Among other things, the bill replaces the term "incompetent person" with the more modern term "person with a disability," and defines that term by reference to federal law applicable to disabled persons eligible for public benefits. The bill also clarifies the disposition alternatives available to the court for the proceeds of a judgment or settlement for a minor disabled adult where no guardian or conservator has been appointed, and permits the court to establish a special needs trust for a disabled minor that will continue under court supervision after the minor reaches age 18. The bill provides that a court may not make an order with respect to an adult who is disabled but who has the capacity to consent to the order, and who has no conservator of the estate with authority to make that decision on behalf of the person, without the express consent of the disabled adult. The bills prescribe the qualifications for, the term of office of, and the manner in which a judge is appointed to the California Tax Court. The bills prescribe the qualifications for, the term of office of, and the manner in which a judge is appointed to the California Tax Court. The legislation also sets forth the procedures to be followed by the California Tax Court with respect to these appeals and provides that a taxpayer's option to file an appeal with the California Tax Court would be in lieu of filing an appeal in the California Superior Court.
