the Judicial Council's other court construction projects. The evaluation shall include, but not be limited to, all of the following elements:

- (a) Evaluation of the project company and its design-build implementation of the project agreement relative to the requirements of the agreement.
- (b) Comparison of the assumptions included in the project's final Value for Money analysis, which was submitted to the Legislature in a report dated January 24, 2011, to the project's actual costs to date as well as projected costs incurred under the life of the contract. The comparison shall address assumptions that were made about the project site, timing, capital and operating costs, financing and revenues, and project risks. The comparison shall describe, for each of the project risks that were identified in the Value for Money analysis, whether the risk was realized and if a cost was imposed on the project company or the Judicial Council as a result.
- (c) Identification of costs that occurred in the project for the project company and the Judicial Council that were not identified in the value for money analysis.
- (d) Description of major challenges encountered by the project and how those issues were resolved.
- (e) Description of major changes to the project scope, budget, or timeline during the term of the project agreement, including changes that did or did not require renegotiation of the agreement, and the impact of those changes to the project, including cost impact.
- (f) Assessment of the cost-effectiveness of the project compared to a minimum of three projects constructed as part of the courts construction program. The assessment shall consider the costs related to the construction, management, and operation of the court building that were experienced by the project company and the Judicial Council. The assessment shall also consider the timeliness of construction, the quality of the building, and the level of service provided by the project company in the project compared to buildings constructed and maintained by the Judicial Council. The information presented in this assessment shall include, but not be limited to, all of the following for each court construction project:

- (1) Identification of all initial, final approved, and actual project costs for each phase of design and construction, including any cost increases and reasons for those increases.
- (2) Identification of the initial, final approved, and actual project timeline for each phase of design and construction, as well as all project delays and the reasons associated in causing the project delays.
- (3) The total project management costs incurred by the Judicial Council, including for existing staff who worked on each project, distinguished by project activity.
- (4) The total costs paid for contractors, distinguished by project activity.

Definitions of Terms and Abbreviations

The following terminology and abbreviations, including terms in SB 75 section 27, are defined below:

| Terms and Abbreviations   | Definitions  |
|---|--|
| Actual Completion Date  | While this term does not occur in the bill, it is defined here to establish the precise end date of the actual project timeline. The completion of the construction phase in the actual timeline shown in the Timeline Comparison Figure in each of the project-specific chapters is the date when occupancy was granted by the State Fire Marshal (SFM) in the form of a Temporary Certificate of Occupancy followed by a Certificate of Occupancy. |
| Administrative Office of the Courts or AOC                              | The staff agency to the Judicial Council of California; actions or responsibilities attributed to the AOC, in this report, are on behalf of the Judicial Council.  |
| Architecture Engineering Consulting Operations and Maintenance or AECOM | Architect of record, designer of record, and lead design team member   |
| California Construction Cost Index or CCCI                              | This index is used by the AOC and the State Department of Finance for project planning and budgeting. See table B.7.   |
| California Environmental Quality Act or CEQA                            | A California statute passed in 1970 to institute a statewide policy of environmental protection. It requires following a protocol of analysis and public disclosure of environmental impacts of proposed projects and adopting all feasible measures to mitigate those impacts.  |

| Terms and Abbreviations             | Definitions   |
|-------------------------------------|---|
| City                                | City of Long Beach.   |
| Clark                               | General Contractor and Design-Builder.  |
| Competitive Procurement             | Quantity and availability of subcontractors and vendors. In general the greater the number of subcontractors/vendors, the more price-competitive the procurement will be. The economic and market conditions also affect the level of competition.  |
| Construction Costs                  | Costs incurred during construction.   |
| Construction Manager at Risk or CMR | A project delivery method, also known as Construction Manager/General Manager, allows an owner to engage a private entity/construction manager during the project design process to provide services in two phases: design and construction. During design, the Construction Manager provides preconstruction services. The construction manager provides input regarding pricing, constructability, scheduling, phasing and other input to assist the architect with design and provide the owner with expertise to assist in making decisions that will result in a more cost-effective and constructible project. At approximately 60% to 90% design completion, the Owner and the CM negotiate a ‘Guaranteed Maximum Price’ (GMP) for the construction of the project based on the defined scope and schedule. If this price is acceptable to both parties, they execute a contract for construction services, and the Construction Manager becomes the general contractor as CMR. The AOC contracts for the GMP with the CMR after the design is 100% complete with all permits and approvals completed, significantly reducing the risk to the CMR contractor. Key aspects of the CMR method are (i) the contract terminates at the end of the construction stage; (ii) the owner retains all financial and funding obligations through the development of the project; and (iii) the owner retains long term operations and maintenance obligations for the life of the building. This approach offers the direct contractual relationship between owner and architect of other traditional methods, the advisory benefits of CM as advisor, and the early cost commitment characteristic of DB. The CMR is hired early in the design process to deliver an early cost commitment and to manage issues of schedule, cost, construction, and building technology. The owner benefits from the simplicity of one contract with a single entity for the entire construction process. The contractual relationships are illustrated in Figure A.1 below. |

| Terms and Abbreviations                | Definitions   |
|--|---|
|  | Figure A.1 CMR Relationship Diagram  While some variations are possible based on the individual circumstances of a project, the CMR method is defined by certain characteristics in connection with project risks. The procuring agency will first retain a designer to define the project scope, and subsequently procure a CMR upon or prior to establishment of the initial design. The CMR is responsible for construction, and accepts the financial risk associated with procurement and construction costs, such that they are liable for any cost overrun not associated with an owner-driven change. An important distinguishing characteristic of this delivery method is the relationship between the CMR contractor and the designer. The intent is for the CMR contractor to become involved in the design process, so that they may provide input regarding constructability, construction cost and schedule, and thus improve the efficiency, timeliness and cost effectiveness of design and construction. From a commercial perspective, a CMR contract is based on a GMP or Lump Sum. Unlike more traditional forms of procurement, CMR contracts are awarded based on the combined consideration of both qualifications and price. |
| Contractor Costs – Section 27(f)(4)    | Costs for contractors are taken directly from job cost accounting reports generated by the JBCPO Business and Finance Unit.   |
| Contractors                            | In connection with SB 75 section 27(f)(4), “contractors” shall be defined as all service providers and vendors involved with the project. In the Costs for Contractors table in each of the project-specific chapters, the separate cost of the construction contractor is also provided.   |
| Corrections Standards Authority or CSA | Replaced by the BSCC, Board of State and Community Corrections, effective July 1, 2012.   |

| Terms and Abbreviations   | Definitions  |
|---|--|
| Cost Increase/Total Project Costs/Each Phase of Design and Construction | In connection with section 27(f)(1), a “cost increase” shall be defined as costs exceeding the amount of the original appropriation request for each phase, at the time the subject phase was actually requested. “Total project costs” presented in this report include site acquisition (A) phase costs as well as costs for “each phase of design and construction,” which are preliminary plans (P), working drawings (W), and construction (C).   |
| Critical Path   | The longest path of planned activities to the completion of construction.  |
| CT Energetics   | Commissioning sub-consultant to the design-builder.  |
| Department of Finance or DOF  | State of California Department of Finance  |
| Design-Bid-Build or DBB   | Traditional method for project delivery. Delivery consists of the design phase, bidding phase and construction phase.  |
| Design-Build or DB  | Delivery method by which Clark is responsible for both the design by AECOM and the construction of the facility.   |
| Division of State Architect or DSA                                      | Reviewing agency for access compliance.  |
| Facility Condition Index (FCI)  | The ratio of deferred maintenance dollars to replacement dollars. <math>FCI = \text{Total estimated cost of deferred maintenance} \div \text{Estimated replacement value}</math> An FCI of 0.1 signifies a 10 percent deficiency, which is generally considered low, and an FCI of 0.7 means that a building needs extensive repairs or replacement. The lower the FCI, the lower the need for remedial or renewal funding relative to the facility’s value.            |
| Furniture, Fixtures and Equipment or FF&E                               | Furniture, fixtures and equipment, and low-voltage systems, or building systems pertaining to security and access control, fire alarm, audiovisual systems, unified communications, and other technical infrastructure   |
| Guaranteed Maximum Price or GMP   | A Guaranteed Maximum Price contract is a cost-type contract (also known as an open-book contract) where the contractor is compensated for actual costs incurred plus a fixed fee subject to a ceiling price. The contractor is responsible for cost over-runs, unless the GMP has been increased via formal change order (only as a result of additional scope from the client, not price overruns, errors, or omissions). Savings resulting from cost under-runs are returned to the owner. |
| Immediate and Critical Needs Account or ICNA                            | An account funded by special revenues collected in accordance with SB 1407.  |

| Terms and Abbreviations   | Definitions   |
|---|---|
| Independent Building Expert or IBE and Inspector of Record or IOR | A consultant to the AOC and the Project Company jointly, providing peer and code document review, permitting, and field inspection (performed by TMAD Taylor & Gaines or TTG with subcontractors).  |
| Initial Project Timeline and Delay                                | In connection with SB 75 section 27(f)(2), the “initial project timeline” for the three CMR comparator projects is the timeline presented in the initial COBCP that is the initial basis of the budget act appropriation and “delay” is measured against the original project timeline and is calculated by comparing the original completion date for each phase of design and construction (P, W, and C) with the actual completion dates. The final approved timeline is also represented, along with the original and actual timelines, in the Timeline Comparison figure in each of the project-specific Chapters 3 through 5. The final approved timeline is the timeline presented in the final project action or funding request approved by the DOF or the SPWB. The overall timelines represent the time period between the start of preliminary plans and the completion of construction. As set forth in the State Administrative Manual (SAM), Section 6853 – Award Construction Contract, and Section 6854 – Construction, the construction (C) phase begins with the approval of working drawings and proceed to bid, and thus includes bid and award activities. For the Governor George Deukmejian Courthouse, the initial project timeline is the timeline set forth in the Project Company’s proposal. |
| Johnson Controls Inc. or JCI                                      | Building operator for operations and maintenance and low-voltage subcontractor.   |
| Judicial Branch Capital Program Office or JBCPO                   | AOC office responsible for all aspects of implementing capital outlay projects.   |
| Judicial Branch Project Management Costs – Section 27(f)(3)       | Internal judicial branch project management costs are estimated through a combination of direct estimation for project managers, planners, real estate analysts, and construction inspectors, and a cost model for other AOC staff who contributed to the management of the capital projects. See Appendix D for the calculation methodology.   |
| Leadership in Energy and Environmental Design or LEED™            | A program administered by the U.S. Green Building Council (USGBC) to measure and certify the level of construction with respect to energy and the environment.  |
| London Interbank Offered Rate or LIBOR                            | The rate at which an individual contributor panel bank could borrow funds.  |

 APPROVED BY THE JUDICIAL COUNCIL: June 27, 2014

| Terms and Abbreviations                 | Definitions  |
|---|--|
| Long Beach Judicial Partners or LBJP    | Project Company responsible for the financing, design, construction, operations and maintenance of the Governor George Deukmejian Courthouse.  |
| Net Present Value or NPV                | A comparison of costs on a consistent basis because the costs to the State occur at different points in time under each procurement option. The NPV of each of the procurement methods is compared to determine which would provide the best value to the State.   |
| On site                                 | Elements performed within the property line of the site.   |
| Operating Cost                          | Facilities Management – The Owners/AOC certainty on annual operational costs (energy, routine maintenance, custodial maintenance). These costs are normally covered under the general fund appropriation to the judicial council. Repair and Replacement (PPP Life-cycle cost) certainty – For replacement of major items, these costs are normally funded from capital improvement fund sources.  |
| Parking Structure                       | Existing parking structure (built when the existing courthouse was constructed), located one-half block south of Governor George Deukmejian Courthouse site, and which received seismic upgrades, remediation for the leaking top deck, a new elevator/stair tower, a new entrance, and both an internal and external renovation as a part of the project requirements   |
| Performance-Based Infrastructure or PBI | A project delivery method whereby a public entity/owner procures an infrastructure project from a private entity/developer or concessionaire where the private entity is responsible for the design, construction, operation, maintenance and financing of that infrastructure. The PBI contract, or Project Agreement, is output or performance-based as opposed to prescriptive. Key components of a PBI project are (i) the private entity is fully responsible for design and construction; (ii) financing is provided by the private sector; and (iii) the private party has long term obligations to operate and maintain the infrastructure. Payments to the private entity by the public entity are subject to and based on the private party’s performance and compliance with the specified requirements of the Project Agreement and availability of the infrastructure at all times. Through the Project Agreement the AOC has the ability to make deductions against its payments to the private party for unavailability of portions of the building due to building performance failures (hence a “performance-based” project); used interchangeably with public-private partnership, or PPP. |

| Phases of Project Delivery                 | Site Acquisition (A); Preliminary Plans (P); Working Drawings (W); and Construction (C)   |
| Pre-construction Costs                     | Costs incurred before construction starts.  |
| Project Activity                           | In connection with section 22(f)(4), “project activity” shall mean the typical phases of a state capital project, which are site acquisition (A), preliminary plans (P), working drawings (W), and construction (C).  |
| Project Agreement                          | A design, build, finance, operate, and maintain agreement executed between the AOC and the Project Company including the transaction forms, ground lease, sub-lease, appendices, proposal extract documents, related agreements, and Performance and Management Standards.  |
| Project Company                            | The entity formed to bid on the Governor George Deukmejian Courthouse project. On the signing of the Project Agreement, Long Beach Judicial Partners was appointed as the Project Company.  |
| Project Costs/Increases – Section 27(f)(1) | Actual project costs are taken directly from job cost accounting reports generated by JBCPO’s Business and Finance Unit, with the exception of those for the Governor George Deukmejian Courthouse, which were provided by the Project Company. The Appropriations and Project Costs table in each project-specific chapter shows the original appropriation amount, the final appropriation amount, and the actual expenditure for each as well as increases or savings from appropriation amounts. The original appropriation amount refers to the original amount appropriated in the annual budget act for each phase. The final appropriation amount refers to the sum of the original appropriation amount and all subsequent changes to that amount as contained in the annual budget act or as approved by the DOF or the SPWB. Changes to the original appropriation amount can be augmentations, reversions, or redirections (from one phase to another). Some changes to the original appropriation amount, within the guidelines set forth in the State Administrative Manual (SAM), may be approved independently by the DOF or the SPWB and do not appear in the annual budget act. Cost increases are listed and reasons for cost increases are described. |
| Project Labor Agreement or PLA             | A pre-hire collective bargaining agreement with one or more labor organizations that establishes the terms and conditions of employment for a specific construction project. The terms of the agreement apply to all contractors and subcontractors who successfully bid on the project, and supersede any existing collective bargaining agreements.   |

| Terms and Abbreviations                     | Definitions  |
|---|--|
| Public-Private Partnership or PPP           | The delivery method in which project is designed, financed, constructed, operated, and maintained under a comprehensive project agreement. Used interchangeably with performance-based infrastructure or PBI.  |
| Quality Assurance, Quality Control or QA/QC | Quality Assurance (QA): the planned and systematic activities implemented in a quality system so that quality requirements for a product or service will be fulfilled. Quality Control (QC): The observation techniques and activities used to fulfill requirements for quality.   |
| Quality Management or QM                    | Quality management ensures that an organization, product or service is consistent. It has four main components: quality planning, quality control, quality assurance and quality improvement. Quality management is focused not only on product and service quality, but also the means to achieve it. Quality management therefore uses quality assurance and control of processes as well as products to achieve more consistent quality.  |
| Request for Information or RFI              | A request from the Contractor to the Architect for information to resolve gaps, conflicts, or subtle ambiguities in the construction documents.  |
| Request for Proposal or RFP                 | A type of bidding solicitation in which a company or organization announces that funding is available for a particular project or program, and companies can place bids for the project's completion. The Request For Proposal (RFP) outlines the bidding process and contract terms, and provides guidance on how the bid should be formatted and presented. A RFP is typically open to a wide range of bidders, creating open competition between companies looking for work. A Request For Proposal for a specific program may require the company to review the bids not only examine their feasibility, but also the health of the bidding company and the ability of the bidder to actually do what is proposed. The RFP may provide detailed information on the project or program, but can leave leeway for the bidder to fill in the blanks with how the project would be completed or program run. |

| Risk Transfer and Risk Allocation  | Risk transfer moves the risk to another party, normally the contractor. In the AOC's typical project delivery the CMR's responsibilities are limited to the design and construction phases and for the most part end upon the expiration of the one-year warranty period. In the PBI delivery method, the contractor is part of a team, the project company, with comprehensive and long-term responsibilities to finance, design, build, operate, and maintain the facility. Through the PBI Project Agreement risk can be allocated to include responsibility for pre-construction, design, construction, occupancy, maintenance, and life-cycle replacement. |
| Senate Bill 1407 or SB 1407  | Perata, Stats. 2008, Ch. 311  |
| Senate Bill 1732 or SB 1732  | Trial Courts Facilities Act of 2002, Escutia, Stats. 2002, Ch 1082  |
| Shadow Bid   | Cost of delivery of the project under a PBI approach, the hypothetical estimation of private sector bid in response to an RFP for a PBI project.  |
| SPV  | Special purpose vehicle. It is a legal entity, usually a limited company of some type or, sometimes, a limited partnership; created to fulfill narrow, specific or temporary objectives.  |
| State Administrative Manual or SAM   | The State Administrative Manual (SAM) is a reference source for statewide policies, procedures, requirements and information developed and issued by authoring agencies such as the Governor's Office, Department of General Services (DGS), Department of Finance (DOF), and Department of Human Resources (CalHR). In order to provide a uniform approach to statewide management policy, the contents have the approval of and are published by the authority of the DOF Director and the DGS Director.  |
| State Court Facilities Construction Fund or SCFCF                                    | Established by SB 1732 special revenues for Judicial Branch costs associated with supplementing SB 1732 and certain capital outlay projects.  |
| State Fire Marshal or SFM (also known as OSFM, the Office of the State Fire Marshal) | The California agency responsible for fire department approval.   |

|------------------------------------|---|
| State Public Works Board or (SPWB) | The State Public Works Board (SPWB) was created by the Legislature to oversee the fiscal matters associated with construction of projects for state agencies, and to select and acquire real property for state facilities and programs. The SPWB is also the issuer of lease-revenue bonds, which is a form of long term financing that is used to pay for capital projects. The Legislature appropriates funds for capital outlay projects such as acquiring land, planning and constructing new buildings, expanding or modifying existing buildings, and/or purchasing equipment related to such construction. Through review and approval processes, the SPWB ensures that capital outlay projects adhere to the Legislature's appropriation intents. Voting members of the SPWB include the Director of Finance (SPWB Chair), the Director of Transportation, and the Director of General Services. When the SPWB deals with matters related to the issuance of revenue bonds the State Controller and the State Treasurer are added as members. Advisory members include the Director of the Employment Development Department, three Senators appointed by the Senate Rules Committee, and three Assembly members appointed by the Speaker of the House. |
| Superior Court                     | Superior Court of California, County of Los Angeles; primary project participants included the Court Executive Office; Facilities Department, and the supervising staff at the Governor George Deukmejian Courthouse.  |
| TMAD Taylor & Gaines or TTG        | Independent Building Expert/Inspector of Record or IBE/IOR.  |
| Value for Money or VfM             | This is a comparison of the risk-adjusted whole life-cycle cost of the project procured as a PBI compared with the risk-adjusted whole life-cycle cost of the project as if it was procured as a CMR, which is the public sector comparator. The comparison is done on a net present value (NPV) basis to facilitate a comparison of costs on a consistent basis because the costs to the State occur at different points in time under each procurement option. The NPV of each of the procurement methods is compared to determine which would provide the best value to the State.  |

Appendix B

Project Cost Comparison Methodology

Adjustments to Remove Unique Project Costs

To provide a fair comparison of costs, all four projects have been adjusted (see table B.1) to remove unique aspects and to adjust all projects to a common baseline or time frame.

Following are the adjustments for unique project costs:

1. The construction cost of the Governor George Deukmejian Courthouse was adjusted by removing the structured parking and the approximately 115,000 square feet of commercial/retail space that is not part of the court space. This adjustment reduced the cost of the project by approximately $40 million, or 11 percent, for comparative purposes.
2. The cost of the San Bernardino Justice Center was adjusted for the required bid extension and for the impacts of adding specialized, seismic base isolation. These adjustments reduced the cost of the project approximately $9 million, or 3 percent, for comparative purposes.

Figure B.1 provides an illustrative view of the impact of those adjustments on the project costs for the two directly comparable projects.

Summary of Adjustments to Remove Unique Project Aspects

3. The cost of the Richard E. Arnason Justice Center was assigned a minor adjustment of approximately $300,000 to account for the cost of building demolition.
4. The cost of the South County Justice Center in Porterville required no adjustments.

Adjustments for Schedule, Location, and Market Impacts

The second step in comparing the construction costs of the four subject projects is to normalize schedule, location, and market impacts, given that both the geographic location within the state and the time of procurement affect the construction costs. Because the Governor George Deukmejian Courthouse is the primary subject of this study, its schedule, location, and market are fixed, and those criteria for the other three projects are adjusted.

Schedule differences that affect escalation are addressed by using the California Construction Cost Index (CCCI). This index is used by the AOC and the California Department of Finance for project planning and budgeting. Table B.7 presents the CCCI for January 2004 to January 2014.

Location factors that affect costs are addressed by using published information available from the United States General Services Administration and derived from RS Means data. Given that the Governor George Deukmejian Courthouse and the San Bernardino Justice Center required Los Angeles–area materials, suppliers, labor, and many subcontractors, these projects were assigned a location factor of 1.09 for Los Angeles. The South County Justice Center in Porterville is a smaller project and was assigned the Bakersfield adjustment factor of 1.05. The Richard E. Arnason Justice Center in Pittsburg is close to the East Bay area around San Francisco and was assigned a location factor of 1.17.

Market factors also affect project costs. The CCCI does not reflect bidding conditions because it is based on construction inputs (labor and materials costs). To reflect some degree of bidding conditions, the Turner Building Cost Index was used. It is a national index that is based on actual projects and bid prices (construction outputs) and therefore reflects bidding conditions.

Between 2006 and 2010, the construction market experienced a major upswing and then a comparable downswing of both construction activity and bid prices. Figure B.2 compares the Turner Index and the CCCI.

 Relationship between CCCI and Turner Index Aligned With CCCI at 2004

The Turner Index was adjusted to account for differences between delivery methods. The Turner Index tends to be more reflective of design-bid-build projects. The CMR delivery method tends to achieve a higher degree of competitiveness during market premiums compared to design-bid-build projects but likewise tends to mute the benefits of lower costs during market discounts.

The DB construction delivery method associated with the Governor George Deukmejian Courthouse tends to achieve a level of competition closer to CMR than DBB.

To properly reflect market conditions for the four comparator projects, 40 percent of the difference between the CCCI (no market factor) and the Turner Index (full market factor) was used, as displayed in Table B.8. The difference between the Turner Index and the CCCI tends to reflect DBB pricing levels at the high end (100 percent competition) and negotiated work at the low end (0 percent, or no competition), and both CMR and DB methods tend to be around 40 percent.

In summary, schedule differences are factored into each project’s construction costs by using the difference in CCCI between each project’s start date and CCCI for the start date of the Governor George Deukmejian Courthouse. Location is factored into each project’s construction costs relative to the Governor George Deukmejian Courthouse. And the cost of each project is adjusted for market factors by using 40 percent of the difference between that project’s CCCI and Turner Index, based on that project’s specific schedule.

The end result of the overall adjustment process for schedule, location, and market factors is outlined below:

1. Governor George Deukmejian Courthouse ..... fixed with a factor of 1.000
2. San Bernardino Justice Center ..... factor of 1.007
3. South County Justice Center, in Porterville ..... factor of 1.047
4. Richard E. Arnason Justice Center ..... factor of 0.989

Final fully adjusted project costs are shown in tables B.9 and B.10 based on the adjustment factors listed above.

Analysis of Building Component Cost

Examining the projects’ construction costs by building component provides a reasonable degree of consistency among the projects. To compare projects by components is difficult because accounting procedures can vary among projects.

Table B.11 presents a high-level summary by major building components.

Appendix C

Governor George Deukmejian Courthouse Risk Table

| RISK   | RETAINED BY     | DESCRIPTION  | POTENTIAL IMPACT  | OUTCOME   | PPP*/PBI VS. TRADITIONAL  |
|--|-----------------|--|---|---|---|
| Financial security of manufacturers and major subcontractors | Project Company | Metal panel installation subcontractor went into bankruptcy during design  | Schedule delays, increased costs  | Contractor in question carried adequate bonding to protect the Project Company. A replacement manufacturer was retained, and the situation was resolved at the Project Company's risk without impact to project cost or schedule  | Typically, the contractor retains this risk under CMAR and the public authority retains it under DBB. However, the authority may choose to retain in either case depending on the level of control they wish to exert over the selection of specific equipment and manufacturers. |
| Subsurface Conditions  | Shared          | AOC accepted risk for archaeological/cultural issues, and the Project Company accepted risk for Geotechnical, Hazardous Materials and buried utilities | Schedule delays, increased costs, claims, scope increase, change orders | As-built conditions and City records were poorly documented; the Project Company performed extensive investigations prior to starting site utilities. All costs were absorbed by the Project Company at no cost to AOC. No particular subsurface problems were encountered.   | Subsurface condition risk is generally not accepted by CMAR or DBB procurement, and represents a significant unique risk transfer for this project.   |
| Utility Relocation   | Shared          | City of Long Beach agreed to contribute up to $2M or utility relocation   | Schedule delays, increased cost   | This issue was reported as very difficult to manage. However, none of the relocations were on the critical path, so schedule delays were managed well. There was approximately $5.6M in total costs incurred. While it has not been confirmed whether the construction contractor's cost estimate included allowances for utility relocation costs in excess of $2M, it is confirmed that they carried the risk of this item exceeding the City contribution amount. Ultimately the Project Company retained this risk and passed along any relevant financial impact to the appropriate subcontract, insulating the AOC. | Public agency generally accepts risk for utility relocation in CMAR and DBB. Had the construction contractor not included utility relocation costs in excess of the $2M City contribution, they potentially absorbed the $3.6M differential.                                    |

|-----------------------------------|-----------------|--|---|--|--|
| Change in Law/Code                | Project Company | Elements of the CA building code changed between bid and construction.Project Company is responsible for code changes (between 2010 and 2025) which would impact the expansion spaces use as courtroom occupancy | Design change, scope change, increased costs, schedule delays, claims, building inspector intervention, failure to obtain permits               | The construction contractor attempted to obtain relief from the Project Company regarding the resulting cost increase; however the Project Agreement (and subsequent 'back-to-back' subcontracts) held the construction contractor accountable for code changes. | Contractors under CMAR and DBB typically wait until plans have been reviewed and approved by the appropriate authorities prior to proceeding with construction. In this case, the contractor accepted the risk of proceeding in advance, which they mitigated at their own cost through the use of a full-time Independent Building Expert to assist in code compliance.   |
| Plan Check/Permitting Uncertainty | Project Company | The Project Company accepted risk of uncertainty for approvals from the relevant authorities plus the Independent Building Expert  | Significant schedule delays, failure to meet Service Commencement   | The Project Company managed these risks to no impact on the overall project schedule or Service Commencement   | Public Authority accepts this risk under traditional procurement; however, the IBE is unique to the PPP delivery method, adding an additional layer of approvals.  |
| Insurance                         | Project Company | The cost of insurance was significantly higher than expected   | Claims, potential change orders to compensate for cost overruns, Project Company default for breach of Project Agreement insurance requirements | The Project Company absorbed the overrun in the range of approximately $450K with no impact to the AOC or the delivery of the project.  | The AOC has historically utilized Owner-Controlled Insurance Programs (OCIP) for its traditional projects, as opposed to Contractor-Controlled Insurance Program (CCIP) in this case (errors and omissions insurance is the responsibility of the Contractor in both cases). OCIP programs are sponsored by the owner to generate efficiencies and transparency. CCIP programs place the burden on the Contractor. |

| County Fees           | Project Company | The construction contractor's estimate for sewage and storm drain connections fees was underestimated by approximately $1.3M.             | Schedule delay, claims, potential change orders to compensate, financial impact of this magnitude could impact the construction contractor's ability to continue doing business | The Project Company attempted to negotiate with the County on the grounds that they were told they would be exempt from the fees, but could not prove that this was communicated officially. The Project Company pushed this liability back to the construction contractor, who accepted the risk and carried the loss.                           | Under traditional procurement, utility connection fees are typically carried by the owner.   |
| Off-Site Improvements | Project Company | Certain off-site improvements were necessary pre-requisites for achieving occupancy  | Failure to achieve occupancy, schedule delays, claims   | There was a significant change in City of Long Beach staff during the process of confirming what was required and what was not. The construction contractor argued that they had been given a different set of requirements following staff turnover, but ultimately accepted the outcome and carried any additional associated financial impact. | Traditional DBB would have specified the requirements clearly in the contracts prior to bid. Similarly, CMAR procurement would likely have required acceptance of this risk. In the case of the PBI, the Project Company assumed the risk. |
| Commissioning         | Project Company | It was perceived that the commissioning requirements in the project Agreement were not adequately rigorous to meet occupancy requirements. | Failure to achieve Service Commencement, schedule delays, claims  | The Project Company took it upon themselves to increase the construction contractor's commissioning scope to better align with occupancy requirements. Despite this scope being in excess of the construction contractor's bid, they absorbed all additional costs to no expense of the AOC.  | Commissioning risk in traditional procurement is generally shared between the Contractor and the public authority. In the case of PBI, the Project Company assumed the risk.   |

| Punch List           | Project Company | Punch List process more rigorous than anticipated by the Independent Building Expert (IBE) and Twining (testing and inspection subcontractor under IBE) | Failure to achieve Service Commencement, schedule delays, post-construction deficiencies leading to penalties under the Payment mechanism | The IBE and Twining had underestimated the effort (ultimately 17,000 punch list items). Both sought relief from the Project Company for the additional time. The IBE contract was held by the Project Company, and they ultimately settled with both for the additional time needed once the process had completed. No expense to the AOC and no schedule impact. | In this case, the IBE has a dual duty of care to the Project Company and the AOC, and is responsible for providing the final sign-off on the punch list indicating that Service Commencement has been achieved. Under traditional procurement, the public agency has the ultimate sign-off. In such cases, unless the completion criteria are very clearly defined in the contracts, final sign-off can potentially extend over minor issues and delay completion. |
| Landlord Risk        | Project Company | Failure to meet rental revenue targets  | Financial strain to the Project Company, potentially leading to devaluation of the asset and impact on credit, ability to do business     | The County was to represent approximately 15% of the building, but there was a significant delay in finalizing this agreement after the Project Agreement was signed, and the Project Company accepted 100% liability for lost revenue. The Project Company Financial Model contained anticipated rental revenue which has not changed despite shortfalls.        | Under traditional procurement the DB or construction contractor is not involved with property leasing or landlord risk. Traditionally-procured public facilities are generally built to suit a specific public function, leaving relatively minor elements open for third-party leasing (cafes, small convenience shops, etc.).  |
| Parking Revenue Risk | Project Company | Parking must compete with surrounding local parking.  | Financial strain to the Project Company, potentially leading to devaluation of the asset and impact on credit, ability to do business     | The Project Company has an agreement with a parking operator for a fixed amount and is liable should actual revenue not meet the agreed pro forma.  | Contractor not responsible for parking revenue risk under traditional procurement.   |

| Labor Disputes              | Project Company | Project Agreement allocated the risk of strikes and other such labor disputes to the Project Company   | Schedule delays, failure to meet Service Commencement   | The construction contractor executed a Project Labor Agreement with all trades, which set rules for striking, picketing, etc. in order to mitigate the risk of lost time for any potential labor disputes.                                      | Contractor generally does not accept this risk under traditional procurement. The Project Company was motivated to take these preemptive actions as achieving Service Commencement was prerequisite to the start of Service Payments under the PA. Any delay to Service Commencement would result in delayed payment and potential financial stress to the Project Company.             |
| Future Expansion            | Project Company | The project builds in infrastructure capable of supporting future expansions (for new courtrooms) in space currently occupied by the County, the lease for which expires in 15 years | Life-cycle and maintenance costs for infrastructure for future courthouse is not necessarily required for the adequate operations of the building in its current design and use | The AOC benefits from this flexible design in that the cost of future expansions would theoretically be much less as the infrastructure is already in place.  | AOC would absorb the full cost of future expansion under traditional procurement. The flexibility under PBI would not have been designed under traditional procurement in an effort to reduce capital costs. As such, under traditional delivery the design may not be able to accommodate future expansion, requiring an entirely separate project to meet the expansion requirements. |
| Subcontractor Cost Overruns | Project Company | Architect exceeded its budget  | Claims, increased costs   | Architect submitted claims upon construction completion, which were passed down to the construction contractor who absorbed the cost  | AOC would absorb the full cost of such claims under traditional procurement   |
| Post-warranty work          | Project Company | Resolution of construction defects beyond the warranty period  | Failure to meet performance criteria resulting in deductions under the Payment mechanism  | The construction contractor and operator have a “cooperation agreement” where there is a 2-year commitment of resources from the construction contractor to manage and correct post-construction issues related to failures, deficiencies, etc. | Under traditional procurement the public agency owns all post-warranty risk, owning responsibility for any failures or defects that occur beyond the warranty period.   |

| Building degradation (general)       | Project Company | Building must meet quality and performance standards under the PA throughout the life of the contract.Project Company must turn over the expansion space (after 5 yrs) with a Facility Condition Index of 15, which is not a requirement of the retail or County Justice Agency spaces | Failure to meet performance metrics leading to deductions under the Payment mechanism, failure to achieve handover criteria | The Project Company established a regime of maintenance and life-cycle replacements in order to maintain the appropriate level of quality and performance throughout the life of the building. The cost of doing so was built into the bid cost.  | Under traditional procurement the public authority is 100% responsible for the condition and performance of the building. Under PBI delivery, the building must be in a predetermined condition at handover at the end of the contract. Under traditional procurement, the building would be run to failure, and would be subject to annual budget constraints, appropriations risk, deferred maintenance, etc. A higher level of performance and quality is generally delivered under PBI. |
| Design Management                    | Project Company | Control and responsibility of the performance and speed of design  | Schedule delay, cost overruns   | There were no design delays which impacted achieving occupancy.   | Under PBI, utilizing DB, the Project Company accepts risk of design delay. Traditional DBB leaves the responsibility with the public agency.  |
| Life cycle and Maintenance (general) | Project Company | Failure to maintain physical infrastructure and provide life-cycle replacements over time  | Failure to meet performance criteria and suffering deductions to service payments, accelerated building degradation         | Project Agreement contains requirements in this regard, supported by financial penalty under the Payment mechanism. The Project Company absorbed this risk, and mitigated it by bringing the operator to participate in the design and construction process to ensure operational concerns were adequately addressed. | Public authority retains 100% of this risk under traditional procurement. We note that under PBI the level of expenditures in this regard are pre-agreed and guaranteed over the life of the contract. Under traditional procurement, expenditures in this regard are subject to appropriations, deferred maintenance, etc.   |

Appendix D

Judicial Branch Project Management Costs

Introduction

The purpose of this appendix is to explain how the judicial branch project management costs for the branch's Capital Construction Program (Capital Program) were allocated to the four subject projects. These costs are displayed in chapter 1, table 1.5 (Governor George Deukmejian Courthouse–San Bernardino Justice Center comparison) and in the Judicial Branch Project Management Costs tables in each of the project-specific chapters, 2–5.

The Capital Program is one of the responsibilities of the AOC, the staff agency of the Judicial Council. The AOC has one office dedicated to the Capital Program, the Judicial Branch Capital Program Office (JBCPO); some offices that support the Capital Program, although not as their primary mission (see note 2 under table D.1); and some offices that have no connection to the Capital Program.

The fall 2012 reorganization of the AOC included dividing the former Office of Court Construction and Management (OCCM) into the JBCPO and the Office of Real Estate and Facilities Management (OREFM). Together these offices oversee all aspects of the Judicial Branch Facilities Program (JBFP). To accurately present the full project management costs of the four projects reviewed in this report, the analysis includes staff costs as attributed to JBFP.

Judicial branch project management costs comprise the sum of the four components displayed in table D.1, below. The direct and indirect costs for AOC employees include salaries and wages, all employee benefits, and the standard allocation of operating expenses and equipment.

Cost Components of Judicial Branch Project Management Costs

|   | Cost Type | Judicial Branch Program | Allocation Basis    | Description   |
|---|-----------|-------------------------|---------------------|---|
| A | Direct    | JBFP                    | Actual Hours Worked | AOC JBFP employees: project managers, associate project managers, planners, real estate analysts, and construction inspectors |
| B | Direct    | JBFP                    | Actual Cost         | Outside firms providing project management services in support of the AOC JBFP project manager                                |
| C | Indirect  | JBFP                    | Pro Rata Share      | AOC JBFP units <sup>41</sup> that provide support functions to the capital projects   |
| D | Indirect  | AOC (Non-JBFP)          | Pro Rata Share      | Non-JBFP AOC units <sup>42</sup> that provide support functions for the capital projects                                      |

---

<sup>41</sup> AOC JBFP units that provide support functions to the capital projects:

1. Executive Management Team
2. Risk Management
3. Business and Finance
4. Environmental Analysis and Compliance
5. Appellate and AOC Facilities

<sup>42</sup> Non-JBFP AOC units that provide support functions to the capital projects:

1. Security and Emergency Response
2. Legal Services – Real Estate Unit
3. Governmental Affairs – Facilities
4. Education – Court Facilities
5. Fiscal Services – Accounting
6. Fiscal Services – Business Services
7. Fiscal Services – Budget
8. Information Technology Services – Technical Support – JBFP
9. Information Technology Services – Desktop Support – JBFP
10. Human Resources Services – Labor and Employee Relations
11. Human Resources Services – Recruitment, Classification, Strategy, and Policy Development

For the four subject projects, direct project management costs accounted for 87 percent and indirect project management costs 13 percent of the total judicial branch project management costs, as displayed in table D.2.

Definitions

Direct Costs

Direct costs are costs that can easily be ascribed to a program. For this report, direct costs are developed from the actual hours worked by project managers, associate project managers, planners, real estate analysts, and construction inspectors and the actual costs charged by outside firms providing project management services in support of the AOC JBCPO project managers.

Indirect Costs

Indirect costs are costs that by their nature cannot be readily associated with a specific organization unit or program. Like general administrative expenses, indirect costs are distributed, through the use of a formula, to the organizational units or programs that benefit from their incurrence. See notes for table D.1 for functional units that contributed indirect costs to the Capital Program.

Calculation of Judicial Branch Project Management Costs

Judicial branch project management costs include direct and indirect components. The direct costs—such as those for project managers, associate project managers, planners, real estate analysts, construction inspectors, and outside firms providing project management services—are added to the indirect costs to yield the total project management costs. Below is a description of how the indirect costs are distributed to the projects.

The indirect component of judicial branch project management costs was calculated by the process described below.

1. Obtain from accounting reports the cost of non-JBFP AOC units that provide support functions for the Capital Program.
2. Obtain from accounting reports the total cost of all JBFP units.
3. Calculate the cost of each JBFP unit as a percentage of JBFP's total cost as displayed in table D.3. For example, as shown in table D.3, in FY 2010–2011, the JBFP Executive Management Team accounted for 4.56 percent of JBFP's total cost. This percentage is used in the next step to calculate the pro rata share of the non-JBFP AOC support units' costs to be distributed to each JBFP unit.
4. To obtain the total indirect cost of each JBFP unit by fiscal year, distribute the pro rata share of the total cost of the non-JBFP AOC support units to each JBFP unit based on its percentage of JBFP's total cost (calculated in step 3). For example, as shown in table D.3, in FY 2010–2011, the JBFP Executive Management Team accounted for 4.56 percent of JBFP's total cost, so 4.56 percent of the non-JBFP AOC support unit costs for FY 2010–2011 were distributed to the JBFP Executive Management Team.
5. Add the total indirect costs (calculated in step 4) of the JBFP units that support the Capital Program (see first footnote under table D.1, above) to obtain the total indirect costs to be distributed to the project phases.
6. Because of the bifurcation of the former OCCM, and in order to spread the overhead costs of the Facilities Management and Environmental Compliance and Sustainability units to the projects, add these overhead costs to the total indirect costs (derived in step 5) and spread to the projects.
7. Calculate the direct project management cost of each project phase as a percentage of JBFP's total cost, as displayed in table D.4. For example, in FY 2010–2011 the direct project management cost of the Construction phase of the Governor George Deukmejian Courthouse accounted for 0.05 percent of JBFP's total cost.
8. To obtain the pro rata share of the total indirect costs for each project phase, multiply the total indirect costs calculated in steps 5 and 6 by the percentage calculated in step 7. These indirect costs are displayed in table D.2, above.

Council Directive 136

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts to evaluate and propose an approach to evaluate cost effectiveness for the entire scope of Office of Court Construction and Management operations.

SEC Recommendation 7-65

A cost-benefit analysis of the entire scope of OCCM operations is needed.

| <input checked="" type="checkbox"/> | COMPLETED: The management of REFM has evaluated the scope of former OCCM operations concerning facilities management and is of the opinion that engaging a consultant would not yield the value gained from 10 years of "field-tested" experience of using several contract and delegation models. |

With the reorganization of the AOC effective October 1, 2012, the former Office of Court Construction and Management was bifurcated into two offices, Capital Program and Real Estate and Facilities Management (REFM) and both offices have provided a response to this directive. This response is provided by REFM.

REFM has now had over 9 years of experience using two general approaches to the delivery of facility management services: 1) using a largely outsourced service-provider model, contracting for routine maintenance (Firm Fixed Price and Cost-Plus contracting), plant engineers, trades and crafts personnel (Job Order and Cost-Plus Contracting), supervised by in-house management staff in or near the court facilities; and 2) the court-delegated facility management program, piloted by four trial courts (Orange, Riverside, Imperial, San Luis Obispo) with limited discussion by the Trial Court Facility Modifications Working Group to expand the program if there is interest by other interested courts.

The only untried general model is an in-house, limited contacting organization similar to the Department of General Services in the Executive Branch, where management, plant engineers, trades and other technicians are state employees. Implementation of this model would represent a significant departure from the models used thus far, and based on the limited information previously received, may be considerably more expensive on a per square foot basis and would require hiring approximately 125 more employees (initial OCCM staffing plan based on information from DGS indicated the need to staff facility management unit with 180 employees).

The management of REFM has evaluated the scope of former OCCM operations concerning facilities management and is of the opinion that engaging a consultant would not yield the value gained from 10 years of "field-tested" experience of using several contract and delegation models. The projected cost of hiring an outside consultant to perform an analysis would also reduce funding available to support court facilities.

IMPLEMENTATION PROGRESS AS OF MARCH 2015

REFM will continue to ensure that it uses the most cost effective approaches to the delivery of facility management services to the courts. This may include expansion of the court-delegated facility management program, currently piloted by four trial courts (Orange, Riverside, Imperial, San Luis Obispo) if there is interest by other courts.

Directive 136: E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts to evaluate and propose an approach to evaluate cost effectiveness of the entire scope of the Office of Court Construction and Management operations.

Strategic Evaluation Committee (SEC) Recommendation: A cost-benefit analysis of the entire scope of OCCM operations is needed.

Changes to the Facility Program since the publication of the SEC Report and adoption of Judicial Council Directives:

1. OCCM divided into two offices, Capital Programs (CP) and Real Estate and Facility Management (REFM).
2. Three new regional facility maintenance contracts have resulted in improved performance and better efficiency.
  - a. Firm Fixed Price Model has resulted in predictability for the budgeting process
  - b. Flexible model allows for adding and deleting facilities and facility services.
  - c. Improved scope definition has improved planning and predictability of outcome.
  - d. Court staffed compensation panels demonstrate direct benefit to service providers of high customer satisfaction levels.
3. Working Group elevated to advisory committee status with oversight of all REFM operations.
  - a. Oversees fiscal prudence of program operations, helping ensure process efficiency and focus on identified service needs
  - b. Governs REFM policy development, ensuring maintenance of process transparency and due consideration of stakeholder and constituent interests.
  - c. Advocates for resources necessary to provide full facilities support to court leadership, staff and operations
4. A Delegation Pilot Program has been established for courts desiring to self-perform facility services.
  - a. Four courts (Orange, Riverside, Imperial, and San Luis Obispo) are participating in the program. No other courts have elected to participate at this time.
  - b. In May 2014 the Advisory Committee conducted a review of the program, determining that it was working, but also recognizing that most courts would not want or be able to directly take-on facility management responsibilities.
5. 15 Job Order Contracts and several other construction contracts have been added to the pool of contracting options. Last year, over 40 commercial contractors were used.

6. Standardized processes and procedures have been established for a wide range of functional areas.
  - a. The Internal Audit, conducted largely at the same time period as the SEC study, focused primarily on the original regional contracts.
  - b. As of today 23 of the 53 recommendations have been addressed.
  - c. Of the 30 remaining items, 28 are pending staffing increases to provide additional oversight and auditing of contractors.

Conclusion

The Judicial Council Executive Office has evaluated the scope of former OCCM operations concerning facilities management and determined that engaging a consultant would not yield the value gained from 10 years of "field-tested" experience of using several contract and delegation models. The projected cost of hiring an outside consultant to perform an analysis would also reduce funding available to support court facilities.

STATUS: This Directive is closed.

Information on Judicial Council Directives

Council Directive 137

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts to consider SEC Recommendation 7-66 and, once organizational changes are made as approved by the Judicial Council, evaluate and make recommendations to the council on facilities maintenance program efficiencies, including broadening courts' responsibilities for maintenance of court facilities and for smaller scale projects.

SEC Recommendation 7-66

The current facilities maintenance program appears inefficient and unnecessarily costly. The consultant report is necessary and should be considered part of a necessary reevaluation of the program. Courts should be given the option to assume responsibility for maintenance of court facilities and for smaller-scale projects.

In response to the directive that the courts' responsibilities for maintenance of court facilities be broadened, the Orange, San Luis Obispo, Imperial and Riverside County Superior Courts participated in a pilot program for the delegation of facility management services beginning in July of 2012. The four courts presented preliminary findings on the program to the Trial Court Facility Modifications Advisory Committee (Advisory Committee) at its May, 2014 meeting. The courts reported generally positive results, but felt the requirements of the Intrabranh agreements (IBAs) limited their success; consequently, it was determined that expansion of the program to include other courts should be deferred for approximately one year.

During the subsequent period the JCC in collaboration with the four courts updated the IBAs simplifying and minimizing the documentation and administrative functions associated with the original agreements. In preparation of the finalization of the Pilot scheduled for July 2015, the JCC presented to the Advisory Committee a program status update at the January 16, 2015 meeting. As with the original presentation in May of 2014 the program continued to report generally positive results.

The Advisory Committee requested staff to confirm that the four delegated courts wished to continue leveraging the program to manage operations and maintenance service delivery within their courts. If that were the case, the committee determined that the pilot was to be considered complete and delegation would continue as a permanent branch service delivery option. All four courts subsequently confirmed their desire to continue with Delegation.

JCC staff continues to provide all courts who express interest in the program with education as to the both the funding and costs associated with the program as well as information about challenges in implementation. As courts have expressed an interest over the last three years, the delegated courts have also acted as sounding boards sharing their lessons learned relative to their respective challenges and successes.

While several other courts have expressed some interest in the program and met with both JCC staff and staff from the participating Delegated Courts, to date no new courts have formally submitted an application to participate to the Advisory Committee. It is possible that in the future, as some court's have capital construction projects completed, they may apply to join the Delegation program.

Trial Court Facility Modifications Advisory Committee now considers the delegation program's pilot phase concluded, and placed the program in full operational status effective January 16, 2015.

Council Directive 138

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts to consider SEC Recommendation 7-67 and, once organizational changes are made as approved by the Judicial Council, evaluate and make recommendations to the Judicial Council regarding fiscal planning for facilities maintenance for new and existing facilities and revenue streams to fund increased costs for maintenance of court facilities.

SEC Recommendation 7-67

Fiscal planning for facilities maintenance for new and existing facilities needs to become an immediate priority, and revenue streams to fund increased costs for maintenance of court facilities must be identified and obtained.

All efforts designed to implement this Directive have now been completed, including:

- The renegotiation of rent and generation of revenues, yielding gross expense reductions of over $8 million during the prior 12-month period.
- Approval of a Budget Change Proposal (BCP) to use Facility Program resources to fund a 10-year, $150 million appropriation in support of the Trial Court Facility Modifications program.

The Judicial Council subsequently approved the recommendation for additional resources to implement budgeted projects.

The Capital Program office director, in collaboration with the Chief Operating Officer, has completed organizational changes and an assessment of the staffing and resource requirements to execute the remainder of the $4.7 billion construction program without increasing risk to the branch. As indicated in the October 2013 interim report to the Judicial Council, the office was proceeding with critical hires to effectively manage the current program, which now has 32 active projects totaling $3.7 billion with 9 projects in construction totaling $1.6 billion.

This directive was reported as complete in November of 2013. A new director was hired to lead the Capital Program office in July, 2013, as it moves into a substantial management and execution phase with over 32 active projects, requiring adequate staff to ensure the program is delivered on time, within budget, and conforms to quality standards. The director has reviewed the staffing needs to complete program execution and determined that, at this time, 6 additional positions are needed—in addition to the 54 positions in the Capital Program office, to successfully execute the program. The six additional Capital Program office staff needed are:

- A Supervising Budget Analyst of the Business and Finance unit
- A Budget Analyst
- 2 Project Managers, and
- 2 Senior Construction Inspectors.

The office is currently recruiting for the Project Managers and the Budget Analyst.

There is also a need for one position in the Finance Accounting Administration unit, the Supervising Accountant, a vacancy which is essential to fill to expedite invoice processing. In addition to that position the Capital Program office has collaborated with our Finance division leadership to identify the staffing needed to more efficiently move the invoices in order to ensure that our vendors get paid in a timely way to keep the construction program moving forward. As a result, Business Services and Accounting has already filled three key positions and is making progress in reducing the backlog of both contracts and invoicing.

This status for this directive is currently under discussion.

Review Judicial Branch Capital Program Office Staffing Requirements

AOC Directive #139

November 18, 2013 Final Report

1.1 Executive Summary.

The Judicial Council's AOC Restructuring Directive #139 directs the Chief Operating Officer to review the staffing requirements of the Judicial Branch Capital Program Office (the office) given the slowdown in new court construction. This report has been prepared in response to this directive.

The Chief Operating Officer has been reviewing the staffing requirements of the office since October 2012. His collaboration with the recently hired Director of the Judicial Branch Capital Program Office on organizational changes and final staffing requirements are presented in this final report to the Judicial Council. Key findings are as follows:

- 1.1 The construction program is very large in scope – the program currently has 36 active projects valued at $4.4 billion.<sup>1</sup> From 2009 to now, ongoing and one time construction fund redirections and loans have reduced available funding and the associated total scope of the construction program. Program scope reductions include 2 project cancellations, delays to several projects, indefinite delay of 11 projects, and cost reductions to the projects moving forward.

A nearly $5.0 billion construction program, involving 36 projects from the California-Mexico border in the south to the California-Oregon border in the north, is a very large program requiring adequate management to ensure it is delivered on time and within budget, meets quality standards, and avoids problems associated with the complexities of managing a multi-billion dollar construction program across the state.

- 1.2 Ongoing hiring freeze has reduced office staffing – Budget reductions and the resulting hiring freeze that began in 2009 have prevented the office from backfilling vacated positions and hiring additional staff necessary to run the program, which was originally valued at $6.0 billion. The office currently has 56.5 FTE, down from 68 FTE in July 2011.
- 1.3 Pegasus 2012 Audit Report states program was understaffed – the report by the independent outside oversight consultant hired by the Court Facilities Advisory Committee (CFAC) states that there was insufficient staff at the time of their analysis to adequately oversee a $6.0 billion construction program located across the state of California.

---

- 1.4 Original program without delays would have required 80 staff to execute – Based on workload analyses prepared by staff, incorporating metrics consistent with the Pegasus 2012 Audit Report and standard industry practice of care and described in section 2.4 below, the office would have needed 80 staff to successfully oversee the originally planned program, which would have had an estimated 50 active projects in the summer of 2013 if there had been no delays. The office has never had 80 staff dedicated to implementing the capital program. The originally planned program would have needed 23 additional staff today to be properly executed.
- 1.5 Organizational Changes – In September 2013 the office made several organizational changes to streamline management and transfer two staff from another office that were performing work to support the capital program. The changes affect the current FTE by a net increase of one staff due to the recent loss of one staff person.
- 1.6 Reduced program requires 67 staff – Based on workload analyses prepared by staff, incorporating metrics consistent with the Pegasus 2012 Audit Report, the office needs 66 staff to successfully oversee the reduced-scope program of 36 currently active projects. Given the office currently has 56.5 FTEs, another 11 staff are required to manage the current scope of the capital program without increasing risk to the branch.

2.1 Status of Construction Program

Since 2009, $1.7 billion in construction funds—both SB 1732 and SB 1407 funds—have been either loaned or redirected on a one time or ongoing basis to the General Fund or the trial courts. In addition, the FY 2013–2014 Budget Act requires the new Long Beach Courthouse annual payment be funded from SB 1407 rather than the General Fund. These significant changes to the original plan for expenditure of SB 1407 funds has resulted in the Judicial Council canceling 2 projects, directing short-term delayed next phase starts for various projects since FY 2011–2012, indefinitely delaying 11 projects, and mandating cost reductions to all projects that are moving forward.

The scope of the original 59-project program gradually decreased to 45 total projects from when SB 1407 was enacted in 2008 to the present. First, the Judicial Council cancelled 2 projects and delayed the next phase starts of 4 projects in December 2011 to address cash shortfalls projected for FY 2012–2013. In October 2012 the Judicial Council indefinitely delayed 7 projects and forwarded one project to Trial Court Facilities Advisory Committee (then the Trial Court Facility Modifications Working Group) for consideration of funding. The council indefinitely delayed another 4 projects in January 2013. In February 2013 the council delayed the next phase starts of 11 projects due to cash shortfalls projected in FY 2013–2014.

Review Judicial Branch Capital Program Office Staffing Requirements

AOC Directive #139

November 18, 2013

Had no construction funds been redirected from the construction program, it is estimated that as of July 2013 there would be 50 projects underway in design, construction, or warranty. With the projects cancelled or indefinitely delayed, the office now oversees a total of 36 active capital projects, with a total estimated cost of about $4.4 billion. By the end of calendar year 2013, there will be 8 projects in acquisition (one of which is Sacramento, a project indefinitely delayed by the Judicial Council in January 2013 but allowed to complete property purchase), 5 ready to begin design, 8 in design, 11 in construction, and 4 completed projects in the warranty phase. Within the next few months, the 2 additional projects that proceed to construction this year bring the total value of construction currently underway to $1.7 billion.

In the past several years, the office has also managed between 40-60 complex Facility Modification projects and other special projects such as modular facilities for new judgeships, court funded projects to improve space in existing courthouses, and the build-out of court funded lease tenant improvements. Moving forward, the office will scale back its role in Facility Modifications and special projects, overseeing up to 30 larger, complex projects each budget year. The Facility Modification projects that the Judicial Branch Capital Program Office will continue to oversee require a licensed architect to design in compliance with building codes, and require adequate project management and inspection staff to properly execute. These projects include reconfiguration of space for new functions, projects involving a structural component, and projects that require design and engineering to resolve overlapping codes.

2.2 Ongoing hiring freeze has reduced office staffing

The ongoing and one-time loans and redirections from construction funds that began in 2009 resulted in a hiring freeze that started the same year. The hiring freeze severely limited the ability of the office to fill positions that had been, or became, vacated even though the legislature had authorized additional staffing for the program in 2009. For example, during the past 19 months, 7 FTEs have left the office, one person was hired, and 2 staff persons from the Center for Judiciary Education and Research were transferred to the office, for a net reduction of 4 people.

In an effort to augment staff positions from 2009 to 2011, the office hired temporary administrative help and consultant project managers. Additional staff was needed to oversee the original program, the scope of which gradually decreased from December 2011 to its current status, as described above.

2.3 Pegasus 2012 Audit Report indicates program was understaffed

The Court Facilities Advisory Committee, formerly the Court Facilities Working Group, has overseen the scope definition, procurement, execution, and completion of a review and assessment of the Judicial Branch's construction program. The overall objective of the assessment was to evaluate the construction program within the AOC's Office of Court

Construction and Management (OCCM), now managed by the AOC's Judicial Branch Capital Program Office (JBCPO), and to determine opportunities to improve its efficiency and effectiveness. Specifically, the assessment had three objectives: to assess the overall management of the courthouse construction program compared to industry standards and best practices; to assess outcomes of six sample projects at various stages of completion; and to assess organizational structure, staff qualifications, and quality of project consultants, including architects, engineers, and general contractors.

To oversee the procurement of the outside oversight consultant and to make its final selection on behalf of the working group, the working group established its Independent Outside Oversight Consultant Subcommittee, who ultimately selected Pegasus Global Holdings, Inc. (Pegasus). Pegasus is an international consulting firm with extensive experience auditing project management and fiduciary processes in multi-billion dollar capital construction and infrastructure projects. Its clients include state, federal, and local government entities in numerous jurisdictions in the United States, Canada, Europe, and Australia.

The California Capital Construction Program Audit Report produced by Pegasus (Pegasus 2012 audit report) contains 26 findings and 137 recommendations to improve the policies, processes, and procedures of the judicial branch's courthouse construction program.<sup>2</sup> In assessing the organizational structure and staffing of the program, Pegasus found that the program has been understaffed from the beginning and was faced with executing projects immediately with a dedicated, but small, staff. With the enactment of SB 1407 in 2008, the program ballooned from 15 to 59 projects, with the expectation that all projects would advance at the same time.

The Pegasus 2012 audit report states the following:

“... there was insufficient staff to execute all of the functions required for a megaproject...” (Finding VI-F-4.2.6). The report notes that JBCPO Project Managers currently manage two to three or more major projects and several facility modifications projects, in addition to other assignments relating to supporting program wide initiatives.

“From Pegasus-Global's examination of the full responsibilities required under the enabling legislation, the industry best practices, and the interviews conducted at all levels of the AOC and OCCM staff there is simply too much work for the current staff (and in particular the project management staff) working under the current organization structure to successfully manage or control the projects and the Program.”

The organizational structure was addressed by the Judicial Council in their adoption of an AOC-wide realignment plan. In this plan the OCCM was split into two separate offices: the Judicial Branch Capital Program Office and the Office of Real Estate and Facilities Management. This

Judicial Branch Capital Program Office concentrates on capital projects and major facility modifications projects. Certain services, including staffing, are shared between the two offices. The shared services are:

- Business and finance
- Risk management and quality management
- Inspection services
- Project management for facility modifications
- Real estate and environmental services related to acquisition of property

The Capital Program Office is now structured consistent with the recommendations contained in the Pegasus 2012 audit report. However, there is still a staff shortage for the reduced scope program, as presented below.

2.4 Original program without delays would have required 80 staff to execute

As confirmed by the Pegasus 2012 audit report, the AOC never hired adequate staff to successfully execute a $6.0 billion program across the state of California. The Pegasus 2012 audit report provides some guidance on how to adequately staff each project in the program:

“Insofar as the Project Execution Division staff with the exception of large complex projects the Project Manager and the Project Clerk of the Works<sup>3</sup> would be part time, expected to oversee two or more projects simultaneously. For large, complex projects Pegasus-Global recommends that the Project Execution Division staff assigned be full time on those projects.”<sup>4</sup>

The recommended number of staff needed to oversee the original program without any project cancellations for indefinite delays was developed by using several methodologies. These methodologies incorporate Pegasus’s guidance and the industry standard practice of care and are designed to minimize risk to the program owner. Since the key driver to staffing needs is the number of project managers needed to oversee projects, staff first analyzed how many large and small projects can be effectively managed by one project manager using the Pegasus metric referred to above as a guideline. Secondly, staff considered how the program is currently staffed in four office locations (San Francisco, Sacramento, Fresno, and Burbank) and assigned new project managers to projects that currently do not have project managers assigned, based on which projects should logically be managed from one of the four office locations. Lastly, staff

completed a workload analysis that assigned hours to project-specific and program-wide duties to generate a staffing need.

Using the results of these methodologies, it is estimated that an additional 23 staff would have been required to manage the original program without any project cancellations or indefinite delays. More specifically if there had been no project cancellations or indefinite delays, the office would have required—in addition to the current staff—a quality manager, 3 senior construction inspectors, 17 additional project managers, and 2 more budget analysts for a total of 23 more staff. Based on the office's current 56.5 FTE, the office would require a total of 80 staff to manage the original program scope without increasing risk to the branch.

2.5 Organizational Changes

The new office director has collaborated with the Chief Operations Officer to institute several organizational changes to streamline management and incorporate two staff from another office that were performing work to support the capital program. The changes affect each of the office's three functional areas: Business and Planning Services, Design and Construction, and Risk Quality and Compliance. The changes are as follows and affect the current FTE by a net increase of one staff due to the recent loss of one staff person:

- 2.5.1 Although there continues to be a robust effort associated with ongoing work and future construction, a leveling off on new projects at this time has facilitated the elimination of the vacant supervising facilities planner position in the Business and Planning Services unit.
- 2.5.2 With the construction program entering into the execution stage—where project management is at the forefront of the program—the assistant division director position for Design and Construction unit has been eliminated, and the four primary managers will report directly to the office director, facilitating timely elevation and resolution of issues.
- 2.5.3 The Chief Operational Officer's review of units under his management identified two staff in the Center for Judicial Education and Research that were supporting the capital program nearly full time. These two staff persons were transferred to the capital program office's Risk Quality and Compliance unit in September 2013 to align staff functions with program management.

2.6 Reduced 36-project program requires 67 staff

Staff has applied this same analysis—described in section 2.4 above—to the current program scope to determine the current staff requirement given the reduction in active projects due to cancellations and indefinite delays. Today, to avoid increasing risk to the branch, the current program requires 11 additional staff as follows: a quality manager, 2 senior construction inspectors, 6 additional project managers, and 2 more budget analysts. Based on the office's current 56.5 FTE, the office requires a total of 67 staff to adequately staff the current program scope of 36 active projects.

The 11 additional staff required to manage the program without increasing risk to the branch include 3 crucial positions to support construction inspections which are approved and in process to hire, and 7 other essential positions, as follows:

2.6.1 A total of three crucial inspection staff in the Risk Quality and Compliance unit. The office has only two on-staff construction inspectors to oversee all contract inspections for 11 capital projects in construction and numerous facility modifications projects across the state. To ensure necessary oversight during construction of current and new, approved court facilities, external recruitments to fill vacancies are moving forward for a supervisor/manager and two additional senior construction inspectors in the Risk Quality and Compliance unit.

2.6.2 A total of 8 essential positions to support program execution. These include:

2.6.2.1 A total of six project managers to support ongoing capital outlay projects. This includes 1 recently vacated position and 5 new hires. The program is moving into a period of substantial management and execution of projects in design and construction, with all but seven projects that have not currently acquired sites. At the direction of the Judicial Council, funding for design starts for 5 of these 7 projects has been requested for FY 2014–2015. The projects in design and construction require adequate project management to ensure they are delivered on time and within budget, and conform to quality standards.

2.6.2.2 A total of two budget analysts, one senior budget analyst and one budget analyst. The senior budget analyst is needed to support the updating and maintenance of the four facility fund condition statements which are regularly updated for internal planning and forecasting and for formal submissions to the state Department of Finance and the legislature at every key budget milestone each year. The budget analyst is essential to process utility invoices and accounts receivable invoicing and collection.

In summary, the reduction in program scope—from 50 active projects and 40-60 annual facility modifications and special projects to 36 active projects and up to 30 annual facility modifications and special projects—has reduced the additional need for staff in the Judicial Branch Capital Program Office from approximately 23 to 11.

Notes:

1. Estimated project status in July 2013 if there had been no delays to projects. Based on July 2011 schedule prepared by JBCPO.
2. Based on analysis consistent with Pegasus and industry standards of care. Excluded from this staff requirement are 3 additional staff needed in Budget and Finance team and Risk Management to support the OREFM. If these three positions were filled, capacity of the JBCPO staff would be indirectly increased. These 3 positions are: 1 Supervising Budget Analyst for the Business and Planning unit, and 1 Health & Safety Risk Analyst and 1 administrative support position for the Risk Quality and Compliance Management unit.
3. AOC employees and consulting project managers retained for program and project management services during the acquisition, design phases, or construction phases are part of the AOC staff count. Moving forward, staff count excludes hiring firms for design services, inspection services, materials testing, and construction management services. Note that Budget and Finance staff and Risk Management staff also serve the OREFM.
4. There are 60 authorized and established positions for the Judicial Branch Capital Program Office. This includes two positions transferred from Center for Judicial Education and Research.

Information on Judicial Council Directives

Council Directive 140

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts to ensure that the employment of temporary or other staff to circumvent a hiring freeze is not permitted. The Administrative Director must review all temporary staff assignments and eliminate those that are being used to replace positions subject to the hiring freeze. Temporary employees should be limited to periods not exceeding six months and should be used only in limited circumstances of demonstrated need, such as in the case of an emergency or to provide a critical skill set not available through the use of authorized employees.

SEC Recommendation 7-69

The use of temporary or other staff to circumvent the hiring freeze should cease.

The AOC has established guidelines to further restrict the use of agency temporary workers across the organization. Effective July 1, 2013, agency temporary staff can only be utilized under three circumstances:

- 1) The temporary assignment must be identified as a short-term (less than six months), critical, project-based assignment, not backfilling a vacant position.
- 2) The temporary assignment is backfilling an approved extended leave of absence and the position is supporting a critical core function.
- 3) The agency temporary worker is backfilling a position supporting a critical core function while the approval to conduct recruitment for the position is going through the council exemption process. The maximum duration for these assignments is three months.

Agency temporary worker assignments have a maximum duration of no more than six months and shall not continue past June 30 of each fiscal year, regardless of the assignment start date, without granting a request to extend.

If the assignment begins less than six months before June 30, the requesting office may formally request to extend the assignment beginning on July 1. The total timeframe the agency temporary worker may be on assignment with the council shall not exceed six months.

The Chief Administrative Officer is required to review and approve any requests to employ a temporary worker for longer than six months. Additionally, there is an extensive criteria that must be met prior to the review by the Executive Office who review each and every request.

PENDING IMPLEMENTATION

The ongoing review of requests to hire agency temporary employees as well a review of the duration of the assignments will continue as needed by the organization. Additionally, cost benefit analysis will now be utilized prior to hiring a temporary worker or contractors in response to a recommendation from the California State Auditor.

ASSESSMENT OF IMPLEMENTATION

As of April 30, 2013, the AOC had 30.5 agency temporary workers, compared to a peak of 141 in fiscal year 2010-2011. As of March 2013, this number has decreased to 8 agency temporary workers.

In its audit report dated January 7, 2015, the of the California State Auditor recommended that council implements a policy that requires it to conduct a cost-benefit analysis for using temporary workers, contractors, or consultants instead of state employees before employing temporary workers, contractors or consultants to do the work of AOC employees.

Judicial Council Personnel Policy 3.3–Job Categories was modified to include a requirement that prior to retaining a temporary worker council staff must conduct both a cost-benefit and critical-need analysis. “Temporary worker” includes temporary agency workers and independent contractors. The policy includes an annual reporting mechanism to the Judicial Council. Guidelines for conducting the cost benefit analysis are being developed and will be applied retroactively to existing temporary agency and independent contractors. The council anticipates that this recommendation will be fully implemented in the third quarter of 2015.

Additionally, the California State Auditor recommended that council follow its policies and procedures limiting the period of time it can employ temporary workers, and develop a similar policy to limit the use of contractors to a reasonable period of time, but no more than one year.

Judicial Council Personnel Policy 3.3–Job Categories was amended to specify that temporary agency workers may not exceed six-months in duration, and independent contractors may not exceed one year in duration unless preapproved by the Chief Administrative Officer and/or Administrative Director. To ensure that the Judicial Council has adequate information, the policy includes an annual reporting mechanism to the governing body for any exceptions.

AOC Utilization of Agency Temporary Employees

Historical Information

The Administrative Office of the Courts (AOC) currently utilizes a single-vendor master contract, with low negotiated rates, to provide agency temporary staffing services. The AOC's practice of using a primary, contracted vendor has been in place since 1999. The Human Resources Services Office (HRSO), through its master contract, monitors agency temporary usage, controls costs and oversees the temporary staffing process.

In February 2008, when a limited number of recruitments were permitted, hiring managers began to employ an increased number of agency temporary staff to offset increasing workloads brought about by a lack of staffing resources. Agency temporary usage at the AOC hit its peak at 141 temporary assignments during fiscal year 2010-2011. During this time, the approval to employ an agency temporary worker was at the discretion of the Division Director and Executive Office.

Recent Use of Agency Temporary Employees

Beginning in late 2012, the AOC began to reduce its reliance on agency temporary staff and took the first steps by converting 32 temporary staff to regular employee positions.

| MONTH  | COUNT |
|--------|-------|
| 12-Apr | 82.0  |
| 12-May | 71.0  |
| 12-Jun | 56.0  |
| 12-Jul | 55.0  |
| 12-Aug | 54.0  |
| 12-Sep | 51.0  |
| 12-Oct | 51.2  |
| 12-Nov | 47.1  |
| 12-Dec | 17.5  |
| 13-Jan | 20.5  |
| 13-Feb | 24.5  |
| 13-Mar | 26.5  |
| 13-Apr | 30.5  |

In January 2013, HRSO, in conjunction with the Chief Administrative Officer, further restricted the process by implementing new parameters for securing agency temporary workers funded through the master contract. These parameters include:

- The temporary assignment must be less than six months in length, critical, and established on a project-only basis; or

The temporary assignment is backfilling a position in which the incumbent is on an approved extended leave of absence and only if the position is supporting a critical core function.

Before the agency temporary worker is funded through the master contract, the request must be reviewed by HRSO to determine if one of the above criteria is met.

Next Steps

While the need for agency temporary staffing exists, it is the goal of the AOC to implement stringent guidelines to decrease its dependence on agency temporary workers for long-term assignments.

These guidelines have been outlined in the attached document. The guidelines contain three requirements to determine whether an agency temporary worker may be brought on an assignment. It also includes up to a six-month maximum timeframe that agency temporary workers may remain on assignment.

In addition to addressing concerns raised by Judicial Council Directives 47 and 140, the maximum six-month timeframe was implemented to avoid a temporary agency worker potentially applying for California Public Employees Retirement System (CalPERS) membership under the common law employment factors. One of the requirements for CalPERS membership eligibility is that an individual must work more than 1000 hours, or equivalent to six months, for a state agency or state contracting agency.

The AOC will inform staff and apply these standards beginning July 1, 2013. The AOC will continue to assign HRSO oversight and enforcement responsibilities.

The AOC recently completed the solicitation of a new vendor to manage the agency temporary program. Effective, July 1, 2013, the AOC will initiate a master contract for use by the state judicial branch. In prior years, the master contract was limited to only the AOC. Under the new master contract, the Supreme Court, the Courts of Appeal, AOC, Habeas Corpus Resource Center, and the Commission on Judicial Performance will now be able to utilize agency temporary workers under a single contract.

Agency Temporary Worker Guidelines and Procedures

These guidelines and procedures outline criteria for the use of agency temporary workers as a reasonable resource to address staffing needs, provide guidance on how to complete the exemption request form, and provide assistance for the supervision of the agency temporary workers if the agency temporary worker request is granted.

I. DEFINITION

Agency temporary workers are not employees of the Administrative Office of the Courts (AOC). An agency temporary worker is an employee of an external employment agency; agency temporary workers receive compensation directly from the employment agency and carry out specific assignments. They are not eligible for any AOC benefits (sick leave, vacation, paid holidays, retirement, training, service credit, compensatory time, and transit passes, etc.), salary increases, reclassification or shift differential pay.

Agency temporary workers are hourly employees and must be paid for all hours worked, including overtime pay pursuant to applicable state and federal laws.

Agency temporary workers are not granted preferential treatment based on their temporary assignment with the AOC if they apply for an AOC employee position.

An agency temporary worker may be considered for employment as an AOC employee after working the minimum hours as governed by the current AOC Master Temporary Staffing Services Contract. All agency temporary workers must meet the minimum qualifications of the AOC classification in order to be considered for employment.

II. DURATION OF AGENCY TEMPORARY WORKER ASSIGNMENTS

Agency temporary worker assignments have a maximum duration of no more than six months and shall not continue past June 30 of each fiscal year, regardless of the assignment start date, without granting a request to extend.

If the assignment begins less than six months before June 30, the requesting office may formally request to extend the assignment beginning on July 1. The total timeframe the agency temporary worker may be on assignment with the AOC shall not exceed six months.

III. TYPES OF AGENCY TEMPORARY WORKER ASSIGNMENTS

1. Short-Term, Project-Based Assignments typically involve assistance on a special project (i.e., not for regularly assigned work).

Under short-term, project-based assignments:

- The agency temporary worker is not backfilling a position vacancy due to a planned separation or retirement;
  - The agency temporary worker receives compensation based on contracted rates in the Temporary Worker Salary Classification Schedule, as defined in the AOC Master Temporary Staffing Services Contract;
  - A former agency temporary worker may begin work on a new assignment with the AOC after a six-month break; and
  - No individual who retired under the California Public Employees' Retirement System (CalPERS) may work for the AOC as an agency temporary worker within 180 days of retirement.
2. Backfilling an approved Extended Leave of Absence is allowable when the incumbent is on an approved extended leave of absence and the incumbent supports an AOC critical core function.

Under backfilling of approved extended leave of absence assignments:

- The agency temporary worker is not backfilling a position vacancy due to a planned separation or retirement;
  - The agency temporary worker receives compensation based on contracted rates in the Temporary Worker Salary Classification Schedule, as defined in the master agreement;
  - A former agency temporary worker may begin work on a new assignment with the AOC after a six-month break; and
  - No individual who retired under CalPERS may work for the AOC as an agency temporary worker within 180 days of retirement.
3. Backfilling a Position Vacancy involves the use of an agency temporary worker to backfill a position that has been identified as supporting an AOC critical core function. Under backfilling a position vacancy assignments:
    - The agency temporary worker is backfilling the position while the approval to recruit for the position is being determined.

- The agency temporary worker receives compensation based on contracted rates in the Temporary Worker Salary Classification Schedule as defined in the master agreement;
- The agency temporary worker's assignment for back filling a vacancy has a maximum duration of no more than three months.
- A former agency temporary worker may begin work on a new assignment with the AOC after a six-month break; and
- No individual who retired CalPERS may work for the AOC as an agency temporary worker within 180 days of retirement.

IV. CRITERIA FOR REQUESTING AN AGENCY TEMPORARY WORKER

Before an agency temporary worker request is considered for approval, the requesting office should clearly demonstrate that:

- a. The agency temporary worker is an essential staffing need for a project-based assignment, with a duration of no more than six months, and the specific work assignment cannot be performed by regular employees;

OR

- b. The agency temporary worker is backfilling a position supporting a critical core function when the incumbent is on an approved extended leave of absence. The maximum duration of six months is still applicable, regardless of the incumbent's time on leave.

OR

- c. The agency temporary worker is backfilling a position supporting a critical core function while the approval to conduct recruitment for the position is going through the AOC exemption process. The maximum duration for these assignments is three months.

V. PROCEDURE FOR REQUESTING AN AGENCY TEMPORARY WORKER

Offices must submit an exemption form to request an agency temporary worker. The Chief Administrative Officer ultimately has approval authority over all requests for agency temporary workers.

To submit a request for an agency temporary assignment, the requesting office must complete the following two forms and provide them to the Human Resources Services Office (HRSO):

1. Request for Exemption - Temporary Help (link)
2. Temporary Agency Work Order (link)

HRSO reviews the forms to ensure that the criteria for an agency temporary worker assignment have been met and that all sections of the exemption and work order forms have been accurately completed.

If the request successfully meets the criteria, HRSO forwards the forms to the Chief Administrative Officer for final approval. HRSO then informs the requesting office of the Chief Administrative Officer's decision. Under all circumstances, HRSO initiates contact with the agency; requesting offices may not directly contact the agency or prospective agency temporary workers.

VI. PROCEDURE FOR TERMINATION OF ASSIGNMENT OF AN AGENCY TEMPORARY WORKER

Hiring managers should contact HRSO before communicating assignment terminations with an agency temporary worker. HRSO will contact the agency temporary worker's employment agency and then provide guidance to the hiring manager on next steps.

VII. OFFICE PROCEDURES FOR AGENCY TEMPORARY WORKERS

The office requesting an agency temporary worker is responsible for determining cubicle space, securing a phone with Business Services, and computer and network setup with the Information Technology Services Office HelpDesk.

VIII. AOC SUPERVISOR RESPONSIBILITY

Only AOC employees in classifications designated as supervisor or above may serve as the "supervisor" of the agency temporary worker, with tasks such as:

- Approving weekly timecards;
- Approving any needed travel and lodging expenses and/or following AOC policies and procedures;
- Establishing guidelines regarding worker expectations and conduct (as long as they are reasonable and do not conflict with the AOC agency temporary guidelines); and
- Communicating and enforcing AOC safety practices.

  - (2) Part Time
  - (3) Intermittent
- (D) Exempt and Nonexempt Status
- (E) Other Temporary Workers
  - (1) Temporary Agency Workers
  - (2) Independent Contractors or Outside Consultants

(A) Purpose of Policy

This policy sets forth the employment classifications to guide employees about their employment status and benefit eligibility.

(B) Regular and Limited-Term (Temporary) Employment

(1) Regular Status

Regular employees are those employees in Judicial Council positions that receive renewed funding each fiscal year.

(2) Limited-Term (Temporary) Status

Limited-term employees (also known as temporary employees) are hired by the Judicial Council for a particular project or for a limited duration. Funding for this type of position is generally scheduled to end on the last day of the fiscal year, or the appointment may be authorized only for a specific period of time. Some limited-term positions may be extended beyond the initial expiration date if funding is available. Other categories of temporary employment include the following:

- “Special consultant,” “graduate student assistant,” and “student assistant” are specifically designated temporary classifications (the special consultant classification is generally applied to individuals who work on special projects that require particular expertise). Appointment to these positions is limited to a specific period of time, which is typically the length of a project or, in the case of graduate student assistants and student assistants, through the end of a school term.
- Retired persons may return to work as “retired annuitants” on a temporary basis as long as they do not work beyond 960 hours in any fiscal year. For more information about requirements and restrictions on the appointment of retired annuitants, please refer to Policy 3.11(B).

Limited-term employees may not be eligible for certain benefits. For more information about eligibility for benefits, please refer to Employee Benefits, Chapter 6.

(C) Time Base

In addition to having a regular or limited-term status, all employees are designated with a full-time, part-time, or intermittent time base.

(1) Full Time

“Full time” means that the employee is scheduled to work a minimum of 40 hours per week.

(2) Part Time

“Part time” means that the employee is scheduled to work less than 40 hours per week. The term “ratio to full time” is used to describe a part-time employee’s time base and refers to percentage of time, relative to a full-time schedule, that an employee is regularly scheduled to work. Examples of less than full-time employment include four-fifths time, half time, etc. An individual who is scheduled to work less than half time may not be eligible for certain benefits. For more information about eligibility for benefits, please refer to Employee Benefits, Chapter 6.

(3) Intermittent

“Intermittent” means that the employee has no established work schedule and works on an “as-needed” basis. The number of hours that an intermittent employee works often varies from one pay period to the next. Cumulative hours for intermittent employees must not exceed 1,500 per calendar year. Eligibility for certain benefits may be limited for intermittent employees; please refer to Employee Benefits, Chapter 6 for more information.

(D) Exempt and Nonexempt Status

“Exempt employees” are employees who are classified by the Judicial Council as exempt from the overtime provisions of the federal Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA). “Nonexempt employees” are employees who are eligible to be compensated for overtime work in accordance with the FLSA. Overtime pay provisions are set forth in Hours of Work, policy 4.4.

(E) Other Temporary Workers

Temporary agency workers or independent contractors (also known as outside consultants) may be retained by the Judicial Council on a temporary basis.

(1) Temporary Agency Workers

Human Resources maintains contracts with approved temporary employment agencies to provide short-term support. The duration of a temporary agency worker is dependent upon the purpose of the assignment.

The Chief Administrative Officer may grant exceptions to the duration limitation for agency workers for extreme circumstances affecting or impacting critical operations.

(2) Independent Contractors or Outside Consultants

These individuals are employed by an outside firm, are self-employed, or are a group of individuals established as a business to provide expertise and services in a specialized field. An independent contractor must satisfy IRS regulations defining independent contractor status.

For more information on retaining a temporary agency worker, please contact Human Resources. For more information about the requirements governing independent contractors, please refer to the Judicial Branch Contracting Manual.

Temporary agency workers and independent contractors or consultants are not Judicial Council employees. If such workers are interested in employment with the Judicial Council, they must follow the guidelines for external applicants as outlined in Hiring, policy 3.1\(A\).

This directive is now considered complete as follows:

Effective October 1, 2012, the reporting structure of Governmental Affairs was changed as part of a new organizational structure that was approved by the Judicial Council. This new structure reduced the JCC Executive Team to four positions (Administrative Director, Chief of Staff, Chief Operating Officer, and Chief Administrative Officer) and realigned and renamed existing divisions into offices housed under one of three newly created divisions (Judicial Council and Court Leadership Services Division, Judicial and Court Operations Services Division, and Judicial and Court Administrative Services Division). As part of the new structure, Governmental Affairs reports directly to the Administrative Director.

Additionally, on August 21, 2015 the JCC completed its Classification and Compensation Study that resulted in the implementation of a new salary structure for the organization. The compensation phase of the project followed the classification portion of the study that began in December 2013 and ended in March of 2015, when JCC staff received their new classification specifications. All positions in the JCC were evaluated, and JCC employees were subsequently assigned a classification and provided with information as to whether their salary fell within, above, or below the new salary ranges employee classifications.

The results of the classification study validated that the duties of the Director of Governmental Affairs were appropriate for the "Director" classification specification.

This recommendation serves as an important reminder that the fiscal and policy impacts of legislation on the courts needs to continue to be an important concern of the PCLC in making their decisions.

Thus, as reported in October of 2012, Governmental Affairs advocates were reminded and directed to ensure that they seek both the formal and informal participation of the trial and appellate courts on the impact legislative and budget proposals have on their courts through the existing committee structure. All PCLC reports should continue to include the efforts made to obtain the courts’ impact analysis and clearly state that impact on the courts. Advocates continue the practice of inviting advisory committee representatives to participate in PCLC meetings when deemed appropriate by the Chair. Finally, although there are no findings in the SEC report regarding seeking the participation of other branch stakeholders on legislation and budgetary issues, Governmental Affairs advocates were reminded to continue to assist the appropriate Advisory Committees to ensure that other stakeholder impacts and interests are appropriately considered and presented to PCLC in their reports.

|                                     |  |                          |                        |
|-------------------------------------|--|--------------------------|------------------------|
| <input type="checkbox"/>            | IMPLEMENTED WITH NO FURTHER ACTION REQUIRED/NEEDED | <input type="checkbox"/> | UNABLE TO IMPLEMENT    |
| <input checked="" type="checkbox"/> | IMPLEMENTED AND ONGOING                            | <input type="checkbox"/> | PENDING IMPLEMENTATION |
| <input type="checkbox"/>            | IMPLEMENTED BUT IN PROGRESS                        |                          |                        |

Governmental Affairs advocates will ensure that on an ongoing basis that PCLC is fully apprised of varying viewpoint of the courts, court executive officers and judges in determining legislative positions and proposals.

Policy Coordination and Liaison Committee

The role of the Policy Coordination and Liaison Committee (PCLC) is to represent the council before the legislative and executive branches of government, build consensus with stakeholders and individuals outside the branch and coordinate an annual plan for communication and interaction with other agencies and entities.

The charge and duties of the committee, set forth in California Rules of Court, rule 10.12, including the following:

- 1) Take positions on behalf of the council on pending legislative bills, after evaluating input from the council advisory bodies and the courts, provided that the position is consistent with the council's established policies and precedents;
- 2) Make recommendations to the council on all proposals for council-sponsored legislation and on an annual legislative agenda after evaluating input from council advisory bodies and the courts;
- 3) Represent the council's position before the Legislature and other bodies or agencies and acting as liaison with other governmental entities, the bar, the judiciary, and the public regarding council-sponsored legislation, pending legislative bills, and the council's legislative positions and agendas;
- 4) Build consensus on issues of importance to the judicial branch consistent with the council's strategic plan with entities and individuals outside the branch;
- 5) Develop an annual plan for communication and interaction with other branches and levels of government, components of the judicial system, the bar, the media, and the public; and
- 6) Direct any advisory committee to provide it with analysis or recommendations on pending or proposed legislation.

Guidelines for Development of Judicial Council–sponsored Legislation

This summary describes the typical process the Judicial Council follows when developing and approving proposals for sponsored legislation. It also describes how Governmental Affairs advocates for enactment of these proposals in the Legislature.

I. Judicial Council Process

A. Sources of Legislative Proposals

Because it often takes several months to fully develop a legislative proposal, the process should begin early in the year. (See the Judicial Council–sponsored Legislation Calendar.) Judicial Council advisory committees are well situated to identify and develop proposals for statutory change. Committee members have extensive expertise in the committee’s subject area and often have ideas for improving statutory law. In addition, advisory committees may receive requests for council sponsorship of legislative proposals from outside sources.

Suggestions for how an advisory committee may wish to identify proposals for council–sponsored legislation include:

- The advisory committee chair may devote a portion of one or more meetings each year to identifying legislative proposals for the following year’s legislative session.
- The advisory committee may establish a working group or task force composed of committee members responsible for reviewing the relevant codes, or specific subjects or issues within those codes, to identify potential legislation.
- Advisory committees may receive legislative proposals from outside sources. When a person or organization submits a legislative proposal to the Judicial Council, staff forwards the proposal to the appropriate advisory committee and Governmental Affairs staff for consideration.

B. Advisory Committee Process for Developing Proposals

This section describes the steps an advisory committee takes to develop and review legislative proposals for substantive merit.

1. Assess Viability of Proposal – For each legislative proposal, the advisory committee takes the following actions:

- The advisory committee, in consultation with Governmental Affairs staff, determines a time frame for consideration of the proposal, keeping in mind

the September/October deadline for submission of legislative proposals to PCLC.

- If the advisory committee rejects a proposal submitted by an outside source, committee staff will notify the proponent of that action.
- If the advisory committee accepts or modifies a proposal from an outside source, or decides to recommend sponsorship of an internally generated proposal, the committee proceeds to the next steps.

2. Coordination with Governmental Affairs – Advisory committee staff will work with Governmental Affairs staff to coordinate work on all aspects of the proposals.

3. Review and Analyze – Advisory committees review proposals for substantive merit before transmitting them to PCLC. A typical analysis of a proposal should include:

- A description of the problem to be addressed, including its scope.
- A description of how the problem affects the judicial branch.
- A description of the proposed solution.
- A discussion of any alternative solutions, including an analysis of why the recommended solution is preferable.
- A discussion of any minority viewpoints.
- A description of any foreseeable problems with the proposed solution.
- Draft language for the proposed legislation.
- A determination whether the Judicial Council and/or the Legislature should give the proposal urgent consideration and the reasons for this.

A worksheet that advisory committees may use for laying out this analysis and other important considerations can be found on page 16.

4. Evaluate Sponsorship Criteria – Once an advisory committee determines that a particular proposal has merit, the committee should consider certain criteria in assessing whether Judicial Council sponsorship is appropriate and desirable. Limited resources, competing priorities, and political realities impose practical limitations on the council's ability to sponsor every worthwhile legislative proposal presented. The advisory committee and Governmental Affairs should jointly consider each of the following questions:

- Is the proposal within the Judicial Council's purview?

Council-sponsored measures should involve only those issues that are central to the council's mission and goals as stated in the Judicial Council's Strategic Plan.

- Should the proposal be addressed through the Judicial Council's rulemaking authority rather than by a change in statute?

The council prefers to implement changes through rules of court wherever appropriate.

- Is the Judicial Council the best sponsor?

The advisory committee and Governmental Affairs may determine that a proposal more closely serves the mission or objectives of another organization such as the State Bar. A Judicial Council-sponsored proposal should address issues fundamental to the administration of justice and broadly serve the needs of the courts statewide.

- What political factors are associated with the proposal?

Governmental Affairs is responsible for providing advice about the political factors associated with a proposal.

5. Circulate for Comment– If an advisory committee wishes to circulate a proposal for comment, the committee staff consults with Governmental Affairs. If it is determined that the proposal is appropriate for circulation, the committee submits the proposal to PCLC for consideration. If PCLC agrees with the advisory committee's recommendation, the proposal may be circulated for public comment. After the comment deadline, committee staff and Governmental Affairs jointly review the comments. Advisory committee staff then summarizes and presents the comments to the committee. Following consideration of the comments, the advisory committee may modify the proposal based on the comments, recommend adoption of the proposal as originally presented, or recommend non-adoption based on the comments received.

6. Advisory Committee Action – Upon completion of the review procedures and consideration of the evaluation criteria above, the advisory committee may adopt one of the following actions:

- Approve the proposal as submitted.
- Approve the proposal with modifications.
- Reject the proposal. The advisory committee should inform the source of the proposal of this decision.

If the advisory committee approves the proposal, the committee forwards the proposal to PCLC for consideration. Final proposals must be submitted to PCLC using the template for memos to Judicial Council internal committees by the September/October deadline in order to be considered for Judicial Council sponsorship during the following legislative year. All advisory committee proposals submitted to PCLC are referred to Governmental Affairs, which may prepare a separate analysis and recommendation for PCLC.

C. Policy Coordination and Liaison Committee Action

In October, PCLC will review the proposal(s), the advisory committee recommendation(s), and any analyses and recommendations prepared by Governmental Affairs. PCLC may recommend the proposal for Judicial Council sponsorship and forward it to the Judicial Council, send it back to the advisory committee for further consideration, or take other action as necessary. If PCLC modifies or rejects the proposal, Governmental Affairs will return the proposal to the submitting advisory committee. The advisory committee may either accept PCLC's action or request that the full council review PCLC's recommendation.

D. Judicial Council Action

The sponsored-legislation proposal is presented by PCLC to the Judicial Council in December for consideration. The Judicial Council reviews the proposal, along with PCLC's recommendation contained in a report prepared by Governmental Affairs. Once the council approves a proposal, it becomes "sponsored" legislation. If the Judicial Council does not approve the proposal for sponsorship, or takes some other action on the proposal, Governmental Affairs will communicate the action to the submitting advisory committee.

E. Delegation of authority to PCLC to sponsor legislative proposals on behalf of the council

The Judicial Council has delegated to PCLC the authority to take positions to sponsor legislative proposals on behalf of the council when time is of the essence. This situation most often will arise in the context of the budget and related “trailer bill language.” Acting under this delegation, PCLC notifies the chairs of the Executive and Planning Committee and the Rules and Projects Committee of any PCLC meetings at which such actions will be considered so that they may participate if available. PCLC is also required to notify all other Judicial Council members, if feasible, of the intended action. After acting under this delegation, PCLC is required to notify the Judicial Council of all actions taken.

II. Advocacy Process

A. Legislative Author

Governmental Affairs staff will seek a legislator to introduce the council–sponsored proposal. An appropriate author for the bill is one who:

- Has substantial experience with the subject of the bill; often the author is the chair or a member of the policy committee with subject-matter jurisdiction over the bill.
- Understands Judicial Council needs and objectives.
- Has experience with the legislative process.
- Is an effective negotiator with members of both parties.

B. Governmental Affairs Responsibilities

Governmental Affairs acts as the primary advocate for Judicial Council–sponsored legislation. Responsibilities include, among other things:

- Preparing background material for the bill, including analyses for the author. The analyses include a description of the problem the bill seeks to address, an explanation of how the bill corrects that problem, the likely supporters and opponents of the bill, questions the bill raises that may need further research, and any other information that explains the issue.
- Communicating information about the bill to the appropriate legislative committee with subject-matter jurisdiction. This means working extensively with committee staff as well as the legislators who are members of those committees. In moving through the legislative process, a bill will be heard by at least one policy committee (such as the Judiciary Committee), and, if appropriate, a fiscal committee, before being debated and voted upon by the full membership on the floor of each house.

- Coordinating with supporters to build a broad coalition in support of the bill.
- Coordinating the content and timing of correspondence between all supporters and the Legislature.
- Negotiating with the proposal's opponents to determine whether amendments can eliminate opposition and still achieve the council's objectives.
- Meeting with the Governor and/or his or her staff to advocate that the bill be signed into law.

Formulating a Position on Pending Legislation (not sponsored by Judicial Council)

The Judicial Council, acting through the Policy Coordination and Liaison Committee (PCLC), strives to improve the administration of justice by representing the interests of the judicial branch to the Legislature, the executive branch, other entities involved in the legislative process or interested in the judiciary, and the general public.

The Judicial Council supports the integrity and independence of the judicial branch and seeks to ensure that judicial procedures enhance efficiency and access to the courts. The council generally does not take a position on substantive law/policy. However, the council may take a position on legislation that involve issues central to the council's mission and goals as stated in the Judicial Council's Strategic Plan. The council may also take a position on an apparent issue of substantive law if issues presented directly affect court administration or negatively affect existing judicial services by imposing unrealistic burdens on the judicial branch.

The following are procedures Governmental Affairs uses in developing recommendations for and carrying out PCLC and council directives regarding legislation.

Positions on Legislation

Governmental Affairs reviews all introduced and amended legislation to determine whether a bill is of interest to the judicial branch. For each bill of interest, staff determines whether the council is likely to take, or may want to take a position on the bill. One or more council advisory committees (or subcommittees) within the appropriate subject area review each bill on which the council may want to take a position. The advisory committees either recommend a position or recommend that the council take no position.

Governmental Affairs presents bills on which an advisory committee recommends a position to PCLC for determination of a council position. Additionally, staff may also choose to bring a bill before PCLC on which an advisory committee has recommended no position. Staff presents each bill to PCLC with an analysis that includes a summary of the bill, a recommended position from one or more advisory committees and, if different, the Governmental Affairs recommendation, the rationale for the recommendation(s), positions the council has taken on related bills, fiscal and workload impacts, and other relevant information.

The council has established several positions PCLC may take on a bill. These positions do not indicate the relative strength of the council's support or opposition, but the aims of Governmental Affairs advocacy efforts. The positions are:

- 1) Oppose: An oppose position may be taken on a bill that conflicts with established council policies, and for which obvious changes would not resolve the conflict.

- 2) Oppose unless amended (or unless funded): This position may be taken on a bill that the council will oppose unless identified amendments are taken to address those provisions that conflict with council policy, or unless funding issues are resolved.
- 3) Neutral: A neutral position taken on a bill the substance of which does not implicate council policy, but on which technical corrections would improve the measure.
- 4) Support in concept: This position may be taken on a bill that, in concept, furthers council policy, but that is not yet drafted in sufficient detail for the council to support.
- 5) Support if amended (or if funded): This position may be taken on a bill that, with specified amendments or funding, would further the council's policies. Absent the amendments or necessary funding the council position is neutral.
- 6) Support: Position taken on a bill that furthers council policy.
- 7) No position: PCLC may choose to take no position on a bill that addresses substantive issues on which the council takes no position, though the measure may affect the courts.

PCLC may also combine several of the above positions. PCLC may also provide instruction to Governmental Affairs to do further research or work with the author prior to taking a position on a bill.

PCLC Meeting Schedule and Agenda

PCLC meets regularly during the legislative session, usually by conference call. Beginning in late February or early March, the committee sets a schedule of meetings at least every three weeks. If a meeting is not needed, Governmental Affairs will notify PCLC members by e-mail of the cancellation. Late in the legislative session, and during budget negotiations, it is sometimes necessary to schedule several meetings on short notice to discuss or resolve late-breaking issues. All PCLC meetings must be in compliance with California Rule of Court, Rule 10.75 governing meetings of advisory bodies.

Governmental Affairs prepares a written analysis of each bill for PCLC. Governmental Affairs may place bills that do not appear to require discussion or deliberation on PCLC's consent calendar. The consent calendar saves the committee time by eliminating the need to review bills that are consistent with clearly established council policies and positions. However, any committee member may remove an item from the consent calendar to discuss the bill's merits or the recommended action.

Bills that are on the discussion agenda include those that require discussion, and those bills on which the staff recommendation differs from the recommendation of an advisory committee or when the recommendations from two or more advisory committees differ. In the latter instances, staff will request that a representative of the advisory committee(s) participate in the PCLC meeting. The representatives will present the advisory committee's views, and take questions from PCLC members. PCLC may then excuse the guest and deliberate further and prior to taking action.

Legislative Advocacy

Once PCLC adopts a position on a bill, it is the position of the Judicial Council. That position and associated policies become the cornerstone of Governmental Affairs advocacy efforts. The adopted position is presented in subsequent negotiating sessions, discussions with interested parties, and meetings with legislators. A letter setting forth the position and policies is sent to the bill's author, legislative committee members, and other interested parties.

Generally, PCLC's initial guidance and position is sufficient to direct Governmental Affairs advocacy throughout the legislative process. Occasionally, as a bill progresses or is amended, staff will request further direction from PCLC because of a particular bill's significance, complexity, the sensitivity of an issue, or the direction taken by the amendments. PCLC may be asked to reconsider the matter at a subsequent meeting.

Coordination with other groups

The Judicial Council advances its position on legislation most successfully when it allies itself with other entities such as county government representatives, law enforcement, attorneys, and consumer advocates. Governmental Affairs will work to develop coalitions on issues of common interest. These coalitions often last for years, effectively supporting and opposing a variety of bills. For example, the council's efforts regarding trial court facilities legislation involved close coordination with the California State Association of Counties. Other groups with which the council has long-standing working coalitions include the Consumer Attorneys of California, the Bench-Bar Coalition, California Defense Counsel, the California Judges Association (CJA), the State Bar of California, and others. These and other working relationships have evolved during many years of cooperative effort.

On most court-related issues, Governmental Affairs maintains close contact with representatives of CJA and the State Bar. Additionally, Governmental Affairs confers regularly with the California Court Association Legislation Committee (CCALC) to discuss or request analytical information about pending legislation with members of the court community. The CCALC members are court employees who provide vital input related to the operational impact of proposed legislation.

Legislative fiscal analysis

In addition to its legislative screening process, Governmental Affairs identifies bills that require a fiscal analysis. In the years since the State assumed responsibility for trial court funding, Governmental Affairs has, through joint efforts with the Finance Division, developed a process to ensure that both timely and accurate fiscal analyses are submitted to the Legislature. The legislative advocate works with the fiscal analyst to develop an accurate fiscal analysis. The fiscal analyst confirms the cost issues and, if necessary, works with the advocate to determine an appropriate approach and methodology, identify available resources, and clarify any technical issues affecting the analysis.

There are a variety of resources available to assist in the development of fiscal and workload analyses. The Office of Court Research assists in data collection and analysis. Governmental Affairs also works closely with other council program areas (e.g., civil, criminal, family, and juvenile law, jury service, traffic programs, and the court interpreter program). Staff also works with local courts to assist in the development of fiscal analyses. The Operational and Budget Impact Working Group of the Court Executives Advisory Committee has identified court staff with whom Governmental Affairs may consult to get input in large, medium, small, urban, and rural courts on the fiscal impact of pending legislation.

Judicial Council Legislative Policy Summary

The Judicial Council Legislative Policy Summary sets forth the council's historical policies on key legislative issues. The summary helps to ensure that council members, advisory committee members, and council staff have a common understanding of council policy on issues presented in proposed legislation. The summary reflects the council's most recent positions on legislative issues and identifies how those positions are derived from the Judicial Council's strategic plan. The Legislative Policy Summary also defines the Judicial Council's limited purview when considering pending legislation.

Formulating a Judicial Council Position on Legislation (not sponsored by Judicial Council)

Governmental Affairs

When bills are introduced in the Legislature, Governmental Affairs identifies those that may affect the judicial branch. Governmental Affairs summarizes the bill, describes key aspects of the legislation and, if within Judicial Council purview, forwards the bill to a Judicial Council advisory committee for review and recommendation.

Advisory Committee

The advisory committee (or its subcommittee) reviews the legislation and recommends a position. The advisory committee recommendation along with Governmental Affairs analysis and recommendation are presented to the PCLC for review.

Policy Coordination and Liaison Committee

PCLC reviews the bill, Governmental Affairs analysis, and recommendation(s). The committee, on behalf of the Judicial Council, may adopt one of the following positions on the bill:

- oppose
- oppose unless amended (or funded)
- neutral
- support if amended (or funded)
- support
- some combination of these
- no position

In an unusual circumstance, PCLC may refer the bill to the full Judicial Council for review and position. Once PCLC or the Judicial Council has taken a position, Governmental Affairs advocates that position throughout the legislative process.

Staff Biographies

Cory Jasperson was chosen to lead the judicial branch's legislative and executive advocacy efforts as the Director of Governmental Affairs in December 2012. Mr. Jasperson worked in the State Capitol for 12 years, holding positions in both the Assembly and Senate. Prior to joining the Judicial Council, he served as Chief of Staff to Senator Joe Simitian (D-Palo Alto). Mr. Jasperson also held the position of Chief of Staff to the Assembly Speaker pro Tempore. Before joining the Legislature in 2000, Mr. Jasperson worked at the Santa Clara County Board of Supervisors, Stanford University, and the Greenlining Institute, a statewide multi-ethnic public policy and advocacy center. He has a BA in International Relations from the University of California, Davis.

Laura Speed became Assistant Director of Governmental Affairs in October 2013. As assistant director, Laura joins Cory Jasperson, in managing the office's legislative and budget advocacy operations. Ms. Speed has served as the governmental relations and legislative officer for the County of Sacramento, as division chief in the Office of Stakeholder Relations with the California Public Employees Retirement System, as deputy chief of external affairs at the California Department of Corrections and Rehabilitation, and as a policy consultant for the Senate Republican Policy Office. In addition, she serves as an adjunct professor at the University of the Pacific, McGeorge School of Law, where she currently teaches a course in practical and persuasive legal writing. Ms. Speed earned her bachelor's degree in political science from San Jose State University and her juris doctorate from McGeorge School of Law.

Katie Asher is an Administrative Coordinator with Governmental Affairs. Prior to joining the Judicial Council, Ms. Asher worked for Electronic Data Systems (EDS). While employed with EDS, she worked as a public affairs coordinator for the Office of Governmental Affairs, as an administrative coordinator for Global Marketing Operations, and as a regional coordinator for the Americas Communications division. Ms. Asher has a bachelor's degree in communications from UC Davis.

Luz Bobino is an Executive Secretary to the Director and Assistant Director of Governmental Affairs. She began working at Governmental Affairs in 2000 as a receptionist and in 2007 was promoted to her current position. Prior to that, Ms. Bobino was an application support analyst for Sutter Health Information Services providing assistance in system analysis, design, development, documentation, and configuration as well as testing and training of the product. Ms. Bobino also worked for the Stockton Fire Department Executive Office as an office clerk, while attending San Joaquin Delta College, majoring in Psychology.

Yvette Casillas-Sarcos is an Administrative Coordinator with Governmental Affairs and has been employed by the Judicial Council since 1997. She is responsible for coordinating bill tracking and screening criminal and traffic legislation, as well as supporting the work of three advocates and the Policy Coordination and Liaison Committee (PCLC). Ms. Casillas-Sarcos relocated to Sacramento in 1995 from Southern California and attended Sacramento City College, majoring in administration of justice.

Noemi Cordova is a Secretary at Governmental Affairs. Prior to joining the Judicial Council, Ms. Cordova worked as an executive assistant at a Political Consulting Firm. She has a BA in Government with a concentration in International Relations from the California State University, Sacramento.

Alan Herzfeld is an Associate Attorney at Governmental Affairs. Mr. Herzfeld advocates on behalf of the Judicial Council on issues of family law, juvenile dependency and delinquency, and access to justice. Before joining Governmental Affairs, Mr. Herzfeld worked in private practice in San Francisco in the areas of estate planning, probate, and probate and trust litigation. Mr. Herzfeld attended the University of California at San Diego (UCSD), receiving degrees in Political Science/Public Law and History, received his J.D. from Northeastern University School of Law, and an L.L.M. in Taxation with honors from Golden Gate University. Mr. Herzfeld's background includes work with the Boston Juvenile Court, UCSD Office of Government and Community Relations, a lobbying group in Washington, D.C., the California Appellate Project, and the Alameda County Social Services Agency's Office of Agency Planning. During law school, Mr. Herzfeld interned with the Judicial Council's Center for Children, Families, and the Courts, assisting in the early stages of the Elkins Family Law Task Force. He rejoined the Judicial Council as an attorney in May 2013.

Monica LeBlond has been the Supervising Administrative Coordinator at Governmental Affairs since January 2002. Prior to joining the Judicial Council, she worked as an administrative and quality manager for an environmental consulting firm in Sacramento. Ms. LeBlond has a bachelor's degree from the State University of New York.

Andi Liebenbaum is a Senior Governmental Affairs Analyst. Prior to joining the Judicial Council in 2012, Ms. Liebenbaum served as senior legislative consultant to Assembly Member Jared Huffman, and prior to that, she worked in the nonprofit workforce development and youth advocacy sectors for 16 years throughout California and as a consultant to the US Department of State undertaking program development and capacity building in Central and South America. Ms. Liebenbaum started her legal career as an attorney in dependency cases and representing juveniles in delinquency matters. She graduated from Loyola Law School in Los Angeles.

Daniel Pone is a Senior Attorney with Governmental Affairs and has been with the Judicial Council since 2001. Prior to joining the Judicial Council, he worked for four years as a principal consultant for the California Assembly Judiciary Committee, working in areas of civil rights, constitutional law, general civil law, contracts, probate, mental health, consumer protection, and privacy. Prior to working in the Assembly, Mr. Pone worked for more than 11 years as a Senior Attorney for Protection & Advocacy, Inc., specializing in mental health law. Mr. Pone has a bachelor's degree in psychology from the University of Oklahoma and a juris doctorate from University of California at Davis.

Dia Poole joined Governmental Affairs in January 2004 as a Senior Governmental Affairs Analyst and serves as the office's communication liaison. She previously held a four-year appointment as the Public Affairs Director for the California Department of Fair Employment and Housing (DFEH). Prior to her appointment at DFEH, Ms. Poole served as a policy consultant in several legislative and committee assignments at the State Capitol. Ms. Poole graduated from California State University of San Bernardino and worked for the County of San Bernardino for 13 years before accepting a California State Assembly fellowship and relocating to Sacramento in 1994.

Sharon Reilly has been with the Judicial Council since January 2013 as the Senior Attorney for criminal law and traffic policy and legislation. Ms. Reilly previously served as chief counsel for the California Bureau of State Audits (BSA) for 13 years and served as a deputy legislative counsel in the California Office of Legislative Counsel for 9 years. As chief counsel with BSA, Ms. Reilly was the executive responsible for the Investigations Division, and also oversaw issues involving the criminal justice system, including juvenile justice realignment, campus crime statistics, the Three Strikes law, and probation requirements. While working at the Legislative Counsel Bureau she served as counsel to several legislative committees, including the Senate Appropriations Committee, the Joint Legislative Budget Committee, and the Constitutional Revision Commission. A University of California, Berkeley graduate, Ms. Reilly earned her juris doctorate degree from the University of California at Davis.

Outreach Activities

Governmental Affairs seeks to promote effective communications within California's judicial branch, and with the legislative and executive branches of government. To enhance these efforts, Governmental Affairs has established outreach programs that inform the Governor, members of the Legislature, and the legal community about the judicial branch and issues of mutual concern.

State of the Judiciary Address and the Judicial-Legislative-Executive Forum

The Chief Justice of California typically delivers an annual State of the Judiciary address early in the calendar year to a joint session of the Legislature. The address focuses on significant issues and challenges facing the judiciary in the upcoming year. (Following the address, a meet-and-greet is conducted, providing an opportunity for members of the Legislature, the executive branch, appellate and trial courts, and the Bench-Bar Coalition to discuss issues and meet informally with the Chief Justice and other judicial branch leaders.)

Legislative Visits

Governmental Affairs coordinates legislative visits for council members in January and February and a reception for legislators in January, as well as any legislative visits for the Trial Court Presiding Judges Advisory Committee or the Court Executive Officers Advisory Committee.

Liaison Program

Working with interested groups toward achieving common goals has been a long-standing component of Governmental Affairs' advocacy work. The liaison program is the office's ongoing effort to work cooperatively with stakeholders involved with and important to the judicial branch, including the Attorney General, the California Judges Association, the California State Association of Counties, the California District Attorneys Association, the California Public Defenders Association, the State Bar of California, civil plaintiffs and defense bars, legal services organizations, and others. Where our positions on issues concur, we form alliances to enhance our advocacy efforts. When our positions on issues differ, we negotiate to reach agreements whenever possible. In support of this ongoing liaison effort, the Chief Justice hosts annual meetings with the leadership of several external organizations to discuss issues of mutual concern.

Statewide Bench-Bar Coalition

The Judicial Council and the State Bar of California coordinate the statewide Bench-Bar Coalition (BBC). The BBC enhances communication and coordinates the activities of the judicial community with the State Bar, including: local, minority and specialty bars associations and legal services organizations regarding issues of common interest, particularly in the legislative arena.

Day on the Bench Program

The Day on the Bench program is an event in which a legislator spends a day (or portion of a day) in court with a judge in the legislator's district. This program, cosponsored with the California Judges Association, is designed to give legislators an understanding of the volume, complexity, variety, and difficulty of a trial court judge's daily duties and responsibilities.

California Court Association Legislation Committee (CCALC)

The California Court Association Legislation Committee is composed of professional court staff from various courts throughout the state, including court managers, supervisors, and technical staff. Throughout the legislative session, OGA staff confers with CCALC to exchange information on pending legislation and help inform Judicial Council positions.

Publications and Information Services

To facilitate communication, staff distributes the following information on current legislative developments.

Legislative Status Chart –Governmental Affairs prepares a chart that provides an easy reference to all council actions on pending legislation, including Judicial Council-Sponsored legislation.

Table of Bills Affecting Appellate Courts –Governmental Affairs prepares a chart of legislative bills that affect the appellate courts or that respond to California appellate court decisions.

Each year, Governmental Affairs publishes a comprehensive summary of enacted legislation that affects the courts or is of general interest to the legal community. The Legislative Summary includes brief descriptions of the measures, organized by subject. Current and prior-year summaries can be downloaded from the California Courts Website, Court-related Legislation page: <http://www.courts.ca.gov/4121.htm>

To view bills being tracked by Governmental Affairs visit the California Courts website at <http://www.courts.ca.gov/4121.htm>

A copy of any legislative measure may be obtained from the Bill Room in the State Capitol building by calling (916) 445-2323. Bills and legislative analyses can also be accessed on the Internet at www.leginfo.ca.gov/bilinfo.html free of charge.

Information on Judicial Council Directives

Council Directive 144

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts that attorney resources in the AOC be utilized to best leverage and draw on subject matter expertise, which may assist OGA as legislative demands may require.

SEC Recommendation 7-82

The Administrative Director should direct that attorney resources in the AOC be utilized to best leverage and draw on subject matter expertise, which may assist OGA as legislative demands may require.

It has long been the Governmental Affairs practice to utilize Legal Services attorneys and others with subject matter expertise on budgetary and policy issues. All Governmental Affairs advocates routinely and frequently utilize other council staff including Legal Services counsel and have been advised to do so in the future.

A memorandum was distributed to all Governmental Affairs staff on September 28, 2012 to advise staff of the recommendation adopted by the Judicial Council regarding the utilization of subject matter expertise outside of Governmental Affairs to assist in legislative advocacy.

IMPLEMENTATION PROGRESS AS OF MARCH 2015

Policy Coordination and Liaison Committee

The role of the Policy Coordination and Liaison Committee (PCLC) is to represent the council before the legislative and executive branches of government, build consensus with stakeholders and individuals outside the branch and coordinate an annual plan for communication and interaction with other agencies and entities.

The charge and duties of the committee, set forth in California Rules of Court, rule 10.12, including the following:

- 1) Take positions on behalf of the council on pending legislative bills, after evaluating input from the council advisory bodies and the courts, provided that the position is consistent with the council's established policies and precedents;
- 2) Make recommendations to the council on all proposals for council-sponsored legislation and on an annual legislative agenda after evaluating input from council advisory bodies and the courts;
- 3) Represent the council's position before the Legislature and other bodies or agencies and acting as liaison with other governmental entities, the bar, the judiciary, and the public regarding council-sponsored legislation, pending legislative bills, and the council's legislative positions and agendas;
- 4) Build consensus on issues of importance to the judicial branch consistent with the council's strategic plan with entities and individuals outside the branch;
- 5) Develop an annual plan for communication and interaction with other branches and levels of government, components of the judicial system, the bar, the media, and the public; and
- 6) Direct any advisory committee to provide it with analysis or recommendations on pending or proposed legislation.

Guidelines for Development of Judicial Council–sponsored Legislation

This summary describes the typical process the Judicial Council follows when developing and approving proposals for sponsored legislation. It also describes how Governmental Affairs advocates for enactment of these proposals in the Legislature.

I. Judicial Council Process

A. Sources of Legislative Proposals

Because it often takes several months to fully develop a legislative proposal, the process should begin early in the year. (See the Judicial Council–sponsored Legislation Calendar.) Judicial Council advisory committees are well situated to identify and develop proposals for statutory change. Committee members have extensive expertise in the committee’s subject area and often have ideas for improving statutory law. In addition, advisory committees may receive requests for council sponsorship of legislative proposals from outside sources.

Suggestions for how an advisory committee may wish to identify proposals for council–sponsored legislation include:

- The advisory committee chair may devote a portion of one or more meetings each year to identifying legislative proposals for the following year’s legislative session.
- The advisory committee may establish a working group or task force composed of committee members responsible for reviewing the relevant codes, or specific subjects or issues within those codes, to identify potential legislation.
- Advisory committees may receive legislative proposals from outside sources. When a person or organization submits a legislative proposal to the Judicial Council, staff forwards the proposal to the appropriate advisory committee and Governmental Affairs staff for consideration.

B. Advisory Committee Process for Developing Proposals

This section describes the steps an advisory committee takes to develop and review legislative proposals for substantive merit.

1. Assess Viability of Proposal – For each legislative proposal, the advisory committee takes the following actions:

- The advisory committee, in consultation with Governmental Affairs staff, determines a time frame for consideration of the proposal, keeping in mind

the September/October deadline for submission of legislative proposals to PCLC.

- If the advisory committee rejects a proposal submitted by an outside source, committee staff will notify the proponent of that action.
- If the advisory committee accepts or modifies a proposal from an outside source, or decides to recommend sponsorship of an internally generated proposal, the committee proceeds to the next steps.

2. Coordination with Governmental Affairs – Advisory committee staff will work with Governmental Affairs staff to coordinate work on all aspects of the proposals.

3. Review and Analyze – Advisory committees review proposals for substantive merit before transmitting them to PCLC. A typical analysis of a proposal should include:

- A description of the problem to be addressed, including its scope.
- A description of how the problem affects the judicial branch.
- A description of the proposed solution.
- A discussion of any alternative solutions, including an analysis of why the recommended solution is preferable.
- A discussion of any minority viewpoints.
- A description of any foreseeable problems with the proposed solution.
- Draft language for the proposed legislation.
- A determination whether the Judicial Council and/or the Legislature should give the proposal urgent consideration and the reasons for this.

A worksheet that advisory committees may use for laying out this analysis and other important considerations can be found on page 16.

4. Evaluate Sponsorship Criteria – Once an advisory committee determines that a particular proposal has merit, the committee should consider certain criteria in assessing whether Judicial Council sponsorship is appropriate and desirable. Limited resources, competing priorities, and political realities impose practical limitations on the council's ability to sponsor every worthwhile legislative proposal presented. The advisory committee and Governmental Affairs should jointly consider each of the following questions:

- Is the proposal within the Judicial Council's purview?

Council-sponsored measures should involve only those issues that are central to the council's mission and goals as stated in the Judicial Council's Strategic Plan.

- Should the proposal be addressed through the Judicial Council's rulemaking authority rather than by a change in statute?

The council prefers to implement changes through rules of court wherever appropriate.

- Is the Judicial Council the best sponsor?

The advisory committee and Governmental Affairs may determine that a proposal more closely serves the mission or objectives of another organization such as the State Bar. A Judicial Council-sponsored proposal should address issues fundamental to the administration of justice and broadly serve the needs of the courts statewide.

- What political factors are associated with the proposal?

Governmental Affairs is responsible for providing advice about the political factors associated with a proposal.

5. Circulate for Comment– If an advisory committee wishes to circulate a proposal for comment, the committee staff consults with Governmental Affairs. If it is determined that the proposal is appropriate for circulation, the committee submits the proposal to PCLC for consideration. If PCLC agrees with the advisory committee's recommendation, the proposal may be circulated for public comment. After the comment deadline, committee staff and Governmental Affairs jointly review the comments. Advisory committee staff then summarizes and presents the comments to the committee. Following consideration of the comments, the advisory committee may modify the proposal based on the comments, recommend adoption of the proposal as originally presented, or recommend non-adoption based on the comments received.

6. Advisory Committee Action – Upon completion of the review procedures and consideration of the evaluation criteria above, the advisory committee may adopt one of the following actions:

- Approve the proposal as submitted.
- Approve the proposal with modifications.
- Reject the proposal. The advisory committee should inform the source of the proposal of this decision.

If the advisory committee approves the proposal, the committee forwards the proposal to PCLC for consideration. Final proposals must be submitted to PCLC using the template for memos to Judicial Council internal committees by the September/October deadline in order to be considered for Judicial Council sponsorship during the following legislative year. All advisory committee proposals submitted to PCLC are referred to Governmental Affairs, which may prepare a separate analysis and recommendation for PCLC.

C. Policy Coordination and Liaison Committee Action

In October, PCLC will review the proposal(s), the advisory committee recommendation(s), and any analyses and recommendations prepared by Governmental Affairs. PCLC may recommend the proposal for Judicial Council sponsorship and forward it to the Judicial Council, send it back to the advisory committee for further consideration, or take other action as necessary. If PCLC modifies or rejects the proposal, Governmental Affairs will return the proposal to the submitting advisory committee. The advisory committee may either accept PCLC's action or request that the full council review PCLC's recommendation.

D. Judicial Council Action

The sponsored-legislation proposal is presented by PCLC to the Judicial Council in December for consideration. The Judicial Council reviews the proposal, along with PCLC's recommendation contained in a report prepared by Governmental Affairs. Once the council approves a proposal, it becomes "sponsored" legislation. If the Judicial Council does not approve the proposal for sponsorship, or takes some other action on the proposal, Governmental Affairs will communicate the action to the submitting advisory committee.

E. Delegation of authority to PCLC to sponsor legislative proposals on behalf of the council

The Judicial Council has delegated to PCLC the authority to take positions to sponsor legislative proposals on behalf of the council when time is of the essence. This situation most often will arise in the context of the budget and related “trailer bill language.” Acting under this delegation, PCLC notifies the chairs of the Executive and Planning Committee and the Rules and Projects Committee of any PCLC meetings at which such actions will be considered so that they may participate if available. PCLC is also required to notify all other Judicial Council members, if feasible, of the intended action. After acting under this delegation, PCLC is required to notify the Judicial Council of all actions taken.

II. Advocacy Process

A. Legislative Author

Governmental Affairs staff will seek a legislator to introduce the council–sponsored proposal. An appropriate author for the bill is one who:

- Has substantial experience with the subject of the bill; often the author is the chair or a member of the policy committee with subject-matter jurisdiction over the bill.
- Understands Judicial Council needs and objectives.
- Has experience with the legislative process.
- Is an effective negotiator with members of both parties.

B. Governmental Affairs Responsibilities

Governmental Affairs acts as the primary advocate for Judicial Council–sponsored legislation. Responsibilities include, among other things:

- Preparing background material for the bill, including analyses for the author. The analyses include a description of the problem the bill seeks to address, an explanation of how the bill corrects that problem, the likely supporters and opponents of the bill, questions the bill raises that may need further research, and any other information that explains the issue.
- Communicating information about the bill to the appropriate legislative committee with subject-matter jurisdiction. This means working extensively with committee staff as well as the legislators who are members of those committees. In moving through the legislative process, a bill will be heard by at least one policy committee (such as the Judiciary Committee), and, if appropriate, a fiscal committee, before being debated and voted upon by the full membership on the floor of each house.

- Coordinating with supporters to build a broad coalition in support of the bill.
- Coordinating the content and timing of correspondence between all supporters and the Legislature.
- Negotiating with the proposal's opponents to determine whether amendments can eliminate opposition and still achieve the council's objectives.
- Meeting with the Governor and/or his or her staff to advocate that the bill be signed into law.

Formulating a Position on Pending Legislation (not sponsored by Judicial Council)

The Judicial Council, acting through the Policy Coordination and Liaison Committee (PCLC), strives to improve the administration of justice by representing the interests of the judicial branch to the Legislature, the executive branch, other entities involved in the legislative process or interested in the judiciary, and the general public.

The Judicial Council supports the integrity and independence of the judicial branch and seeks to ensure that judicial procedures enhance efficiency and access to the courts. The council generally does not take a position on substantive law/policy. However, the council may take a position on legislation that involve issues central to the council's mission and goals as stated in the Judicial Council's Strategic Plan. The council may also take a position on an apparent issue of substantive law if issues presented directly affect court administration or negatively affect existing judicial services by imposing unrealistic burdens on the judicial branch.

The following are procedures Governmental Affairs uses in developing recommendations for and carrying out PCLC and council directives regarding legislation.

Positions on Legislation

Governmental Affairs reviews all introduced and amended legislation to determine whether a bill is of interest to the judicial branch. For each bill of interest, staff determines whether the council is likely to take, or may want to take a position on the bill. One or more council advisory committees (or subcommittees) within the appropriate subject area review each bill on which the council may want to take a position. The advisory committees either recommend a position or recommend that the council take no position.

Governmental Affairs presents bills on which an advisory committee recommends a position to PCLC for determination of a council position. Additionally, staff may also choose to bring a bill before PCLC on which an advisory committee has recommended no position. Staff presents each bill to PCLC with an analysis that includes a summary of the bill, a recommended position from one or more advisory committees and, if different, the Governmental Affairs recommendation, the rationale for the recommendation(s), positions the council has taken on related bills, fiscal and workload impacts, and other relevant information.

The council has established several positions PCLC may take on a bill. These positions do not indicate the relative strength of the council's support or opposition, but the aims of Governmental Affairs advocacy efforts. The positions are:

- 1) Oppose: An oppose position may be taken on a bill that conflicts with established council policies, and for which obvious changes would not resolve the conflict.

- 2) Oppose unless amended (or unless funded): This position may be taken on a bill that the council will oppose unless identified amendments are taken to address those provisions that conflict with council policy, or unless funding issues are resolved.
- 3) Neutral: A neutral position taken on a bill the substance of which does not implicate council policy, but on which technical corrections would improve the measure.
- 4) Support in concept: This position may be taken on a bill that, in concept, furthers council policy, but that is not yet drafted in sufficient detail for the council to support.
- 5) Support if amended (or if funded): This position may be taken on a bill that, with specified amendments or funding, would further the council's policies. Absent the amendments or necessary funding the council position is neutral.
- 6) Support: Position taken on a bill that furthers council policy.
- 7) No position: PCLC may choose to take no position on a bill that addresses substantive issues on which the council takes no position, though the measure may affect the courts.

PCLC may also combine several of the above positions. PCLC may also provide instruction to Governmental Affairs to do further research or work with the author prior to taking a position on a bill.

PCLC Meeting Schedule and Agenda

PCLC meets regularly during the legislative session, usually by conference call. Beginning in late February or early March, the committee sets a schedule of meetings at least every three weeks. If a meeting is not needed, Governmental Affairs will notify PCLC members by e-mail of the cancellation. Late in the legislative session, and during budget negotiations, it is sometimes necessary to schedule several meetings on short notice to discuss or resolve late-breaking issues. All PCLC meetings must be in compliance with California Rule of Court, Rule 10.75 governing meetings of advisory bodies.

Governmental Affairs prepares a written analysis of each bill for PCLC. Governmental Affairs may place bills that do not appear to require discussion or deliberation on PCLC's consent calendar. The consent calendar saves the committee time by eliminating the need to review bills that are consistent with clearly established council policies and positions. However, any committee member may remove an item from the consent calendar to discuss the bill's merits or the recommended action.

Bills that are on the discussion agenda include those that require discussion, and those bills on which the staff recommendation differs from the recommendation of an advisory committee or when the recommendations from two or more advisory committees differ. In the latter instances, staff will request that a representative of the advisory committee(s) participate in the PCLC meeting. The representatives will present the advisory committee's views, and take questions from PCLC members. PCLC may then excuse the guest and deliberate further and prior to taking action.

Legislative Advocacy

Once PCLC adopts a position on a bill, it is the position of the Judicial Council. That position and associated policies become the cornerstone of Governmental Affairs advocacy efforts. The adopted position is presented in subsequent negotiating sessions, discussions with interested parties, and meetings with legislators. A letter setting forth the position and policies is sent to the bill's author, legislative committee members, and other interested parties.

Generally, PCLC's initial guidance and position is sufficient to direct Governmental Affairs advocacy throughout the legislative process. Occasionally, as a bill progresses or is amended, staff will request further direction from PCLC because of a particular bill's significance, complexity, the sensitivity of an issue, or the direction taken by the amendments. PCLC may be asked to reconsider the matter at a subsequent meeting.

Coordination with other groups

The Judicial Council advances its position on legislation most successfully when it allies itself with other entities such as county government representatives, law enforcement, attorneys, and consumer advocates. Governmental Affairs will work to develop coalitions on issues of common interest. These coalitions often last for years, effectively supporting and opposing a variety of bills. For example, the council's efforts regarding trial court facilities legislation involved close coordination with the California State Association of Counties. Other groups with which the council has long-standing working coalitions include the Consumer Attorneys of California, the Bench-Bar Coalition, California Defense Counsel, the California Judges Association (CJA), the State Bar of California, and others. These and other working relationships have evolved during many years of cooperative effort.

On most court-related issues, Governmental Affairs maintains close contact with representatives of CJA and the State Bar. Additionally, Governmental Affairs confers regularly with the California Court Association Legislation Committee (CCALC) to discuss or request analytical information about pending legislation with members of the court community. The CCALC members are court employees who provide vital input related to the operational impact of proposed legislation.

Legislative fiscal analysis

In addition to its legislative screening process, Governmental Affairs identifies bills that require a fiscal analysis. In the years since the State assumed responsibility for trial court funding, Governmental Affairs has, through joint efforts with the Finance Division, developed a process to ensure that both timely and accurate fiscal analyses are submitted to the Legislature. The legislative advocate works with the fiscal analyst to develop an accurate fiscal analysis. The fiscal analyst confirms the cost issues and, if necessary, works with the advocate to determine an appropriate approach and methodology, identify available resources, and clarify any technical issues affecting the analysis.

There are a variety of resources available to assist in the development of fiscal and workload analyses. The Office of Court Research assists in data collection and analysis. Governmental Affairs also works closely with other council program areas (e.g., civil, criminal, family, and juvenile law, jury service, traffic programs, and the court interpreter program). Staff also works with local courts to assist in the development of fiscal analyses. The Operational and Budget Impact Working Group of the Court Executives Advisory Committee has identified court staff with whom Governmental Affairs may consult to get input in large, medium, small, urban, and rural courts on the fiscal impact of pending legislation.

Judicial Council Legislative Policy Summary

The Judicial Council Legislative Policy Summary sets forth the council's historical policies on key legislative issues. The summary helps to ensure that council members, advisory committee members, and council staff have a common understanding of council policy on issues presented in proposed legislation. The summary reflects the council's most recent positions on legislative issues and identifies how those positions are derived from the Judicial Council's strategic plan. The Legislative Policy Summary also defines the Judicial Council's limited purview when considering pending legislation.

Formulating a Judicial Council Position on Legislation (not sponsored by Judicial Council)

Governmental Affairs

When bills are introduced in the Legislature, Governmental Affairs identifies those that may affect the judicial branch. Governmental Affairs summarizes the bill, describes key aspects of the legislation and, if within Judicial Council purview, forwards the bill to a Judicial Council advisory committee for review and recommendation.

Advisory Committee

The advisory committee (or its subcommittee) reviews the legislation and recommends a position. The advisory committee recommendation along with Governmental Affairs analysis and recommendation are presented to the PCLC for review.

Policy Coordination and Liaison Committee

PCLC reviews the bill, Governmental Affairs analysis, and recommendation(s). The committee, on behalf of the Judicial Council, may adopt one of the following positions on the bill:

- oppose
- oppose unless amended (or funded)
- neutral
- support if amended (or funded)
- support
- some combination of these
- no position

In an unusual circumstance, PCLC may refer the bill to the full Judicial Council for review and position. Once PCLC or the Judicial Council has taken a position, Governmental Affairs advocates that position throughout the legislative process.

Staff Biographies

Cory Jasperson was chosen to lead the judicial branch's legislative and executive advocacy efforts as the Director of Governmental Affairs in December 2012. Mr. Jasperson worked in the State Capitol for 12 years, holding positions in both the Assembly and Senate. Prior to joining the Judicial Council, he served as Chief of Staff to Senator Joe Simitian (D-Palo Alto). Mr. Jasperson also held the position of Chief of Staff to the Assembly Speaker pro Tempore. Before joining the Legislature in 2000, Mr. Jasperson worked at the Santa Clara County Board of Supervisors, Stanford University, and the Greenlining Institute, a statewide multi-ethnic public policy and advocacy center. He has a BA in International Relations from the University of California, Davis.

Laura Speed became Assistant Director of Governmental Affairs in October 2013. As assistant director, Laura joins Cory Jasperson, in managing the office's legislative and budget advocacy operations. Ms. Speed has served as the governmental relations and legislative officer for the County of Sacramento, as division chief in the Office of Stakeholder Relations with the California Public Employees Retirement System, as deputy chief of external affairs at the California Department of Corrections and Rehabilitation, and as a policy consultant for the Senate Republican Policy Office. In addition, she serves as an adjunct professor at the University of the Pacific, McGeorge School of Law, where she currently teaches a course in practical and persuasive legal writing. Ms. Speed earned her bachelor's degree in political science from San Jose State University and her juris doctorate from McGeorge School of Law.

Katie Asher is an Administrative Coordinator with Governmental Affairs. Prior to joining the Judicial Council, Ms. Asher worked for Electronic Data Systems (EDS). While employed with EDS, she worked as a public affairs coordinator for the Office of Governmental Affairs, as an administrative coordinator for Global Marketing Operations, and as a regional coordinator for the Americas Communications division. Ms. Asher has a bachelor's degree in communications from UC Davis.

Luz Bobino is an Executive Secretary to the Director and Assistant Director of Governmental Affairs. She began working at Governmental Affairs in 2000 as a receptionist and in 2007 was promoted to her current position. Prior to that, Ms. Bobino was an application support analyst for Sutter Health Information Services providing assistance in system analysis, design, development, documentation, and configuration as well as testing and training of the product. Ms. Bobino also worked for the Stockton Fire Department Executive Office as an office clerk, while attending San Joaquin Delta College, majoring in Psychology.

Yvette Casillas-Sarcos is an Administrative Coordinator with Governmental Affairs and has been employed by the Judicial Council since 1997. She is responsible for coordinating bill tracking and screening criminal and traffic legislation, as well as supporting the work of three advocates and the Policy Coordination and Liaison Committee (PCLC). Ms. Casillas-Sarcos relocated to Sacramento in 1995 from Southern California and attended Sacramento City College, majoring in administration of justice.

Noemi Cordova is a Secretary at Governmental Affairs. Prior to joining the Judicial Council, Ms. Cordova worked as an executive assistant at a Political Consulting Firm. She has a BA in Government with a concentration in International Relations from the California State University, Sacramento.

Alan Herzfeld is an Associate Attorney at Governmental Affairs. Mr. Herzfeld advocates on behalf of the Judicial Council on issues of family law, juvenile dependency and delinquency, and access to justice. Before joining Governmental Affairs, Mr. Herzfeld worked in private practice in San Francisco in the areas of estate planning, probate, and probate and trust litigation. Mr. Herzfeld attended the University of California at San Diego (UCSD), receiving degrees in Political Science/Public Law and History, received his J.D. from Northeastern University School of Law, and an L.L.M. in Taxation with honors from Golden Gate University. Mr. Herzfeld's background includes work with the Boston Juvenile Court, UCSD Office of Government and Community Relations, a lobbying group in Washington, D.C., the California Appellate Project, and the Alameda County Social Services Agency's Office of Agency Planning. During law school, Mr. Herzfeld interned with the Judicial Council's Center for Children, Families, and the Courts, assisting in the early stages of the Elkins Family Law Task Force. He rejoined the Judicial Council as an attorney in May 2013.

Monica LeBlond has been the Supervising Administrative Coordinator at Governmental Affairs since January 2002. Prior to joining the Judicial Council, she worked as an administrative and quality manager for an environmental consulting firm in Sacramento. Ms. LeBlond has a bachelor's degree from the State University of New York.

Andi Liebenbaum is a Senior Governmental Affairs Analyst. Prior to joining the Judicial Council in 2012, Ms. Liebenbaum served as senior legislative consultant to Assembly Member Jared Huffman, and prior to that, she worked in the nonprofit workforce development and youth advocacy sectors for 16 years throughout California and as a consultant to the US Department of State undertaking program development and capacity building in Central and South America. Ms. Liebenbaum started her legal career as an attorney in dependency cases and representing juveniles in delinquency matters. She graduated from Loyola Law School in Los Angeles.

Daniel Pone is a Senior Attorney with Governmental Affairs and has been with the Judicial Council since 2001. Prior to joining the Judicial Council, he worked for four years as a principal consultant for the California Assembly Judiciary Committee, working in areas of civil rights, constitutional law, general civil law, contracts, probate, mental health, consumer protection, and privacy. Prior to working in the Assembly, Mr. Pone worked for more than 11 years as a Senior Attorney for Protection & Advocacy, Inc., specializing in mental health law. Mr. Pone has a bachelor's degree in psychology from the University of Oklahoma and a juris doctorate from University of California at Davis.

Dia Poole joined Governmental Affairs in January 2004 as a Senior Governmental Affairs Analyst and serves as the office's communication liaison. She previously held a four-year appointment as the Public Affairs Director for the California Department of Fair Employment and Housing (DFEH). Prior to her appointment at DFEH, Ms. Poole served as a policy consultant in several legislative and committee assignments at the State Capitol. Ms. Poole graduated from California State University of San Bernardino and worked for the County of San Bernardino for 13 years before accepting a California State Assembly fellowship and relocating to Sacramento in 1994.

Sharon Reilly has been with the Judicial Council since January 2013 as the Senior Attorney for criminal law and traffic policy and legislation. Ms. Reilly previously served as chief counsel for the California Bureau of State Audits (BSA) for 13 years and served as a deputy legislative counsel in the California Office of Legislative Counsel for 9 years. As chief counsel with BSA, Ms. Reilly was the executive responsible for the Investigations Division, and also oversaw issues involving the criminal justice system, including juvenile justice realignment, campus crime statistics, the Three Strikes law, and probation requirements. While working at the Legislative Counsel Bureau she served as counsel to several legislative committees, including the Senate Appropriations Committee, the Joint Legislative Budget Committee, and the Constitutional Revision Commission. A University of California, Berkeley graduate, Ms. Reilly earned her juris doctorate degree from the University of California at Davis.

Outreach Activities

Governmental Affairs seeks to promote effective communications within California's judicial branch, and with the legislative and executive branches of government. To enhance these efforts, Governmental Affairs has established outreach programs that inform the Governor, members of the Legislature, and the legal community about the judicial branch and issues of mutual concern.

State of the Judiciary Address and the Judicial-Legislative-Executive Forum

The Chief Justice of California typically delivers an annual State of the Judiciary address early in the calendar year to a joint session of the Legislature. The address focuses on significant issues and challenges facing the judiciary in the upcoming year. (Following the address, a meet-and-greet is conducted, providing an opportunity for members of the Legislature, the executive branch, appellate and trial courts, and the Bench-Bar Coalition to discuss issues and meet informally with the Chief Justice and other judicial branch leaders.)

Legislative Visits

Governmental Affairs coordinates legislative visits for council members in January and February and a reception for legislators in January, as well as any legislative visits for the Trial Court Presiding Judges Advisory Committee or the Court Executive Officers Advisory Committee.

Liaison Program

Working with interested groups toward achieving common goals has been a long-standing component of Governmental Affairs' advocacy work. The liaison program is the office's ongoing effort to work cooperatively with stakeholders involved with and important to the judicial branch, including the Attorney General, the California Judges Association, the California State Association of Counties, the California District Attorneys Association, the California Public Defenders Association, the State Bar of California, civil plaintiffs and defense bars, legal services organizations, and others. Where our positions on issues concur, we form alliances to enhance our advocacy efforts. When our positions on issues differ, we negotiate to reach agreements whenever possible. In support of this ongoing liaison effort, the Chief Justice hosts annual meetings with the leadership of several external organizations to discuss issues of mutual concern.

Statewide Bench-Bar Coalition

The Judicial Council and the State Bar of California coordinate the statewide Bench-Bar Coalition (BBC). The BBC enhances communication and coordinates the activities of the judicial community with the State Bar, including: local, minority and specialty bars associations and legal services organizations regarding issues of common interest, particularly in the legislative arena.

Day on the Bench Program

The Day on the Bench program is an event in which a legislator spends a day (or portion of a day) in court with a judge in the legislator's district. This program, cosponsored with the California Judges Association, is designed to give legislators an understanding of the volume, complexity, variety, and difficulty of a trial court judge's daily duties and responsibilities.

California Court Association Legislation Committee (CCALC)

The California Court Association Legislation Committee is composed of professional court staff from various courts throughout the state, including court managers, supervisors, and technical staff. Throughout the legislative session, OGA staff confers with CCALC to exchange information on pending legislation and help inform Judicial Council positions.

Publications and Information Services

To facilitate communication, staff distributes the following information on current legislative developments.

Legislative Status Chart –Governmental Affairs prepares a chart that provides an easy reference to all council actions on pending legislation, including Judicial Council-Sponsored legislation.

Table of Bills Affecting Appellate Courts –Governmental Affairs prepares a chart of legislative bills that affect the appellate courts or that respond to California appellate court decisions.

Each year, Governmental Affairs publishes a comprehensive summary of enacted legislation that affects the courts or is of general interest to the legal community. The Legislative Summary includes brief descriptions of the measures, organized by subject. Current and prior-year summaries can be downloaded from the California Courts Website, Court-related Legislation page: <http://www.courts.ca.gov/4121.htm>

To view bills being tracked by Governmental Affairs visit the California Courts website at <http://www.courts.ca.gov/4121.htm>

A copy of any legislative measure may be obtained from the Bill Room in the State Capitol building by calling (916) 445-2323. Bills and legislative analyses can also be accessed on the Internet at www.leginfo.ca.gov/bilinfo.html free of charge.

Information on Judicial Council Directives

Council Directive 145

E&P recommends that the Judicial Council direct the Administrative Director of the Courts to propose to the council a process and policies for pursuing grants. The process should mandate a detailed impact analysis for every grant proposal, including consideration of all anticipated impacts on the workload and resources of the courts and the impacts to the AOC as a whole. Until a process of review and oversight is finalized, the Administrative Director of the Courts must approve the AOC's engagement in all grant proposals and agreements.

SEC Recommendation 6-9

The Executive Leadership Team must develop and make public a description of the AOC's process for determining which grants to pursue. The process should mandate a detailed impact analysis for every grant proposal, including consideration of all anticipated impacts on the workload and resources of the courts and the impacts to the AOC as a whole. Only after such analysis should the Executive Leadership Team make a determination whether the AOC should pursue grant funding.

SEC Recommendation 7-5

The Judicial Council should exercise oversight to assure that grant-funded programs are undertaken only when consistent with predetermined, branch-wide policy and plans. The fiscal and operational impacts of grant-funded programs on the courts should be considered as part of the fiscal planning process.

SEC Recommendation 7-12

The Promising and Effective Programs Unit functions are largely discretionary and should be considered for reduction or elimination, resulting in position savings. Consideration should be given to the following.

(f) The Fund Development Group concerns itself with training to obtain grants, seeking grants, and grant reporting. As is the case with other divisions in the AOC, grants should be sought in accordance with well-articulated AOC-wide priorities, as established by the Judicial Council. The Administrative Director and the Judicial Council should develop written policies and guidelines that control the pursuit and acceptance of grants and other funding, including utilizing a cost-benefit analysis.

| xCOMPLETED: In July of 2013, the Administrative Director of the Courts approved a staff recommendation regarding a new process and policy requiring the use of an AOC Competitive Grant Application Worksheet for pursuing competitive grants. This form was subsequently integrated into a cost-benefit analysis form developed by Finance. |

In July of 2013, the Administrative Director of the Courts approved a staff recommendation regarding a new process and policy requiring the use of an AOC Competitive Grant Application Worksheet for pursuing competitive grants. With respect to the impact analysis, Finance also led a broader review and policy discussion relating to the development of a cost-benefit analysis proposal for the entire council, which affects Directives 7-13, 21, 40, 91, and 145. That new cost-benefit analysis was approved. Because the two forms were in large part seeking the same information, and to eliminate confusion as to which form needed to be completed, Finance and COS worked together to integrate the two forms. COS staff has worked with directors and offices that have the most history of grant seeking, including CFCC and CJS, to ensure they understand the importance of, and how to use the form. COS staff will continue to reach out to directors and offices to ensure complete understanding of the form and process requirements.

When considering applying for a competitive grant, the council will continue to utilize Request for Approval of Proposed Project form to fully analyze costs and benefits to ensure that impacts to local courts and the council are identified and that appropriate approvals are provided.

REQUEST FOR APPROVAL OF PROJECT PROPOSAL REQUEST FOR APPROVAL FOR SEEKING GRANT FUNDING

Rev. 11/25/14

This Project Proposal worksheet is intended to provide key information necessary for leadership to approve, in concept, a proposal to implement a new project or grant. This worksheet can be used across divisions as a cover for any existing process or work order proposal that may already be in place for a particular unit or office. Generally, the worksheet should be used when proposing any new project that will:

- utilize Judicial Council staff time across divisions,
- include local court participation and/or
- require the Judicial Council to enter into a new contract.
